To the Church at Rome Paul wrote: "As much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you also that are in Rome. For I am not ashamed of the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek." It is a significant Greek word here translated "power," it is the word "dynamis," from which our word "dynamite" is derived. All the mighty forces of God's power and wisdom and love are in the gospel of His dear Son for the regeneration of man and his present and eternal salvation. No other power in all the world is like unto the gospel and that pulpit which is faithful in preaching the ancient gospel, which, as the writer of the Hebrew Letter says, "Having at the first been spoken through the Lord, was confirmed unto us by them that heard; God also bearing witness with them both by signs and wonders and by manifold powers and by gifts of the Holy Spirit, according to his own will," shall as the years roll on be more and more the power, the force, the dynamics by which the thoughts and actions of men will be brought into subjection to the will of the Son of Man. Of course, we preachers are chiefly concerned that this heaven-sent power of the gospel of the Son of God shall be manifest in the transformation of the individual heart and life. I fear we sometimes lose sight of the value of the individual in our intense desire to reach the masses. It was to one at Jacob's well; it was to two on the walk to Emmaus, that our Lord spake the things concerning righteousness and the kingdom, as well as to the multitudes which, on shore of lake and slope of mountain, thronged about him; and we preachers of the present day, in our eagerness to preach to the crowds—a most praiseworthy ambition, indeed—must not forget that the masses are reached first through the individual and there should be much house to house and wayside preaching as well as to the multitudes on the Lord's day. Note, (a) The power of the gospel on the heart and life of man. And this is so wonderful that the Scriptures speak of one who obeys the gospel as being a "new creation," as having been changed "from death to life." Recognizing this wonderful transforming power of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus is what led the apostle to exclaim, "Woe is unto me if I preach not the gospel." With Paul and Peter and James and John the preaching of the cross was of most intense interest and far-reaching consequences; it lay upon their hearts as a burden; it was a consuming fire; men and women were dying for the want of the Bread of Life; they were charged with a most solemn responsibility. Day and night, in season and out of season, they shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God. The fishing nets were laid aside; the making of tents ceased; houses and lands, homes and kindred—all were forsaken that the glorious gospel of the Son of God might be made known. God was with them mightily, confirming their word with signs and many wonderful deeds done by the hands of the apostles. So, in like manner, must the preaching of the gospel be a passion with men in these days. If men are simply professional "clergymen;" if they have entered the ministry with an idea that it is any easy and polite and comfortable way of making a living; if they cease to be students of the Word and of men; if they lack manliness; if they have no burning desire to make full proof of their ministry, then, in so far as they are concerned their preaching will be in vain. I am glad to believe that few men of such character are to be found in the ministry to-day, and these few are rapidly being relegated to the rear of the great battle for righteousness, and the real proclaimers of the gospel are seeing the fruits of their labors in the regeneration of men, in the uplifting and refining influences of the divine message of life, and in the world-wide progress of that kingdom which is triumphing in all lands. Then observe—(b) The power of the gospel among the nations of the earth. It is acknowledged on all hands that the present high state of development, of civilization of the leading nations of the world is directly due to the preaching of the gospel of Christ. Students of history well know that the march of the missionary of the Cross northward and westward from the land of Christianity's birth is the cause of the supremacy of the European and American nations. The miracle of the ages is the marvelous change which has been wrought among the kindreds, tribes and tongues of earth by the teaching of the humble Nazarene and a handful of simple and unlettered followers, without money, without social influence, without human aid. No man can account for Christianity's sway on any other ground than that it is of superhuman origin. Jesus himself is the unexplained personality of the ages, assuming that he was only man. He spake as one having authority, Kings and Emperors and Presidents, the high and mighty, as well as the poor and humble; the erudite, as well as the unlearned; kingdoms, empires, nations—all bow before his name—the name which is above every name. But the power of the gospel of Christ upon the nations is only but begun. Millions there are who have never heard the name of Jesus; who are yet sitting in the midst of a great darkness, with here and there one, who rising above his fellows, having some faint glimmerings of something better and higher, calls upon us to come over and help him. O, that the Church of Christ would arouse itself to this, its greatest work, the carrying of the gospel to the ends of the earth! It must be done. God hath spoken. The whole earth must be filled with his glory as the waters cover the bosom of the mighty deep. All nations must be evangelized.

"Jesus must reign where'er the sun
Does his successive journeys run;
His kingdom stretch from shore to shore,
Till moons shall wax and wane no more."

In this universal conquest of the world for Christ, what part shall you and I have, my brethren? A large share, if only we will; if only we will be about the Master's business. The King's business requires haste. We have no time to sit with idle hands. The day is far spent; the night is at hand. May God help us to see our duty, our privileges, our blessings, and may He enable us to go forward in preaching the simple, ancient and all-powerful gospel of His dear Son, so that the "crowning day" may be hastened when all the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our God and of His Christ, and all the earth shout "Alleluiah, alleluiah, the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

The Quiet Hour

"Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."—Matt. 11:28-30.

This gracious invitation of our Lord is not given to non-church members alone, but to all who are carrying burdens, whether of sorrow, anxiety, labor or of conscious guilt, which disturb the peace and serenity of their souls. In no previous age of the world has there been more restlessness, more feverish anxiety, more care-laden hearts than in our own time. Jesus spoke not to his age alone, but to all the ages that were to follow. He offers rest to the weary heart of humanity. If you have a burden which you feel is heavier than you can carry, Jesus invites you.

It may be asked, How can Jesus Christ give rest to all the weary souls of earth—He who lived nearly nineteen centuries ago in the land of Palestine? Jesus, it must be remembered, is the contemporary of all ages. He appeared once in human history and lived the life of man, that He might the better live in humanity as a spiritual Master and Guide through all subsequent ages. He not only was but is our Friend and Helper. His parting word to his disciples was, "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." He left us in his visible bodily form that He might be with us more intimately in His spiritual power and presence.

Jesus revealed to us such a relation between God and man as to give us rest. The connection between the words quoted above, and the verse which precedes, is very close. "No man," said he, "knoweth the Father but the Son and he to whom the Son shall reveal him." Then he adds: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." Is it not those to whom Jesus reveals God as Father who find rest to their souls? Is there any other truth in all the universe so full of comfort, as that the Supreme Being, who made and upholds all things, is our Father? To heathens and idolatrous people, God is a terror, a monster who is to be propitiated or appeased by sacrifices. But Jesus reveals Him as a Father. Not all professed Christians have received this revelation of Jesus. They mourn their dead, they fret at their lot in life, they murmur at God's providences, without any seeming thought of his Father-heart.

A great many people are afraid of that yoke. They imagine it means something very galling. Professor Drummond has said some very sensible things about this yoke which we would do well to ponder. "Did you ever stop," said he, "to ask what a yoke is really for? Is it to be a burden to the animal which wears it? It is just the opposite. It is to make the burden light. Attached to the oxen in any other way than by a yoke, the plow would be intolerable. Worked by means of the yoke, it is light. A yoke is not an instrument of torture; it is an instrument of mercy. It is not a malicious contrivance for making work hard; it is a gentle device to make hard labor light. It is not meant to give pain, but to save pain. And yet men speak of the yoke of Christ as if it were a slavery . . . It is simply His secret for the alleviation of human life, His prescription for the best and happiest method of living."

Our Father, who art in heaven, help us to believe more truly in Thy Fatherhood. May we trust Thee more implicitly, and in this trusting, obedient faith may we cast away our burdens and find rest unto our souls. In His name. Amen!

Family Circle

Don't Make Me Latch the Door.

By Mrs. Kate W. Searcy.

My little one had been naughty,
She had screamed and stamped the floor;
So I said, "Go out from my presence,
Go outside and close the door.
You have said angry words that hurt me,
Your scowls make my heart so sore.
When you're this bad you must not stay near me—
Go out now and close the door."
Her anger and violence vanished.
The threshold was meekly crossed o'er;
Then she turned and with quivering lip murmured,
"Please don't make me latch the door!"

"I was bad. I'll be good. I'm so sorry;
I'll try not to be bad any more.
I'll mind you and go out, but please, oh,
Please don't make me latch the door!
I want to come back to you already,
I'm so sorry I made your heart sore.
Let the door stay so 'twill open real easy—
I'll never be bad any more.
I'm out now, on the wrong side, but please,
oh,
Please don't make me latch the door!"

Then I thought how my Heavenly Father
In His mercy so often forbore
When I pleaded with Him not to shut me
Out from His love evermore.
And my heart toward my dear one relented;
And I told her this, o'er and o'er,
How dearly I loved her and would never Make her leave me and latch the door.
And she said, "I love you, I love you!
I'll never be bad any more.
I'll truly be good and stay near you,
On the inside, the right side of the door!"

The Princess.

By J. F. Cowan.

"I don't care! I wish I could have my own way once in a while. I wish I were a queen or a lordess or something that didn't have to be careful or mind!" And this little daughter of Eve sighed over being only a little girl.

"I'll tell you," suggested auntie to the tear-stained and much-ruffled little miss, "the nearest thing that I can think of would be a princess. How would you like to be a princess?"

"Here, and outside of a book?" and the tearful eyes glanced up half-curiously and half-indignantly.

"Yes."

"Where there isn't any queen?"

"But there is a queen, the best kind. And I'm sure she'll let you be her little princess, for a while at least; if you'll do just as I tell you, I'll guarantee the princess part will come all right."

And little Sue dried her tears and put her little hands into mine as a sign that she was willing. She had had a hard tug that morning between her desire to enjoy a much coveted pleasure and her loyalty to mamma's commands, and she needed to learn that there was a better way to be happy than to have one's own way.

As we passed out into the sitting-room she brightened up and asked: "Are we going to see the queen about it right away, auntie?"

"No, dear; I have a book that tells about what is needed to make one fit to be a princess of this queen, and from what I know of her, the best way is just to begin doing what is necessary, and when she sees that, the rest will be all right."

"How fairy-like! Is she a queen that has had to come to this country from her own, like some of the princesses papa reads about in the papers?" asked Sue, still puzzling her head over the thought of a queen in a republican country.

"Better than that, dear," I said.

"Then she's on a visit here; but do let's hurry and get me ready!"

"Very well," I said, "you must show her that you can help rule her kingdom. Of course the business of a queen is to make all her people happy. Now you must find some one who needs to be made happy and get to work as soon as you can."

She looked the least bit puzzled at this, but she was willing to try; only I saw she didn't know where to begin.

"Hush!" I said, "isn't that the baby crying? He must be very hungry to cry in that way; suppose—"

"Oh he's always crying. I don't see—but you're looking at me so funny, Aunt May; do you mean that I might be trying my hand on him until I find a real subject to make happy? I guess I will then, but I'm afraid it won't seem so much like being a princess."

Then Sue got down the sliced animals and said, "Come, brother, let's make up a menagerie. You be the one that owns it and tells the animals to come out, and I'll be the one to march them out."

Baby Rob took to this at once and seated himself on a stool with a good deal of importance and gravity, ready to issue his commands.

"Ze bear," he commanded in a showman tone; and in a minute Sue had put together the pieces forming that animal and looked up to hear his further behests.

"Ze hossy and ze dod," said the grave little show-manager; and these faithful friends of man took their places in the fast-growing procession.

"Mr. Showman, couldn't you please have your assistant lead out the monkeys?" requested Aunt May, to add new zest to the performance, seeing the chief showman's interest began to lag.

The showman smiled appreciatively and ordered: "Ze monties and apes and baboons."

The keeper of the animals had the right ones ready, and if she ever failed to put the proper parts into the animals, the sharp-eyed superintendent quickly corrected: "Not ze ox's head on ze wepard."

And the mischievous little assistant, who sometimes made mistakes purposely to hear his corrections, over which she laughed to herself, was enjoying it immensely when auntie rose.

"Oh, auntie," she said, suddenly remembering something, "do we have to go now to—let's see now, what was it I was going to do?"

"No," said auntie, smiling, "I don't think you need to go anywhere to find someone to make happy or to be happy yourself. The queen is coming now and I want to introduce you to her." Then the door opened and in came mamma alone.

Sue smoothed down her apron and looked to see who would come after her, but she forgot about expecting any one else when mamma took her cheeks between her palms and, looking into her two brown eyes with a grateful smile, said: "You have been such a good, helpful daughter to me this morning that I want to give you a kiss on each cheek."

"Which," said auntie "is the royal sign that you are chosen to be the Princess Do-unto-others and your crown is ready for you."

"But," said Sue in astonishment, "where's the queen? She hasn't come yet, and how can you—"

"Oh, yes, she has," replied auntie, "I told you I had a book that explained all about these things, and this book says that a queen is a wife, a woman. Don't you think mother is better than any foreign queen? And home is her kingdom and baby one of her subjects."

"And 'Do unto others'—is the rule of the kingdom," said mother; "I've been doing it all the morning."

"And did you know I was doing it?" asked Sue.

"Yes, I heard baby's pleasant tones, and your happy laugh; and some one else knew it—the King of heaven looked down and was pleased that one of his daughters was doing just what he came to earth to do."

"Then I am a princess, sure enough," said Susie, "but what's the crown, auntie?"

"The crown of rejoicing that fadeth not away," said auntie; "you have it on now and always will, so long as you are the Princess of Do-unto-others."—Morning Star.

The Bishop's Reply.

Rear Admiral S. Cotton, to whom general attention is now being directed, is responsible for an interesting story. On one occasion Admiral Cotton sat at a dinner party beside the bishop of Durham, a clergyman noted for his wit. Near the bishop there was a millionaire manufacturer, a stout man, with a loud, coarse laugh, who ate and drank a good deal and who cracked every little while a stupid joke. One of the man's jokes was leveled at the brilliant bishop of Durham, whom he did not know from Adam. It was enough for him that the bishop's garb was clerical. He was a parson; here, therefore, a chance to poke a little fun at the parson's trade. "I have three sons," he began in a loud tone, nudging his neighbor and winking toward the bishop, "three fine lads. They are in trade. I have always said that if ever I had a stupid son I'd make a parson of him." The millionaire roared out his discordant laugh, and the bishop of Durham said to him with a quiet smile: "Your father evidently thought differently."—The Commoner.

Why He Chose Sandy.

"There will be room for one more boy," said the children's uncle, "as Phil is not well enough to go. Phil, you may choose a boy to take your place."

Uncle Travers had promised the Moore children a moonlight ride, and now Phil was laid up with tonsillitis and couldn't go.

"I choose Sandy Magill," said Phil. "Sandy!" cried the others in surprise; "why do you choose Sandy? We never play with Sandy."

Phil wouldn't say, at first, why he wanted Sandy to have his ride; he seemed to be shy of telling the little story, but after some coaxing he did tell it.

"I know Sandy is a quiet sort of chap," he said, "and the fellows have always said he hadn't any spirit; but when the school got into trouble the other day about breaking Mr. Mason's window, Sandy was the only boy that didn't run; he didn't throw the ball, but he was in the game, and he paid for it out of his own money that he earned by carrying milk. He said it wasn't fair to Mr. Mason, but he didn't seem to care that it wasn't fair to himself. I like him for that."

"I like him for that, too," said Uncle Travers; "it's a good sign to see a man or boy looking out for other people's rights. He may not have the sort of spirit of the Christian who 'seeketh not his own;' and there is something God put in all our hearts that make us admire that spirit. You see, as soon as Philip saw it in Sandy he liked him for it, and wants to do him a good turn."

"We'll send for Sandy to come to take tea with Phil," said poor Phil's mother; she hated to see her boy miss his ride.

"Mother hopes that 'seeking not his own' will be catching, though tonsillitis isn't," said Phil, smiling to himself from his white pillow.—The Children's Friend.

One Thing at a Time.

When I was a little boy helpin' mother to store away apples, I put my arm around ever so many o' them an' tried to bring them all. I managed for a step or two. Then one fell out, an' another, an' two or three more, till they was all rollin' over the floor. Mother laughed.

"Now, Dan'el," says she, "I'm goin' to teach you a lesson." So she put my little hands quite tight around one.

"There," she said, "bring that, an' then fetch another."

I've often thought about it when I've seen folks who might be doin' ever so much good if they didn't try to do too much all at once. Don't go tryin' to put your arms round a year an' don't go troublin' about a week. Wake up in the mornin' and think of this:

"Here's another day come. Whatever I do and whatever I don't do, Lord, help me to do this—help me to live to thee." One day at a time, one hour, one minute—yes, one second—is all the time we get at once. So our best course is to do the next thing next.—Daniel Quorm, in Rest Islander.

EVER GIVE

Your Thinker a Thought?

Funny things happen in this world, and now and then some of them make one an interested observer, for instance: Several years ago a man pursued a systematic course of investigation to discover what kind of elements the body would take up from the vegetable kingdom out of which to make gray matter in the brain and nerve centres throughout the body; also how to prepare this food so that it would be easily digested and allow Nature to make use of these elements. So far the proposition was all right. Question—How to bring all this about?

It took over two years' work to solve the problem successfully. After it was solved, the food was given to many people and the result watched carefully.

When all results were proven beyond doubt, the food was put on the market under the name of Grape-Nuts. Then followed public announcement in the newspapers and magazines that such a food was in existence, and that it would perform its intended work.

People all over the world realized the need of such a food, and began purchasing it liberally. It attracted so much attention that a long list of imitators sprung up all over the country. They boiled wheat, roasted it, stewed it, chopped it, mixed it with rye, malt, oats, and perhaps hay—we are not sure—gave it a fantastic name and told the public it was a "Brain food."

Then, from these imitators, came the offering of spoons, knitting-needles, chinaware, pictures, doll babies, and even pianos to induce people to gorge themselves with the various and sundry things.

Fortunately, the most of these imitation foods are harmless and decently clean, so that no real harm is done except that people who pay out money to secure a food for special service have a right to expect an equitable return for that money.

Investigation proves that in practically all cases where imitations are put upon the market, the men who place them are untrained and have no knowledge of the real scientific basis of food-making. If they did have, they would produce original articles. The very fact that they make imitations is prima facie evidence that they have no professional ability to originate valuable articles themselves, but must get under the eaves of some originator.

Up to the present time no prepared food has appeared, to the knowledge of the writer, that is made upon the solid, fundamental, scientific basis of Grape-Nuts.

In this celebrated food the right parts of the wheat and barley are selected, they pass through various and sundry mechanical processes (absolutely no chemical treatment). In these processes the starchy elements are slowly transformed into sugar known as Post Sugar. In this form it is ready for immediate assimilation and transmission to the blood without taxing the digestive organs. By the blood, the elements which Nature uses for rebuilding the soft gray matter in the brain and nerve centres are carried to the respective parts and there made use of, while other elements known as carbohydrates are carried to the muscles and tissues, and there deposited and held in readiness for use when energy and warmth are demanded. Remember that simply raising the arm requires the expenditure and giving off of warmth and energy. Now and then we must have the elements that supply warmth and energy deposited in these tissues and muscles, else we cannot release them and make use of them. These are the missions of Grape-Nuts, and the person who desires to make use of the proper re-builder of brain and nerve centres, and keep them in first-class working order, and also make use of a supply of warmth and energy, can absolutely rely upon securing this service if they feed regularly on Grape-Nuts.

These are incontrovertible facts demonstrated by actual use by hundreds of thousands of Anglo-Saxons to-day.

There's a reason, and a profound one, for the use of Grape-Nuts. The food is already cooked at the factory and can be served instantly with rich cream. It is delicious, and can be made into a great variety of toothsome dishes after the recipes found in the recipe book enclosed in each package.

Attention is also invited to another very small but "meaty" little book in each package under the title, "The Road to Wellville."

Grape-Nuts food is made at the Pure Food Factory of the Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., and sold all over the world.

The Law of Liberty.

We should, with whatever force the Lord's truth endows us, insist upon self-activity in our schools and homes, that the children may learn to obey God, "as if of themselves." There are, of course, necessary curtailments of freedom—curtailments resting for their justification, as Fichte points out, upon the right of other people to an equal degree of freedom.

Nor is this idea at all too subtle for children, because I managed to get it firmly fixed in the little red head of my three-year-old boy. He was very strong-willed and quick-tempered, not at all ready to stop and consider the rights of others. "John," I used to say to him, "what can you do?"

"Anything I like!" he would assert, sturdy legs set apart, chin high in air. "Except what, John?"

His muscles would relax, his defiant body droop toward me.

"Bozzer other people," he would murmur, reflectively. At three years of age, and against the whole set of his nature, he saw the justice of that rule. He did not so much see his own freedom abridged as see that the freedom of others must be equally asserted.—New Church Messenger.

Getting the Worst of It.

A boy came to the door of a lady's house and asked if she did not wish some berries, for he had been out all day gathering them.

"Yes," said the lady, "I will take them." So she took the basket and stepped into the house, the boy remaining outside, whistling to some canary birds hanging in their cages on the porch.

"Why don't you come in and see that I measure your berries right?" said the lady; "how do you know but I may cheat you?"

"I am not afraid," said the boy, "for you would get the worst of it."

"Get the worst of it," said the lady; "what do you mean by that?"

"Why, ma'am," said the boy, "I should only lose my berries, and you would make yourself a thief. Don't you think you would be getting the worst of it?"

The boy was right. He who steals or does anything wrong or mean just to gain a few pence or a few shillings, burdens himself with a sin which is worse than all gain. Let this be born in mind: the one who does a wrong to another always gets the worst of it.

It is sometimes of God's mercy that men in the eager pursuit of worldly aggrandizement are baffled; for they are like a train going down an inclined plane, when putting on the brake is not pleasant, but it keeps the car on the track.—Beecher.

"Girls don't have to do anything!" declared Bobby, as he sat down with a thump on the shoe-box in grandmother's room. "Girls don't have to feed hens or fill the wood-box. I wish I was a girl, so I do."

"Girls don't have to do anything!" exclaimed Grandmother Stone, in surprise. "Well, well, well! You come with me a minute, Bobby, and we'll see if you are right."

Bobby followed grandmother into the sitting-room. But when they got there both were surprised, for sitting in the big rocker was Beth, her eyes full of tears.

"I wish I was a boy, same as Bobby," she said sorrowfully. "I'm tired as anything dusting rooms. Boys don't have to dust, or mend stockings, or do anything. Oh, dear, dear dear!" and Beth hid her curly head in the duster and sobbed.

"Well, I never did!" exclaimed grandmother. "Suppose you do Bobby's work to-day and he will do yours. I know that he will be delighted to exchange work with you."

But would you believe it? Grandmother was mistaken, for Bobby shook his head.

"I'm going to feed the hens myself," he said decidedly.

Beth wiped her eyes in a hurry. "Girls never fill wood-boxes," she murmured.

Then they both laughed and stopped grumbling for that day.—Our Sunday Afternoon

The lawyer for the defendant was trying to cross-examine a Swede, who had been subpoenaed by the other side, as a witness in an accident case.

"Now, Anderson, what do you do?" asked the lawyer.

"Oh, yas, I un'erstan'—you vant to know vat I make in fact'ry, eh?"

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Amos Berry Hulen, Halleville, Mo.: "I like the Av. S. very much. I read nearly all of 'The Runaways.' So Joe Allison doesn't like fire-crackers or valentines! I, too, thought Bertha Beesley a little girl."

Ruth Felton, Austin Tex.: "I have just read your 'Adnah' and 'Red Box Clew' and like them very, very much. I want to join the Advance Society. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has aroused my ambition to be of some use in the world. 'With the Children' gave me this determination. Will you not write another story for next year? I want to meet all of you at the St. Louis Fair. If I keep any hens, I now know how to make them sit. I want a place in your millionaire sleighride. Well, I want a great many things!"

Beryl Dinsmore, Frazier, Wis.: "I am 16, and my sister Lena is 12; both of us are now joining the Av. S. We have kept the rules three weeks already. We are sure you didn't know what Shakes meant till they were explained to you. We wonder if Sidney Chastain is any kin to the Chasteen who had a letter on this page some time ago. I am glad old gold and blue are now our official colors. Lena is only tolerably glad because she voted for yellow and pink. But we have made our badges, and we think them quite an addition to our finery when we are both dressed up. There is one thing you said once that I don't understand; that you could be happy if everybody in town was invited to a party except you, and that you knew you had been left out on purpose. I couldn't, I know! Maybe you don't care for parties, and that is the reason you wouldn't care. You said you could just go off by yourself and sit on a log with a good book and be satisfied. You would be pretty cold sitting on a log in this country! I wonder what book you would like? Yes, and something else; you said you approved of something—I've forgotten what—because 'it is fashionable.' Now, I didn't think you would stand up for a thing on account of its style! Maybe you were joking—sometimes we can't tell. I wouldn't talk so much about Felix if I were you, because we all remember when he first came to you, a stray, you were so anxious to give it away! You didn't want to keep it under any circumstances. He was only an old yellow cat then, and now he is 'old gold.' We wish Zella Manley would write again. You see we have read this page for years, although we haven't thought of joining till September. We were all so sorry when we read Nannie D. Chamber's letter, where she had missed an Av. S. rule after keeping all of them four years. I know I should have cried. It was brave of her to begin again and go right on. I think your excuse for missing your rule was a poor one. Camping out, indeed! as if the dogs made you forget! You didn't tell which rule you neglected, but I believe it was the Bible. You spoke slightly of people who say they cannot play without their notes. Maybe I can't. Can you?

When people ask you to play, don't you generally say something like that? Lena wants to know what you meant by saying that mammas get tired of monkeys? She wants to know what you meant by monkeys in that sentence. There is one thing more I must scold you about before I stop. You said girls in Missouri know how to climb fences. Lena and I are Missouri girls visiting in Wisconsin. None of the Missouri girls we went with climbed any more fences than Wisconsin girls climb. You are a Missouri person yourself, and you oughtn't to try to make people think that Missourians are climbers more than other people. I hope you will answer all my points, though I think it would take a whole page for you to get out of your difficulties!" (Yes, that's what I think.)

Horace Wyndum, Exeter, Neb.: "Well, I started that branch of the Av. S. I was writing about. We have six girls and four boys. All now wear blue and old gold. We have a yell. It is

"Suc-cess! A-V-S!
Suc-cess! A-V-S!
J-B-L-S-A V-S!
Suc-cess!"

"You ought to hear us yell it together real quick on each syllable. We have a General Notebook. It is a large blank book in which each of us writes a summary of what he has read each week. When we hold our meetings, we go to the General Notebook and make our entries, and then look to see what the others have done. It's like going to the register in a hotel, and lots of fun. It is kept at whosever house the next meeting is to be. We organized the 6th of June—it was Saturday and school was just out. And since then all of us together have read (I find by adding up the General Notebook) 2,000 pages of good history and 10,000 lines of poetry. All together have memorized 160 quotations, and read as much as the entire New Testament. Of course it looks mighty big when you add it all together, still, each fellow has done pretty well, I think, to bring up the average that high. Now that school has begun, I don't expect we can do so much extra work. Still, we are going right on with our society. If all of us were girls, we might get up a match baseball game against the school in this town. Still, I'd rather have some of us girls—they will make candy this winter for our meetings."

Geo. Burne, Le Greba, Cal.: "I have had a fine summer on the ranch. I have two ponies, Texas and Gov. Bone. Texas is the faster, but Gov. Bone is smarter; he shakes hands with me, and whenever I want to saddle him, I only have to go out and cry, 'Oh, Governor!' and here he comes. I could cry 'Oh, Texas!' till I was black in the face, and he wouldn't come! But he will go all right. I have kept the Av. S. rules this summer. If you never saw an old Mexican house, I wish you could visit ours, and sit with us in the court. The flowers are over everything. I don't go to school. I have a tutor, who stays here. I can talk Spanish and write it pretty well. I told you it wasn't milkshakes Zella meant! I hear Gov. Bone nicker for me, so I believe I will go for a ride. Here is my first quarterly report. I am the only young person on the ranch. It must be lots of fun to have boys and girls with you every day. My mother died when I was real young. Father and an uncle and the men and servants and the tutor—he is a very old man—are all I see, maybe for two weeks at a time. All right, Gov. Bone, all right, I'm coming!"

Willie Dunn, Marrow, Ohio: "I have come home from my visit to my New Jersey uncle. He gave me the gold watch I wrote about (don't forget I am a girl Willie, not a boy Willie.) Oh, I did get so homesick once in a while, though now I feel homesick to see grandmother who lives with my uncle! She told me so many stories about olden times. I meant to write you of one of her experiences—the time she went to hear Charles Dickens read from one of his own novels; but some girls have come to take me driving, and they are capering all about the room and acting so ridiculously—I don't think you ever saw girls cut up so, because they don't do so before gentlemen. I can't even think in this noise, so goodbye!" (Goodby, but don't fail to tell us about your grandmother's experience. Hope you'll enjoy your drive.)

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing,
And the song of victory.

For shaving Ivory Soap is preferred by many. Its lather is profuse. Hot water instantly softens the surface but does not melt the cake to waste in the cup. Ivory Soap is aseptic and odorless and rinses away entirely, leaving the face smooth and absolutely clean. It costs about one-fifth as much as most of the so-called shaving soaps.

Current Events

The bribery prosecutions in St. Louis have been adding to the population of Mexico, Canada, and France. Some who have been indicted for bribery found an immediate change of climate absolutely essential. Mr. Kelley, the baking powder agent, found that he needed the clear, cool air of Canada; there are some cool places in the United States, but they would not do. Mr. Kratz turned his face toward Mexico, where he is reported to be recovering nicely and doing a flourishing business as a contractor. Ellis Wainwright needed a sea voyage, and is now a stockbroker in Paris. The extradition treaties in force between our government and most of the civilized countries, by which persons accused of crime can be brought back for trial, do not include bribery in the list of extraditable offenses. The omission and the obvious present need indicate, perhaps, that bribery is on the increase, or at least, that prosecutions are more frequent than formerly. Mr. Folk has been in Washington interviewing the President, the Secretary of State and the Attorney-General in regard to the negotiation of new extradition treaties covering this offense. Attorney-General Knox has given an opinion that such a treaty would be retroactive, and would secure the return of accused persons without regard to the date of their alleged offenses. The gentlemen in these several countries will, to be sure, have ample time to move to other countries before the new treaties can be put into effect, but Mr. Folk says that he hopes to carry on the campaign for bribery extradition until the indicted parties will not be safe in any part of the civilized world.

It is painfully evident that Mr. Balfour is not having an easy time in constructing the cabinet. There is a general sentiment—in which the Premier professes not to share, but which has its effect upon him just the same—that the ministry is about to fall, and that the party is seriously divided on the tariff question. The more important positions made vacant by the recent resignations have been filled. Austen Chamberlain becomes chancellor of the exchequer, and thus holds a higher rank in the cabinet than his distinguished father has ever held. Alfred Lyttleton becomes secretary for the colonies. His appointment is something of a surprise, as he has not hitherto been a cabinet minister, and is better known for his prowess in cricket, football and tennis than for statesmanship. Mr. Lyttleton is said to be entirely in harmony with the policy of Mr. Chamberlain, whom he succeeds, and Lord Milner, who declined the office because he felt that his duty lay in South Africa for the present, where he is in charge of the work of reconstruction. Mr. Broderick becomes Secretary of State for India, and H. O. Arnold-Forster succeeds to Mr. Broderick's position as Secretary for War. The general belief is that the Premier has only propped up his tottering cabinet temporarily, and that its fall cannot be long postponed.

The heaviest blow that has fallen upon Mr. Balfour's administration is the resignation of the Duke of Devonshire, Lord President of the Council. When Mr. Chamberlain and three or four other members of the cabinet resigned, the Duke of Devonshire remained and was the Premier's most valuable adviser in filling the vacancies. It was not until Mr. Balfour delivered his speech at Sheffield (the substance of which was given in these columns last week) that he determined to sever his relation with the government. He is a believer in free trade and is not willing to stand as a defender of Mr. Balfour's scheme for a retaliatory tariff. In replying to the Duke's resignation, Mr. Balfour wrote a keen and sarcastic letter which is generally viewed as a serious blunder, since it reveals more clearly than any previous utterance, the anxiety which he feels about the political situation.

The Citizens' Union and the Republicans of New York, who co-operate for the support of the fusionist ticket in the interest of reform, are unanimously of the opinion that Grout and Fornes should not be allowed to represent them in the approaching campaign if they are also to represent Tammany. The conventions of these two parties were therefore reconvened last week, the nominations of these two gentlemen for comptroller and president of the board of alderman were revoked and F. W. Hinrichs and E. J. McGuire were nominated in their places. The new nominees, as well as the former ones, are staunch Democrats in all matters of national politics. Messrs. Grout and Fornes have, by their desire to be everybody's candidate and their inability to fathom or unwillingness to foil Tammany's trick, gotten themselves into an absurd and unenviable position. They are in a position where they will have to fight against all the forces which have stood for reform and municipal honesty in New York during recent years, and where they will have to appeal for support to the elements which have been most strenuously opposed to reform. And yet they are professed reformers. The situation of Mr. Shepard two years ago as the respectable candidate of the unspeakable Tammany was incongruous enough, but that of Fornes and Grout is both ludicrous and pitiable.

The tithing system, as the Hebrews practiced it, is supposed to be an antiquated and disused scheme. Prices are so high and competition so keen that we moderns feel that we cannot afford to give one-tenth of our income for anything except the necessities of life. Yet credible statistics show that, taking it the world over, one-tenth of the income of the civilized people of the world is spent for alcoholic beverages. This is our modern tithing system. Emperor William recently received a report from a commission which he had appointed to inquire into the habits of his subjects with reference to drink. The report showed that the German people spend on an average of one-eighth of their income for beer, wine and liquors or a total of $750,000,000 annually. The amount has almost doubled in the past decade, and hard times do not interfere with the increase. The Kaiser's commissioners are not total abstainers or prohibitionists, but they are frankly alarmed over this condition. They estimate that one-sixth of the amount now spent would be ample to safe-guard the Kaiser's subjects against real suffering from reasonable thirst. With all his ambitious and expensive projects for the increase of the army and navy, the problem of taxation becomes a very vital one with the Kaiser. The average income of his adult male subjects does not exceed $100 a year. A tax which produces the needed revenue is too burdensome, and yet the people are already taxing themselves at a far higher rate than the government would ever think of attempting. Count Waldersee suggested that a reduction in the drink bill would make possible an increase in the army tax. So it would, perhaps. But what those heads of families need who are earning only $100 a year is not less beer and more army, but less beer and less army, so that their families may have more of the reasonable comforts of life.

Oct. 8 was the day fixed for the evacuation of Manchuria by the Russian troops. The Russian government had given both oral and written assurances that on that date the soldiers would be removed from the first of the three military zones, and that the evacuation would be complete within one year. A few weeks ago, and long after this promise of withdrawal had been made, Russia demanded from China certain concessions, to grant which would have been worse than to allow Russia to remain in Manchuria. The concessions were refused. On this pretext, Russia now repudiates her solemn agreement and frankly avows her intention of keeping Manchuria until the concessions have been granted. Such an act of perfidy merits and will receive the condemnation of everyone who hates a lie in public or in private life. It may be said, as the Russian Consul at Chicago said some weeks ago, that the permanent Russian occupation of Manchuria will be the best thing for that province and for all the powers which have dealings with it. That may or may not be true. In neither case is it pertinent. The simple fact is that Russia has plainly and flatly broken faith both with China and with the powers.

Although Russia's continued presence in Manchuria is in violation of her agreement with the powers, it is not likely that anything will be done about it. It is to no one's interest to champion the cause of Manchuria, and it is to every one's interest to keep out of a fight if possible. France is Russia's ally, and will, of course, utter no word of protest. Germany will oppose no move which promises any approach toward the dismemberment of the empire, or which affords a precedent for aggressions on her own part when convenient. Great Britain is allied with Japan, but her chief desire at present is to keep out of trouble and attend to affairs at home. Japan alone has an adequate motive for fighting Russia, and Japan's motive has to do rather with Korea than with Manchuria. Russia and Japan have a mutual agreement not to invade or disturb Korea. Both of them have the best reasons for wishing to control it, and both have, in spite of their agreement, gotten some foothold in the country. Russia has erected fortifications on the Korean side of the Yalu River, which forms the boundary between Korea and Manchuria. If there is war in the far east it will not be over Manchuria, but will be between Russia and Japan over Korea.

An important commercial treaty between China and the United States was signed at Shanghai, Oct. 8. One provision of the treaty, for the opening of two cities in Manchuria for international trade, is of special importance in view of Russia's continued occupancy. The United States will insist that Russia must carry out this provision if she remains in possession, and no trouble on this score is anticipated. For Russia to refuse to do this would be highly impolitic, for it would open the way for interference with her plans in Manchuria. Perhaps the most important provision of the treaty is the abolition of the likin tax on the transportation of merchandise within China. This tax, which was uncertain in its operation and highly expensive to collect, was one of the chief obstacles to trade in the interior. In place of it there is to be a fixed tariff at the post of entry for imports, and an export tax collected at the port of exportation for exports. Other articles provide for the protection of trademarks, patents and copyrights; for a revision of mining regulations so that citizens of the United States may engage in mining and in the allied businesses; for the issue of a uniform national coinage by the Chinese government; for the exercise of religious liberty by Christian missionaries and their converts, and for the recognition of the right of missionaries to rent and lease in perpetuity property needed for their work in all parts of the empire. These provisions, if faithfully carried out, will fairly revolutionize our commerce with China. The treaty is the outgrowth of a provision of the protocol of 1901, which embodied the terms on which the allied powers agreed to withdraw their troops from China.

Professor Langley's aeroplane made another trial trip last week over (and in) the Potomac River. Its course began on the roof of a houseboat and ended a hundred yards away in the waters of that historic stream. Professor Langley's aerial vehicle differs from some of its predecessors in that, instead of falling straight down from the starting point, it describes a somewhat flattened trajectory. This is good as far as it goes, but it is not flying. Mr. Manley, the assistant who navigated the machine on this last trial, was ready to give reasons for the failure almost before he had gotten the water out of his mouth. The reasons are as plausible as the reasons for all the previous failures have been, and they prove conclusively, just as the previous explanations have proved, that the aeroplane will soar like a hawk next time.

Atlantic steamship passenger rates are to be reduced, owing to the withdrawal of four important lines from the "trans-Atlantic conference" which has regulated the rates for many years.

Sir Thomas Lipton suggests that, if Great Britain adopts a preferential tariff, it ought to include the United States as well as the colonies—a sort of united Anglo-Saxon commercial empire.

Trans-Atlantic yacht-racing has found some influential champions. Sir Thomas Lipton has offered a cup for a race from Sandy Hook to the Needles, open to all sorts of sail-boats, whether sloops, yawls or schooners; no time-allowance, and the first boat in wins. The Cosmopolitan magazine offers a $5,000 cup for a trans-Atlantic race for merchantmen, the prize to go to the boat which is ranked highest on the several points of merit for cargo-vessels—speed, carrying capacity and economy of operation.

The fact that two armed cranks or madmen, with or without murderous intentions, have been caught in the White House within a week, emphasizes the need of greater care for the President's life. In this country there is no subject on which a man is more apt to go crazy than politics. Persons whose understanding of our government is limited, frequently hold the President responsible for things with which he has not the remotest connection, and a half-crazed person with a grievance in his head and a revolver in his pocket is very likely to try to take vengeance on the President. Reasonable precaution for the safety of the chief executive does not, as some seem to think, savor of autocracy and militarism. It is simply common sense—and there is nothing undemocratic about that.

Keeping Step in State Missions.

We are glad to devote much space in this number to the interest of state missions. There was a time when it was difficult to get our people to see anything beyond state missions. After awhile, however, we learned the lesson, and our best churches now give joyfully and many of them liberally to both the Foreign Christian Missionary Society and the American Christian Missionary Society. Strangely enough, however, while we have been learning the lesson of giving to nation-wide and world-wide missions, we have been forgetting the work in the several states. This, of course, is the foundation work for all our missionary interests of a general character. The effort now being made to arouse a deeper interest in the work of state missions within the several states, is timely, and indicates that we are getting away from the romantic idea of missions, and settling down to solid, sane, business principles. We shall not do less but more for both general home missions and for foreign missions by planting new churches and more firmly establishing weak ones through the agency of our state missionary organizations.

It was a very happy thought to arrange a common day for state missions in the several states, and the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has labored to bring about this consummation. We have often desired to do more to bring the claims of state missions before our readers, but could not well give much space to the subject while each state had a different day to observe for its offering. Now that the states, generally, have fallen into line, and are keeping step with each other, it is practicable for us to give the needed space and emphasis to their work. The first Sunday in November has been agreed upon as state mission day. On that day, therefore, the whole brotherhood, or that part of it that has been enlisted in the work of co-operation, will move forward together like a great army in behalf of state missions. The very fact that the churches throughout the brotherhood are engaged in the same work, each state vying with every other state in its liberality for the extension of the cause within its own borders, will impart new interest to the work and will no doubt enlist many churches which have hitherto stood aloof. It is hard not to keep step with the advancing tread of a great army, especially when it is animated by so worthy a purpose.

As the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has readers in every state where our cause has its advocates, we are glad to carry to them the plea of their corresponding secretary for their co-operation in the work of missions in their respective states. It is safe to predict that the states which do most for missions within their own borders will do most for general home missions, and for foreign missions as well as for benevolence and education. It is easy to see that the work in behalf of state missions is strengthening the basis of operations for missions in the wider fields. Every great enterprise must have a strong base of operations. In proportion as this is weakened, the advancing army is hindered in its operations.

We congratulate the brotherhood, generally, on the fact that we are coming to give proper emphasis, at last, to each part of our missionary work, and that we are coming to see that they are essentially one work, and that each one helps every other. We cannot neglect one without injury to all. Let the friends of foreign missions and of general home missions, therefore, be in the front in rallying the brethren to the call for a liberal offering to state missions, on the first Lord's day in November. We shall be greatly disappointed if this concerted action does not result in a deeper interest, and in much greater offerings for state missions throughout the brotherhood.

Origin of C. W. B. M.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—The letter and the editorial notice of the proposed C. W. B. M. organization and work in THE CHRISTIAN of June 4 and 11, 1874, were the very first publications in its history. Your outspoken commendation so promptly given, was accepted as a good omen, and it immediately kindled an enthusiasm which has not varied through all the testing years. It is something to take satisfaction in to have been the very first to commend the untried experiment to the church's confidence; it is much more to have stood by this conviction with such loyalty and fidelity as to have been a great factor in its success.

Most truly,
California, Mo., Oct. 5. C. N. PEARRE.

As any organization or movement grows in power and usefulness, the matter of its beginning possesses increased interest. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions has long since come to be recognized among us as one of the most important factors in our missionary work. It has had the seal of God's blessing upon it from the very beginning. It is only yet in the morning of its history and of its power. The dew of its youth is upon it. It has before it a bright and promising future of increasing usefulness in extending the kingdom of God and in blessing mankind.

The foregoing letter of Sister Pearre is of interest because it fixes definitely the origin of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, so far as any publication of its purpose and plan is concerned. Its real origin, of course, was in the heart of Sister Pearre, as is evidenced by her letter to Sister J. K. Rogers, of Missouri, as published in THE CHRISTIAN of the date given above. We do indeed count it "something to take satisfaction in to have been the very first to commend the untried experiment to the church's confidence," and something more to have been its steadfast friend through all its history-making years; but it is vastly more to have been chosen of God to be the originator of a movement which has proved to be an incalculable blessing to our sisterhood and to the world. Sister Pearre has this unique honor, and her name will live in the affections of her sisters and of the great brotherhood with which she is connected as long as this organization, which had its beginnings in her mind and heart, shall live to bless mankind. It is enough honor for us that we furnished the medium for the publication of her thought to the brotherhood, and gave it our hearty editorial endorsement. Long may Sister Pearre live to witness the growing power and usefulness of her beloved Christian Woman's Board of Missions!

The Home as a Factor in Molding Character.

The strategic value of the home as a factor in our civilization grows out of the fact that it is the place where the young mind receives its first and most lasting impressions. We do not believe that the home is half appreciated as the first school for character-building. Dr. Jean F. Loba, in his address before the Religious Education Convention, said: "The family is not only the cradle of the human race, it is also the mightiest of the schools of humanity. It is the school of schools. Not only do children receive from parents their flesh and blood, their color and frame, but their spirits—not only the fibers of their bodies, but the very tone and temper of their souls. The habits of thought and speech formed in the home are more persistent than those they may learn under any other influence. The grammar spoken in the schools by the children is not that taught by the most careful and painstaking teachers, but is generally that spoken with father and mother, with brother and sister; and all the efforts of the teacher to cultivate in the pupils a practice of correct English, when the custom of the home is other than this, reach but a little way. . . So persistent are the habits inculcated in the home that far into mature life and into different countries man betrays the character of the home whence he sprang. Families are the nucleated centers of civilized or barbarous forms of social life. They are the centers of civilization or of heathenism. What these are in the aggregate, society is."

This is by no means an extravagant view of the far-reaching and permanent influence for good or for evil of the home. What a mighty impetus it would give to the kingdom of God in a single generation if the influence of the home could be enlisted for the building up of Christian character! Our missionaries in foreign lands have come to feel the necessity of establishing Christian homes in the midst of heathenism as radiating centers of Christian influence. The same thing is true in reference to the submerged districts in our great cities where social settlements are being formed in order to carry the Christian home, with its civilizing and Christianizing influence, into these dark regions. Little children, nurtured in Christian homes and taught of God, become the most effective missionaries by the light which they shed on the family relationship, and the object lesson which they afford as to what Christianity does for the home.

It becomes, then, a very important problem, how we may awaken a deeper interest in religious culture in the home and make parents realize the obligations that rest upon them to bring up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. As a recent writer on this subject has said: "Let there be agitation. This important matter must be brought to the attention of Christian parents. They must be made to feel, and to feel keenly, their solemn and ever-present duty to teach their children. Their consciences must be awakened, their obligation must be made plain, their hearts must be deeply moved, and in every possible way and throughout their whole being they must be made to understand how to discharge this duty to their children and must be quickened to discharge it. Pastors must preach upon it; church councils and conferences and assemblies must give needful attention to it; the religious press may well devote to it conspicuous space and forceful words, and conventions of Christian workers must give it a dignified place in their programs."

It is this necessary agitation that we are now seeking to stir up. We ask all who feel this matter lying heavily on their hearts to assist us in waking up the sleeping consciences of a large number of professing Christians to this neglected duty.

A Request from Pastors and Evangelists.

The editor of this paper desires for his information to enable him to carry out a plan for a revival of religious worship and instruction in the home, answers from our preachers and others interested, to the following questions:

1. About what per cent of the families represented in your congregation or in the range of your acquaintance, have any regular religious worship or instruction?

2. What is the nature of such religious instruction or worship in such families?

It is not our purpose to publish any names or localities, but to tabulate the facts so as to enable us to form at least a general idea of the situation as relates to religion in the home. A postal card reply will suffice. The answers may assume this form:

1. About—per cent.

2. Religious exercises consist of—

We shall be grateful for the co-operation of our ministers, especially, in securing this information. Address

There are always those who ask concerning our great national gatherings, "Why this waste?" It was asked, you will remember, by the man who carried the bag for the apostolic group, when a certain woman anointed Jesus with a very costly ointment. We do not say the same motive prompts the question now as then, but there is the same false economic principle underlying it. Love is always costly. It will withhold nothing from the object loved. Love finds no adequate expression save in sacrifice. A cheap ointment would not have expressed that woman's love for Jesus. Anything less than the best she could offer would not have sufficed. Nothing done out of pure love for Christ is ever wasted. The fragrance of that spike-nard poured out upon the head of our Lord has filled all the world and all the Christian centuries. The heart of Jesus hungered for human love then as it no doubt does to-day—a love that finds expression in deeds of sacrifice in His name for the welfare of humanity. Shall we count that too costly which is necessary to the progress of His kingdom? Not if we love according to the amount forgiven us.

But to return to the "waste" of these conventions. It is legitimate to ask, Cui bono? What good do they accomplish? We answer, much in many ways. These great national conventions furnish facts and information which awaken our interest and intensify our zeal. They widen our horizons, broaden our sympathies, deepen our appreciation of the world's needs, and quicken our faith in the gospel as the only adequate remedy for the world's ills. They promote unity, fraternity and brotherly love, by bringing together brethren from different sections of the country who take counsel together, pray together and learn from each other the best thoughts and the best methods for advancing our common cause. Who can predict what would be the future of our movement without the unifying and quickening influence of these great gatherings? They have been mighty factors, essential factors, let us say, in the promotion of our missionary activities, in keeping the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and in giving us the wide recognition and influence which we have to-day as one of the great and aggressive forces making for righteousness and for the world's conversion.

The religious convention is a visible and tangible embodiment of the spirit of unity. It not only fosters the spirit of unity, but it gives visible and practical expression to the principle of unity. The National Convention, in principle, is the whole brotherhood organically represented, and its voice on the questions which may rightly come before it, is the voice of the brotherhood. No questions of faith, doctrine or discipline, ever comes before our National Conventions. Our creed is universally accepted as final, and our book of doctrine and discipline was settled upon long ago. The questions considered at these conventions relate solely to the extension of the kingdom of God in this and other lands, involving practical problems of raising and disbursing funds, missionary methods, practical benevolence, the providing of suitable educational facilities and the voicing of the sentiment of the brotherhood on great moral reforms. To the extent that the brotherhood is not represented in these conventions, to that extent, of course, it fails to represent the sentiments of the brotherhood. But it is the only body that approaches a representative character among us, and its action carries with it no authority except the moral authority which resides in the recommendations and resolutions passed. There is not even the ghost of ecclesiastical legislation in one of these conventions.

There are some things you can't put a cash valuation on. Who can tell the value of a hearty hand-grip from one who has felt the touch of your spirit and who expresses his approval in his greeting? How much is a heart-to-heart talk between long separated friends, worth? What is the cash value of a great idea coming out of a great heart and lifting the soul up to new altitudes of spiritual vision? Who will fix the price of a high purpose, formed in the midst of such influences, to live for the things that abide? What value, in dollars and cents, shall we attach to the joy of Christian fellowship, when thousands of distance-severed children of God sit down together to commemorate the Lord's death, and the thrill of brotherly love leaps from heart to heart, and the consciousness of God's presence awes the vast assembly into profound silence? What was it worth to Peter, James and John to behold their glorified Master on the Mount of Transfiguration, when his raiment was exceeding white and his face shone above the brightness of the sun? How much will it mean to the churches, that their delegates will look upon the faces of the missionaries who have been laboring in foreign fields, hear their earnest, tender pleadings, and catch something of their spirit to carry back to their own fields? Yes, conventions are paying investments. They pay financially, so far as our missionary interests are concerned, and they pay morally, socially, intellectually and religiously, so far as the brotherhood itself is concerned.

Notes and Comments.

A great daily paper of the east comes to us with a picture of the old Brush Run Church, the first meeting-house of the body now known as Disciples of Christ, and also with a picture of Alexander Campbell. The article is entitled, "A Great Convention of a Body with Humble Origin." It is a notice of the Detroit Convention. The article speaks of the poverty of the members of this first congregation, who were not able to complete their first humble building. The Founder of Christianity said, "The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head." His early followers met in private houses, until the days of persecution, when they met anywhere they could, often in caves, and dens of the earth, and under cover of the darkness. No movement in history has had a humbler origin than Christianity.

In our last issue we published the second of our series of articles from representative men of the leading religious bodies, being an article by Dr. S. J. Niccolls, of this city, on the Distinctive Features of Presbyterianism. It gives us great pleasure to grant these able men the opportunity of stating their distinctive features to the religious public which this paper represents. We do this in the interest of that growing unity which is characteristic of our times, and which can only be promoted by a better mutual understanding of each other and a better appreciation, on the part of each, of what the other is doing for the advancement of the kingdom of God. Dr. Niccolls holds an honored place among his brethren, not only in this city, but in the United States, and his article may be taken as a fair statement, from their point of view, of what constitutes the distinctive features of Presbyterianism.

It is a wide-extended appeal in behalf of State Missions which we present to our readers this week. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is glad to voice so worthy an appeal, covering almost the whole of our wide-extended country. As we close the paper, a letter comes from J. P. Dargitz, corresponding secretary of missions in the state of California, saying that having been on the wing, he failed to receive our notice of the State Mission number in time to write anything for it. He wishes, however, to be set down in favor of the State day, and wants the voice of California to be heard in the general chorus in behalf of State Missions. He writes: "We are waging a lively campaign." We trust that this is true in every state where our cause is represented, and if this number of the paper shall help to make that campaign more aggressive and successful, we shall be greatly delighted. We bespeak for the representatives of these various states a careful reading.

A ring paper informs Folk that it is not enough for him to say he is a Democrat; he will be required to add that he is a Missouri Democrat. Stone will demand that he be a Stone Democrat; Cook that he be a Cook Democrat, and Ed Butler that he be an Ed Butler Democrat. Probably Folk will stick to it that he is just a Democrat.—Globe-Democrat.

Things political often have their counterpart in things religious. There are some people who would like to be simply Christians. It seems to them to be broader and more scriptural. But there be those—we do not say they belong to a "ring," but their minds have a strong denominational bias—who say we ought to be Lutheran Christians, or Calvinist Christians, or Wesleyan Christians, or Presbyterian Christians, or Campbellian Christians, etc., or else we are not orthodox! To be Christians only, Disciples of Christ and nothing else—that seems to them to be cranky and freakish, not to say heretical. Probably, however, these peculiar people will "stick to it" that they are just Christians, without affix or suffix.

We are glad to give place on our first page to the picture of the splendid building of the First Christian Church, Jacksonville, Fla., together with that of the popular pastor, J. T. Boone. This church is a child of the brotherhood, having been aided by our Home Missionary society from the beginning, and having received, since its baptism in fire, contributions of help from brethren in the various states. In a note from the pastor, J. T. Boone, he asks us to say to the brethren who may come south this winter that the church, located at the corner of Hogan and Monroe Streets, one block north of the post office, will keep a reading and rest room and bureau of information open daily from 8 A. M. to 8 P. M., and that they are welcome to make use of it at their pleasure. They are invited to worship also with the church, if they are in the city on Lord's day or at the time of any of their regular meetings. No church in the brotherhood has been tried more severely and been found more faithful than this one, and we heartily congratulate its members and its pastor on the success which has crowned their labors and sacrifices.

It will be a gratifying piece of news to the brotherhood that the authorities of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition have granted the use of the large Music Hall in the Exposition Building, between 13th and 14th on Olive Street, for all the sessions of our national convention in October next, lighted and, if necessary, heated, wholly at the expense of the Exposition. They also grant the free use of the Coliseum, in the same building, seating 10,000 persons, for the great communion service on Sunday afternoon. This extraordinary liberality on the part of the World's Fair people has helped us to solve a very difficult problem and assures the success of the convention to be held here. As a further evidence of the cordiality of the Exposition management to the convention, the president of the Exposition, David R. Francis, the mayor of the city of St. Louis, Rolla Wells, and the president of the Business Men's League of the city, Cyrus P. Walbridge, have each in his official capacity extended a cordial invitation to the convention to meet in St. Louis, and offer every courtesy which they can extend to the delegates. The Music Hall is estimated to seat 6,500 people, and there are numerous side rooms for committees and smaller meetings. All this is characteristic of St. Louis hospitality, and is an indication of the large scale on which the World's Fair is being planned. It is now assured that hotel and boarding-house accommodations will be ample and at reasonable rates. The entertainment committee of the World's Fair offers its services to assist in the entertainment of our delegates. We are now enabled to invite "all the world and the rest of mankind" to attend our world's convention of the Disciples of Christ in St. Louis in October, 1904.

Last week in answering a question, we mentioned the names of a number of our institutions of learning, giving especial attention to the education of ministers of the gospel, inadvertently omitting, as one is likely to do, writing without a list of our colleges before him, the names of two or three that might well have been added. We have received "A Gentle Protest" from Brother William Sumpter for our omission of the name of Cotner University, of Bethany, Neb., from the list of deserving institutions. Of course, nothing could have been further from our thought than to have intentionally omitted Cotner from this list. It was purely an oversight and the more to be regretted since Cotner is one of our institutions that has come up through great tribulation and that occupies a position where it may accomplish great good in a wide and needy field. Brother Sumpter, writing, as he says, without the knowledge of Cotner and upon his own responsibility, says: "Cotner University is rapidly coming to the front. Her influence is being felt in every nook and corner of this country and all around the world. This work has been done in the face of the greatest difficulties. One having money to bestow cannot do better than to take the Editor's advice and endow a Bible Chair in one of our colleges, and no one of our colleges or universities is more worthy, or in of any greater need than Cotner University." All of which we endorse, and thereby give Cotner a better advertisement than either of the institutions mentioned.

Some Ancient History By F. D. Power

The beginnings of our organized missionary work in Maryland and the District of Columbia are full of interest. The General Home Missionary Society keeps its fifty-fourth anniversary this month, the Kentucky state organization has reached its sixty-third year, the Maryland co-operative work dates back to the spring of 1851, two years after the organization in Cincinnati of the American Christian Missionary Society.

Here is the story: "At a meeting of a number of Christian brethren from different parts of the state of Maryland and the adjacent districts, convened, according to previous announcement, in the Christian meeting house in the city of Baltimore on Saturday, May 10, 1851, for the purpose of consulting on the present condition of the cause of Jesus Christ, and for maturing some more efficient method of advancing the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom in these regions; on motion, Elder George Austen was appointed president of the meeting and Bro. James G. Henshall, secretary."

R. L. Coleman, of Virginia, offered prayer; and he and C. McDougal of Pennsylvania were invited to give the meeting the benefit of their experience and counsel. Eleven churches and missions reported: Baltimore, Beaver Creek, Boonsboro, Edmonds Mills, Conococheague, Hyattstown, Rockville, Jerusalem, Smoketown, Washington City, and New London Pa. Nine organized churches were represented with four hundred and fifty-four members. The good old word "messenger," the "angel" of the New Testament, is used to describe the delegates. R. L. Coleman and C. McDougal were requested to state the practical objects and operations of the societies in Virginia and Pennsylvania, and J. R. Frame explained the working of the co-operative systems of Ohio and Tennessee. C. L. Loos, of Somerset, Pa., and David Mingus, of Philadelphia, were present on the second day and these also addressed the convention. Professor Loos spoke of the spread of the gospel in Pennsylvania, and of "the determination of the churches not to countenance or to support any preacher who did not pursue a mild and conciliatory course toward other religious denominations." A committee was appointed to prepare a plan of operation, consisting of F. D. Dungan, C. L. Loos, J. R. Frame and Jas. G. Henshall; they reported that it was the sense of the meeting that "it was the duty of the brethren in the state and adjoining districts to co-operate for the purpose of spreading the gospel." As the "messengers" were not prepared to state what the churches could contribute for this work, a committee was appointed to prepare an address to the churches, setting forth their duty on this subject, and requesting them to send "messengers to a meeting to be held at the Jerusalem Meeting House, Harford County, Md., August 8, 1851," prepared to state what amount they could contribute for this purpose. The Christian Union and Religious Review, edited by E. E. Orvis, was made the organ of "the co-operation."

July 1, 1851, the committee appointed to prepare an address to the churches, published the address, urging upon the brethren the duty of evangelizing the world, and the need of money to employ competent evangelists one dozen of whom "could be profitably employed within the bounds of the co-operation." F. D. Dungan and J. G. Henshall are the names signed to this address.

The co-operation met according to adjournment August 8, 1851, at Jerusalem, Harford, County. Delegates reported pledges of $563.50. A constitution with eleven articles was adopted, forming "the Maryland State Christian Co-operation, to spread the gospel and build up the weak congregations in the knowledge and practice of the Christian religion." Meetings should be held in June and December. F. D. Dungan was president; James G. Henshall, secretary, and G. W. Morling, treasurer. George Austen and R. McEldowney were additional members of the board of managers. Resolutions were adopted calling upon all the co-operations in the United States to aid in building a house of worship in Washington City. E. E. Orvis and J. R. Frame and A. E. Myers did the preaching at this meeting and eleven persons obeyed the gospel. The conventions of that early time were both missionary and evangelistic.

Between 1851 and 1878 there is a great gulf fixed. That these churches continued to co-operate and hold conventions at intervals, there can be no doubt, but the record of their meetings and of the results of their labors are lost to us. In the chronicles of individual churches we find occasional statements concerning the appointment of messengers to conventions. In 1860 the Executive Committee of "the Co-operation" consists of George Austen, Benj. Witmer, Wm. Braddock, E. Adamson and F. D. Dungan, and the annual meeting is held in Baltimore in February. A circular is sent out for statistics, and a score or more questions asked, but not one reference is made to money raised for missions or any other purpose. How interesting would be these statistics after forty-three years! In some old desk, or in somebody's garret no doubt, these paper's are hid away, or more likely they were long ago swept into the flames like Cicero's treatise on Glory, or the original manuscript of Carlyle's French Revolution. Meetings were held in Hyattstown in 1859, and in Baltimore in 1860 and '63, and if these churches held their conventions during the great war, they must have met in other years; but we have no recorded history of their co-operative labors. The man who discovers it will be akin to him who saved Justinian's Code, or who rescued Magna Charta from the tailor's scissors, or snatched the Codex Sinaiticus from the basket of kindling. Still we have the fruit of this service.

Our present organization, the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia, had its origin at Rockville, Md., in November, 1878. There was no co-operation at that time among the churches of Disciples of Christ in this region. W. H. Schell and F. D. Power called a meeting of the churches and a small body of delegates came together. Ten organizations reported 1,635 members, and $6,245 raised for all purposes. F. D. Power was chosen president and filled that office for twenty years; S. B. Moore and S. F. Fowler were made vice-presidents; W. H. Schell, secretary; and Jacob B. Thomas, treasurer. This was the beginning of the present organized work. There were eighteen men and women in that little body, coming from six churches and pledging $150 for their first year's work, but they were men and women of faith, laying foundations and looking forward, even beyond this good day. Five of the number survive in our missionary district, four have removed to other fields, and nine rest from their labors.

We are to despise not the day of small things. Contrast the haystack meeting at Williamstown, or the parlor meeting at Kettering, with the great gathering in Carnegie Hall, N. Y. Five only assembled at the first meeting of the American Board of Foreign Missions; seven only at the second. Thousands now come up to their annual feasts, and thousands of missionaries have been sent out, and scores of thousands of heathen have been saved. Of ten figures how many thousands of numbers are made; of twenty-six letters how many hundreds of thousands of words; how many quarters and folios, Miltons and Shakespeares; of seven notes how many symphonies, oratorios! A point is the beginning of all Geometry. A pebble tossed into a pond by the hand of a child sends its circles of influence to the ends of the earth. The Kingdom of Heaven is as a grain of mustard seed. The King himself was once a swaddled babe in a Syrian stable.

The little society has now thirty churches with 5,000 members, giving $45,000 a year for their work and over $6,000 for missions, and during its twenty-five years of organized life has planted 15 churches, raised $25,000 for states missions and gathered in 2,250 souls.

State Missions to the Front

The work of missions is the work of saving men and saving them not simply for their own sakes, but for the sake of their influence in the saving of others. Saul was called to be an Apostle. That is, called in order that he might go and save others. And that is why all of us are called, and that is what we call others into the kingdom of God. The mission work that saves people, that saves them in largest numbers, that places them in the most effective position in the army of our King is mission work of first importance, and this is state missions.

Look at the home missionary map with its splendid appeal for work in the great West and needy South, in the old conservative East with its teeming population. But inside the heavy black line in the states of Ohio, Kentucky, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Tennessee and Iowa, and in the parts of the states of Pennsylvania, Kansas and Nebraska, within these lines there is yet a great mission field. Yes, the greatest mission field. The ripest, the most fruitful, the best, where people can be saved in largest numbers and where they are enlisted in greatest numbers in the army of our King. Exclusive of the East, with its dense population, there are more people inside the heavy line than outside of it, that is, including the South and West. More people in these states, where our population is densest, than in the regions beyond. Ohio has a greater population alone than all of the states and territories west of the Dakotas, Kansas, Nebraska and Texas, including Alaska. Illinois has more than Ohio, and the other states almost as many. And in these states there are unsaved souls. In Ohio more than 2,000,000, and in all of the territory inside the heavy lines, more than 12,000,000 old enough to become Christians that have not yet yielded allegiance to Christ. If we could only win them, what an army that would be to the church of Jesus Christ.

And here is to be found untouched territory. More than 150 county seats inside these lines are yet unentered by our plea. Even in the states where our population is densest, we have one-half covered the field.

This is the base of supplies for our great missionary enterprises. Into these great states they come with their earnest appeals and receive the great bulk of the funds for missionary work, and we have not given one-half what we ought to save the world. So that our plea for state missions is broader than any state. Save Ohio for the world's sake.

Ohio alone is a great mission field. Only one in forty-nine of her people have been reached by our plea. Five whole counties are yet untouched. Twenty-seven county seats have no Church of Christ. One hundred and twenty-seven towns and cities have no voice pleading for primitive Christianity. In Ohio we are planning great things for state missions. We want $15,000 this year to carry on our work. We are supporting thirty-four missions and maintaining three evangelists in the field. Expect great things from Ohio this year.

The offering for state missions comes the first Sunday in November. It ought to be the greatest of the whole year. Let no church neglect it; let no minister pass it by; let no member be left out when the offering is sent in.

Enlarge the Work of State Boards.

In all the state conventions the managers of national organizations have had their chief opportunity to plead for foreign missions and for general home missions. This opportunity has been heartily granted and highly appreciated. In fact, the great commission makes no distinction between home and foreign missions. "Go into all the world," says the great King. Make his disciples broad enough to seek and save the lost wherever the lost may be, and they will welcome every opportunity to lend a helping hand. But it has sometimes appeared to the workers in state missions that many of the churches have allowed their enthusiasm for foreign missions to make them forget the open doors in their own state. The Board of the American Christian Missionary Society looks only to fields where the state or territorial organization is weak. The stronger states must look after the missions inside their own borders, where there are many barren fields and many weak churches. There is none of these states where may not be found several counties without churches made up of Disciples, and many counties with one or two weak churches.

It goes without the saying that only as the home field grows in numbers and strength will it be possible to increase the number of our workers abroad. Not less are all our educational institutions dependent on this same growth. To weaken state missionary work is to weaken all our efforts for the advancement of the kingdom. To let our churches at home die is, to this extent, to kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

Then I think, too, we have not appreciated the fact that this nation has been growing along industrial lines. Hence the growth of cities, and these cities are absorbing the country churches. Frequently the best blood of the country churches is driven to the cities, and often lost to our work. There should be a larger effort made to institute and establish strong churches in our cities. I plead for the old-fashioned country evangelization to hold and increase our power at these sources of streams that flow into our cities; but I plead also for such a work in our cities as we have never had, because cities are now, and will ever be, the masters of this country, politically and religiously. We have in Ohio alone more than 125 cities and towns of a thousand people or more where Disciples are not found except possibly in sectarian churches.

To what hands then must we look for this pressing work except to the state boards? Strengthen these hands by all means. The history of state missions in some of the best states is full of encouraging facts. Half the churches in Ohio owe their start, and much of their growth, to the fostering help and care of the Ohio Christian Missionary Society. And to the work of this same society must be credited largely the rich offerings made annually to foreign missions, general home missions, church extension, education and the work of the Christian Woman's Board. Make more churches, more workers, better workers. Pray more, give more, work more and rejoice more in the realization that the labor is never in vain.

WINS HER HEART

Food That Helps Baby and the Family
Pleases Mother.

Show a mother how to feed her baby so that it will be healthy, rosy and plump and grow up strong and sturdy and the mother's gratitude is everlasting.

A mother says: "Five weeks ago I weaned baby, but could not get her to take any kind of food until I tried Grape-Nuts which she relished from the first and on it she has plumped up and blossomed into a fat, chubby little girl.

"I feed Grape-Nuts to her regularly and use three packages a week for baby and my three-year-old boy alone, and I find that it regulates their bowels and keeps them nourished, strong and in good health all the time.

"Since feeding my children on Grape-Nuts I have used absolutely no medicine for either of them. Such food as this that does such wonders wins its way to a mother's heart. Please accept our thanks for the good your food has done in our family where we all eat it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Children will grow up strong and healthy or weak and puny according to the food given. Grape-Nuts is a complete and perfect food made on scientific lines and this is easily proved by trial.

Do State Missions Pay?

When a person is asked to make an investment, one of the first questions that suggests itself is, will it pay? Some investments yield immediate results, while in others equally as good the time of profit-yielding is more remote. Missionary enterprises are no exception to the rule.

If one is looking for a mission field that will yield the greatest immediate results, he need not look beyond our own home land, and "Iowans" cannot find a more fruitful field than our own state. For a number of years our State Missionary Society, known as "The Iowa Christian Convention," has averaged one addition to the church for every $4 of missionary money that passes through our treasury.

In order that you may have an idea of the outlay of money necessary to establish a congregation in Iowa and maintain it until it is self-supporting, I will give you five examples. These churches are in county seat towns of from two to twenty thousand population.

The places I refer to are Webster City, Hampton, Mason City, Keokuk and Corydon. Until 1892, with one exception, there was no church at either of the places mentioned. Keokuk had an old, dilapidated building that was torn down as worthless, and a congregation that could not support a man at $600. The work at Webster City, Hampton and Mason City was started in 1892, at Keokuk in 1896, and Corydon in 1900. Each of these churches are firmly established with congregations and buildings that compare favorably with the best in their respective cities.

The following table gives the population, cost to establish the church, present membership and present value of the church property.

Population	Cost the I. C. C.	Members	Val. Ch. prop.
Webster City 5,000	$448.45	365	$15,000
Hampton 3,000	425.77	437	15,000
Mason City 8,000	475	1,100	30,000
Keokuk 20,000	520	457	20,000
Corydon 2,000	461	195	12,000
	$2,330.22	2,554	$92,000

The above diagram shows that for every dollar invested by the I. C. C. we have one church member and almost $50 in church property, and only three of the congregations have been in existence ten years.

In addition to the above results, these congregations have produced four preachers, sent hundreds of Christians to other fields, have been active in all lines of church work and have been liberal in the support of all of our missionary enterprises. The tenth year of their existence the congregations at Hampton and Mason City contributed $716 to the foreign and C. W. B. M. missions, which was almost as much as it cost the I. C. C. to establish the two congregations and maintain them until they were self-supporting.

You may think that the above are exceptional cases. That may be true, but the churches at Vinton and South Ottumwa make better showings than either of those mentioned, and I believe that under fairly favorable conditions the same results can be produced in any ordinary Iowa town.

If you want immediate results from your missionary investments, you cannot do better than to put your money in Iowa missions.

Systematic Care of the Weak Churches.

The weak church needs sympathy. It is an inspiration for it to feel that though it be weak and small, it is a part of something strong and great, though it may realize but little of what men prize as success, yet it is a fragment of a mighty host whose banner ever moves onward.

The band of Spartans under Leonidas, in standing their ground even till death, added more lustre to the Hellenic name than had it been a part of Alexander's victorious army.

The eyes of Greece were upon the Spartans to inspire them to heroic deeds. So the eyes of the church and the eyes of heaven are upon the little bands of Christian soldiers who are hard beset by countless foes.

They need our sympathy. Sympathy is a thing of peace. It is as needful to the soldier as gun and bayonet. The weak church needs it more than dollars, a good house, or an elegant preacher.

Let the weak church be brought into touch with the great body of our people. Let them be represented in our conventions. Let them have a part in all our general benevolences, thus they will show themselves worthy of our sympathy; and will increase our interest in them, and realizing a fellowship with the brotherhood, they will do service so valiant that they will scarcely reckon themselves as weak.

The weak church needs counsel, and it is scarcely possible to care for a weak church unless it knows itself to be in need of counsel.

The weak and worthy church is ever ready to receive instruction in the management of its affairs. To meet this demand some system is wanting. Our state officials seldom think of giving advice, and the weak church seldom asks for counsel until an unworthy preacher is to be gotten rid of, or a pecuniary entanglement threatens bankruptcy. Let the weak church be so trained in the management of its affairs, that it will never have a financial difficulty or an unworthy pastor.

The weak church needs protection. The weak are ever the prey of the common enemy. The fleet and the strong escape. The sick and the young are devoured by wolves. The shepherd of old time carried a weapon to fight the enemy of the sheep. Some one today should carry a "big stick" for the wolf in sheep's clothing. Or perhaps it would be better and more in accord with western enterprise and efficiency to organize for a wolf hunt and rid the whole land of the obnoxious beasts.

Missions and the State.

One of the most marked characteristics, as well as the most gratifying, of the opening years of this new century, is the revival of the spirit of patriotism. Men are being reminded that they owe to their country, their state and their local communities, certain duties which cannot be neglected without serious peril to both public and private interests. They are told that it may be just as brave to live for their country as to die for it, and that to preserve our political institutions from the corruption of the professional politician is as necessary as to defend the flag from treason or rebellion. Political and municipal reform are being advocated everywhere, and actually effected in places. If this wave of reform is to continue to rise till it sweeps away the vast accumulations of political corruption from which we are now suffering, it will be because the public conscience is educated beyond the power of commercial greed or political ambition to deprave it. This is the special mission of the Church of Christ. Above all other agencies in the world it is set for the quickening and education of the conscience. The true Christian is a man who carries his convictions of right and duty into every act of daily life. Nothing morally wrong can be to him politically or commercially right.

To carry this conception of life to all men, and make it their own, is the purpose of all mission work. Especially ought this to lead to larger effort in state mission work. For the state is a political unit of great value in the estimation of the citizen. Its interests come more closely home to him than those of the country as a whole, and he feels a greater responsibility for the welfare of the commonwealth in which he is a dweller. It ought to be the aim of the Disciples of Christ to evangelize every portion of our country. But much of this work must be accomplished through state missionary channels. Thus its direction will be in the hands of those who live within the territory to be evangelized, and opportunities can be more readily seen, and more promptly utilized, than by any agency at great distance from the field.

Let there be a rally of all our people on the first Sunday in November, to the support of state missions, and we shall see as one result the elevation of conscience to its proper throne, and the purification of the springs of political and social life. It will likewise bring about a more generous support of all other missionary enterprises, for it will strengthen and enlarge the base of supplies, by increasing the number of self-supporting churches.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

A State Rally Day.

Should there be a State Rally Day? It would seem that there could be but one answer to this question, an affirmative. The very commonness and familiarity of our own, tend to inappreciation. The virtues and qualities, opportunities and gifts, possessed by our own, appear to have greater value and worth when seen in others. It frequently becomes necessary, therefore, that special attention be placed upon our own to lead us to appreciate our opportunities and ability, that we may not only do that which is worthy of us, but as well that which is our manifest duty. The familiarity and closeness of our own state frequently makes us insensible to its great needs and opportunities in missionary work. When we think of a field for missionary labor we are too apt to look out beyond the borders of our own state. We need something which will make us conscious of our own possibilities, appreciative of the wonderful opportunities within our own borders for preaching the gospel.

A State Rally Day will serve this end. It will bring our thoughts and attention to our own. It will point out the great missionary fields that are waiting cultivation; reveal to the astonished eyes of our brethren the neglected portions of the state; the strategic points waiting to be taken, the weak and struggling churches which need only a little support and encouragement to make them strong churches from which the gospel may sound forth even unto the ends of the earth. The State Rally Day is needed as an educational feature. State work is indifferently supported by many of our churches because they are not intelligently informed of the urgent needs of the work. Few would refuse assistance if they saw the needs.

It is not because our churches love our general missionary interests more than their own state, but because through the church papers, the national conventions, the visits of the representatives of these interests, the missionary rallies in the churches, they are made to see the great needs and opportunities of our general missionary work. Intelligent minds make liberal hearts. Many churches have their rallies for foreign missions, for American missions, their Children's Day, their boys' and girls' rally day for America, but observe their day for state missions with a brief announcement, a sermon and a collection. It is not to be wondered at if the offering be small; for the people have given in keeping with the emphasis laid upon this work. The State Rally Day is needed for educational and inspirational purposes.

Every year the number of missionary rallies conducted in strategic points by our Foreign Missionary Society is increasing. Each year the American Board has added emphasis to the home missionary rallies. The same reasons which make valuable these rallies to the general missionary interests, make the State Rally Day valuable to the cause of state missions.

How shall the State Rally Day be conducted? As other missionary rallies are conducted.

1. Begin with early announcement. Awaken interest, increase interest, deepen interest in this coming day until expectancy runs high.

2. Use the prayer-meeting for at least two services.

3. Conduct a symposium on state missions. Let this be on Sunday morning before State Day, and consist of three or four short papers by the most consecrated people of the church on the various phases of the work. These papers should have an educative and inspiring value.

4. Distribute state mission literature at the close of the service.

5. Send a pastoral letter to every family with envelope for each member of the church.

6. On State Day let the pastor's sermon be his greatest effort for state missions.

7. As a climax, take the offering, without singing, while the hearts of the people are on fire with enthusiasm.

This plan is suggested, but another will do as well, if it is worked. Yes, by all means, let us have the State Rally Day!

The Lone Star State for Christ.

There are many good mission fields in the United States. In fact there is not a state or territory which is bad. But Texas is the best of them all. Her climate and soil, coupled with her vast and varied resources, at last are being recognized abroad, and people are coming here by the thousands and tens of thousands. Many in the north and east, delicate in health, are coming to this kindly climate to escape the rigorous winters of the old homes. In many such cases the entire family will come with a single invalid. And when, as is generally the case, the health-seeker is improved, and the good news is sent back, others in the same condition come. Many young and middle-aged business men, with money, energy and skill, are coming here because of the fact that it has recently become perhaps the best business center under the flag.

And our people are impressible, as southern people generally are. Our preachers are not superior to those of other states, but I think I can safely say that their success in soul-winning is greater.

If I mistake not, we are soon to have the best bred people in all the land. The constant intermarriages of the northern and southern people will produce this superior race. All of this implies that the war fever has disappeared; and while our people still go wild when Dixie is played, they also cheer most heartily the Star-Spangled Banner.

The products of our soil include almost everything. We raise in vast abundance, and with little labor, cotton, corn, oats, wheat, rye, barely, rice, sugar-cane and grass of almost every kind. Our cattle are known the world over, and the same will soon be true of our hogs. And as for fruits and melons of endless varieties, we are second to no place in the land. The oil and mineral wealth is also great, and it is being rapidly developed, all of which means that Texas is destined soon to outrank the other states in these respects, as she now outranks them in territory. Therefore let the Lone Star State be captured for Christ.

SPOILED CHILDREN

Usually Make Sickly Men and Women.

The "spoiled" child usually makes a weak, sickly man or woman because such a youngster has its own way about diet and eats and drinks things that are unfitted for any stomach and sickness results.

"I was always a delicate, spoiled child and my parents used to let me drink coffee because I would cry for it," says a Georgia young woman:

"When I entered school my nervousness increased and my parents thought it was due to my going to school, so they took me out again. But I did not get any better and my headaches got worse and weakened me so that I was unfit for any duty. Sometimes I would go a whole day without any other nourishment than a cup of coffee.

"Last spring I had a bad attack of the Grippe and when I recovered I found that coffee nauseated me so I could not drink it and even a few swallows would cause a terrible burning in my stomach. It was at this time that a friend who had been much benefited by the use of Postum suggested that I try this food drink. I found it simply delicious and have used it ever since and the results speak for themselves. I have gained 12 pounds and my nerves are as steady as any one's.

"I consider myself well and strong and I make it a point now to take a cup of Postum with a cracker or two as soon as I come home from school in the afternoon. Postum with crackers or a biscuit makes my luncheon. It certainly saved my life for I know coffee would have killed me in time had I continued drinking it.

"I have a young girl friend, a stenographer, who declares nothing strengthens and refreshes her like Postum and she has a little oil stove in her office and makes a cup of Postum at noon-time. I have recommended this wonderful beverage to many of my friends who know what it has done for me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Work of The State Boards

The Empire State.

In evangelistic effort this has been the most fruitful year in the history of the New York Christian Missionary Society. The mission points alone report additions during the year amounting to 212 as against 95 last year, thus making the per cent of gain in our mission churches 39 per cent for the year! Will anyone venture to say that New York is not a profitable mission field, when the per cent of increase in the mission points alone for this one year is equal to the per cent of gain of the whole brotherhood for the last eighteen years? The total gain of the churches during the year is 1,058 with the losses aggregating 291, leaving a net gain of 757, or about nine per cent.

We believe that we are on the threshold of much greater things in New York. We have not only the largest mission field in America, but, we believe, one of the most profitable. A new church and Sunday-school of 58 has just been organized at Dunkirk, the home of the great Brooks locomotive works which employs about 3,000 men. A city of 17,000 people with only about 500 members in the Protestant churches. A great field for us. Only one of a score of places from which comes the Macedonian cry. West Side Syracuse has a new property just purchased by the First Church, and a Sunday-school of 100 awaiting the evangelist to hold a meeting and organize a church. Amsterdam, a city of 30,000 with 20 Disciples awaits our entrance. We are starting out to increase the offerings for state work one hundred per cent this coming year.

The state has a population of 8,000,000 and we have a membership of 9,718; one for each 850 people in the state. And there are more people in New York unreached altogether by the gospel of Christ than in any other two states of the Union.

STEPHEN J. COREY, Cor. Sec. and Evangelist.

The Year in Colorado.

During the missionary year ending September 30, the state board aided, a part or all of the year, 13 churches, viz.: Grand Junction, Broadway Church, Pueblo, La Junta, Lamar, Las Animas, Florence, Colorado City, East Side Church, Denver, Windsor, Monte Vista, Craig, Golden and Greeley. Their membership is 1,179; net gain, 204; membership of their Sunday-schools, 1,519. Eight have auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M., with a membership of 146. Seven have Christian Endeavor Societies and seven junior societies. Ten of the 13 congregations own their own houses of worship, valued at $37,650. Amount raised for local church and Sunday-school work, $14,559.70; for missions, $838.06; grand total, $15,400.76. Three of these churches have become self-supporting during the year—Colorado City, Grand Junction and Broadway Church, Pueblo. At Florence, Edwin Lobach donated two-thirds of the price of three elegant building lots, and a house of worship is now being planned. Colorado City, also, is building. J. M. Cobbs and wife, of Windsor, gave a fine lot for a parsonage, and the building is now under foot. Four churches have been organized—Greeley, Meeker, Vineland and Ordway. New buildings are almost completed at Rocky Ford, Atwood and Vernon. Vineland is about to let the contract.

F. F. Walters labored as evangelist in northwestern Colorado from May to September. He visited Meeker, Craig, Hayden, Steamboat Springs and Yampa, Col., and Baggs and Dixon, Wy., just over the northern Colorado line. He organized at Meeker, with 38 members, and investigated the field at the other places, gathering much useful information, besides baptizing a goodly number, and receiving several otherwise. He did genuine pioneer work. Northwestern Colorado is coming into special prominence through the building of the Moffatt railroad, now in process of construction.

C. A. Hill and wife held a short meeting at Paonia, during which valuable church property was purchased.

Twenty-three meetings were held during the year. Six churches reduced their indebtedness $8,551. The total amount raised for state work was $1,559. We voted at Pueblo last week to raise $2,500 this year. During the last five years $1,400 more has been raised for state work than in the first 15 years of the organized work in Colorado.

During the coming year we are asked to support the new church at Greeley, the seat of the state normal school; to aid Golden, the seat of the state school of mines; to enter northeastern Colorado at Sterling; to give assistance to portions of the Arkansas valley east of Pueblo; to help Paonia and adjacent country; to strengthen the churches in the Grand and Roaring Fork valleys on the western slope; to supplement the salary of an evangelist for northwestern Colorado, where Brothers Walters has labored, besides helping some of the places formerly helped, and which must be aided yet for a time. Do not lose sight of the fact that Colorado is missionary ground. We need $5,000 to enable us to meet the real needs.

The Work in Maryland, Delaware and D. C.

Our missionary work in the above territory is carried on under one organization. It was organized in Rockville, Md., November 12, 1878, as the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland and the District of Columbia, Delaware having since been included in the District. We celebrate our 25th anniversary this year.

The report of the first convention showed the number of the churches ten, with two mission points; membership, 1,635; additions during the year, 247; number in Sunday-schools, 1,228; number of preachers, 6; amount paid for preaching, $6,245; amount for missions, $180.

We now have one church in Delaware, four in the District of Columbia, and twenty four in Maryland, twenty-nine in all, besides three or four missions not fully organized. These congregations show a gain of 19 or over 180 per cent in twenty-five years, in the number of churches.

The report of our convention in 1902, shows a membership of 4,862, a gain of 3,227, or 197 per cent. The additions reported in 1902 are 815, a gain of 568, or 229 per cent. The amount paid for foreign missions in 1902, $1,021; for home missions, $855; for local missions, $2,996. This, not counting other offerings, is a gain of $4,692. The average for missions is nearly $125 per member.

In 1902 we have twenty-one preachers, a gain of 15 or about 250 per cent in the preaching force. Our Sunday-schools reported 3,036 enrolled, a gain of 1,808, or 163 per cent.

In 1902 we reported eight missionaries at work. Our state board with the assistance of the American Christian Missionary Society sustained one of these and helped to support seven, the C. W. B. M. also helping support one of the seven. These eight missionaries reported 2,482 days of work, 811 sermons, 161 baptisms, 33 received by letter, and 45 otherwise, a total of 239, these being a part of the 815 reported above. All our churches contribute to state missions. A certain amount is apportioned to each church which they are asked to raise. Most of our churches contribute liberally to other missionary boards. One preacher among us gives two-tenths to the Lord and the others set the example of liberality for their flocks.

Many new and inviting fields are open for us to enter. The great need is more workers and more money. Seven years ago we had three churches in Baltimore, including a small colored church; now there are six and a splendid lot secured for the seventh.

Fifteen years ago we had one church in Washington with a small mission; now there are four and a good lot secured for the fifth. Within the past nine years, twelve of our churches have erected new houses of worship and four have secured houses already built.

We come to our Jubilee Convention rejoicing that we will close the year free from debt. We will emphasize the need of more attention to state work. The fields are white. In the twenty-three counties of Maryland we have no churches in sixteen of them, and churches in but two county-seats. We pray for more laborers. Let our rallying cry be "State Work to the Front."

The Disciples of Christ in Iowa 1836-1900.

Our state, known among the Indians as "The Beautiful Country," was not settled by the whites until 1788, when Julian Dubuque took up his abode where the city now stands that bears his name. In 1836, ten years before Iowa became a state, the plea of the Disciples was proclaimed within its borders. At that time David R. Chance did some preaching in what later became Lee county, and the first Saturday and Lord's day in July of the same year, organized a congregation of eight Disciples at the point called Lost Creek, six miles north of Ft. Madison. The charter members of the congregation were: Joshua Owen, David R. Chance, Silog Paine, Elizabeth Paine, Samuel Morrison, Jemima Chance, Joseph Morrison and Isaac Biggs, each agreeing to take the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament as their rule of faith and practice. On the same day Peter P. Jones, Nancy Owen, Drucilla Smith, Cynthia Young and Cassandra Owen were baptized and united with the church. Joshua Owen was chosen elder, and since the day it was organized the congregation has not failed to keep up regular services.

In 1843 a young man rode up to the home of John A. Drake in Ft. Madison, and inquired of Mrs. Drake if she had a book in her house that told her to entertain strangers. The good woman promptly replied, "Yes, sir. Our family Bible is always on the center table." This woman was the mother of our own Gen. F. M. Drake, the founder of our university of which the entire brotherhood are so justly proud, and the young stranger was Aaron Chatterton, who had ridden all the way on horseback from his home in Clearmont county, Ohio. Brother Chatterton has the distinction of being the first Disciple to devote his entire time to the gospel ministry in Iowa. He became a great preacher, and until his death, was a leader among the people. In 1849 Nelson A. McConnell came to the state, and in 1852, Brothers Chatterton and McConnell are said to be the only men of our people in the state who were devoting their entire time to the ministry. Other men were here who faithfully proclaimed the word, but they were engaged in other pursuits.

Among the early ministers I find the names of John Rigdon, James Ross, Arthur Miller, James Graut, Chas. Levan, H. C. Mott, J. W. Gill, S. H. Benham, Jonas Hartzell, John Martindale, Pardee Butler, Daniel Bates, D. P. Henderson, Allen Hickey, S. B. Downing and J. K. Cornell. From the very first these brethren and their associates were tireless in their efforts to advance the interests of the Master's kingdom. In 1848 the state was divided into two districts and an attempt at co-operative work made. In 1850, Daniel Bates began publishing the Western Evangelist. This, our first paper, was a helpful auxiliary in getting the plea before the people and in advancing the general interests of the church.

During "the forties" the brethren came together in their yearly meetings, but at Marion, May 23-26, what was considered the first great state meeting was held. At this meeting there were 39 congregations and 2,009 members reported, and in 1851, Brother Bates published a statement that there were seven preachers at work in the state, and ten years later about twice that number.

The Iowa Christian Missionary Society was organized at the state meeting held at Mt. Pleasant, June 8-11, 1855. The officers elected for the first year were: Aaron Chatterton, president; Joshua Swallow and J. H. Bacon, vice-presidents; John Bowman, recording secretary; Arthur Miller, corresponding secretary, and W. A. Saunders, treasurer. The directors were: Jonas Hartzell, F. B. Lowery, Jeremiah Murphy, N. A. McConnell, Alvin Saunders, J. L. L. Terry, S. H. Benham, A. Harlan, J. A. Drake, Samuel Knight, Samuel Downey and Wm. C. Paine. At this meeting $407.50 was subscribed as a basis for missionary work, and N. A. McConnell was selected as the first standard-bearer. Copying from the records of that meeting, I find that after speaking of the deep feeling that prevailed, Brother Chatterton said, "I have reason to think—nay, I will say—it is my faith, that where there is union and tears and prayers and action, that God's cause will prevail. It was then proposed to sing, 'Go with thy servant, Lord,' and we gave him (McConnell) the right hand of fellowship, that he might go to the 'destitute;' then bowing in prayer, Brother Grant addressed the throne of grace in behalf of the church, in behalf of the cause, in behalf of him who was our first state missionary."

From the first, these brethren regarded evangelization and Christian education as being of equal importance, and at the state convention held at Marion in June, 1856, it was decided to erect and endow a college, and in October of the same year it was agreed to locate the college at Oskaloosa. The new enterprise was pushed as rapidly as possible, and in September, 1861, Geo. T. and J. W. Carpenter began teaching in the new college building.

The faithful men who sought to promote the co-operative work met with the usual discouragements that confronted our brethren in those days. The fierce sectarian opposition from without, the ultra independence of the local congregation and the lack of unity in plan of work were such that it was only with the greatest sacrifice and heroism that progress was made. In the records of 1869 the statistical report shows 50 meeting houses, 67 Sunday-schools, 143 congregations and 10,592 members.

At the state convention held at Marion in August, 1870, the missionary work was reorganized under the name of the Iowa Christian Convention and remains so at this time. The first officers were, Allen Hickey, president; F. Waiden, secretary; J. H. Drake, treasurer. From that time on the state missionary work assumed more definite form and the results were far more satisfactory. The statistical report on 1883 gives the number of preachers to be 106, meeting houses 182, members 16,133. In 1890 there were 220 congregations and 25,000 members. In 1900 there are 460 congregations, 436 houses of worship and 55,562 members.

Since our missionary work was organized in 1855, 164 congregations have been organized by its agents and it has given assistance to more than two-thirds of the congregations in the state. From the foregoing it will be seen that God has wrought a great work through the co-operative efforts of his people, and, while we are devoutly thankful for the splendid results of the past, we feel that the work has been fairly begun. We only have one congregation to 125 square miles of territory and 5,000 of the population with 15 counties and 33 county seats wherein we have no church.

With our well organized system, a uniform plan of work and perfect harmony within our ranks, we are certainly in condition to be used by our God in establishing his church in Iowa ("the beautiful land").

Our state is divided into five districts. The northwest district includes 29 counties, the northeast 25 counties, the central 7, and the southeast 22, and the southwest 16 counties. The districts and counties are organized auxiliary to the state, thus making what we call "The State-Wide Plan," in which the missionary work is managed by the state and district boards jointly. All missionary money passes through the state treasury. In addition to the clerical work, the corresponding secretary acts as state superintendent of missions. Our board of managers consists of five district secretaries, together with five men elected annually at the state convention. Those elected at the state convention constitute the executive committee. The present board is as follows: A. M. Haggard, president; T. F. Odenweller, vice-president; J. J. Groves, recording secretary; J. M. Lucas, treasurer; S. B. Denny, corresponding secretary, with the district secretaries, C. E. Wells, of the northwest district; Jas. T. Nichols, northeast; W. S. Lemon, central; J. P. McKnight, southwest; and W. T. Fisher, of the southwest district.

What Texas Missions Have Done.

The summary of what Texas missions have accomplished and the report of B. B. Sanders, corresponding secretary for the year ending June 1, 1903, give solid encouragement to the workers from men whose experience in and knowledge of this field give to their words great weight. Brother Sanders' report shows 86 additions, and $8,888.35 raised for state missions. The time was when we prayed for "open doors;" now they appeal to us by tens and twenties. Never was there larger opportunities nor more inviting fields than are to be found in Texas now. Have we not come into the kingdom for such a time as this?

Dallas, Tex. J. C. MASON, Cor. Sec.

It is often asked, what are you doing in the field? Are churches being planted? Is the money contributed being used wisely? These are legitimate questions and should be answered.

At San Antonio we began with a small and discouraged membership, and for years labored under disadvantages. We now have a congregation of 350 members of as good people as are in the city, a good Sunday-school and working church with a property worth $35,000.

Houston had some 20 discouraged members and no prestige, no place to meet; now she has 500 members, one of the best Sunday-schools in the state, and property worth $25,000, and is a liberal contributor to all the missions of the church.

Galveston has a good house and parsonage—together worth $15,000, a congregation of 100 members, a good Sunday-school, and is building up continually, though a difficult place.

El Paso was a most unpromising field at first, but now has a flourishing church and good house and is felt as a power for good in that city. Property worth $20,000.

Tyler, Gonzales, Luling, Goliad, Beeville, Albany, Marlin and many other places have most of them flourishing churches with comfortable houses to worship in, as the direct result of Texas missions. No less than one hundred churches have been organized by the Texas missionary work, and the time would fail me to tell of Huntsville, San Marcos, Longview, Mineola, Hillsboro, Mineral Wells and many other churches that were revived and put to work and are now doing good service for the Master's cause by the touch of Texas missions through the consecrated workers sent out over this empire state.

Every dollar you put into this work of the Lord, yields a good dividend. There are still those who are telling that the board uses the money themselves, which is as false as false can be, and those who say such things know better, or could if they would investigate. Every dollar goes to support the men who are in the field preaching the gospel and building up the cause of the Master. You can't invest a part of what the Lord gives you better than to aid this cause.

The first Sunday in November is the time for an offering for this cause. Let each minister and congregation see to it that all who love the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity, have fellowship in this work. There is no place where the same amount of money will accomplish more for the Lord than in Texas. "An offering from every preacher and each member of his congregation for Texas missions the first Sunday in November." Let this be heralded from every pulpit in our state from now until it is realized.

Missouri Missions.

Here in Missouri we have over 3,000,000 of people. One-third of these are children too young to belong to any religious organization. Not over 800,000 of the others are members of any church, leaving 1,300,000 who are out in the world away from God living, dying without hope. Over half of them, 650,000, never enter the doors of a church at all! What is your duty, and mine, to this great horde of the unsaved that at our very doors are perishing for the need of the Word of life? Is it not our "business?" Then are we not of him whose business it was to leave all and come and die for a poor, lost world.

A large number of these unsaved, in fact the overwhelming majority, are in our cities. Here the two extremes of the most unselfish devotion and the most utter abandon in sin, meet. Thousands live therein into whose homes the form of the Man of God never enters, where his voice is never heard in prayer and song, and into whose darkened lives and miserable souls the light, the joy of God's truth never comes. Can we view such a spectacle with indifference? Not if the spirit of God dwell in us.

Into the largest of these cities, St. Louis, this next year is to come the world. From every part of this round habitable earth the children of men are to come. As it was on the day of Pentecost so will it be there, "Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, in Pontus and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and in the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians." These will be there and more, from Europe, Asia, Africa, America and from the islands of the sea, they are coming, and never since that first Pentecost with its 3,000 converts has there been such a chance to preach the Word to the whole creation.

Can we do it? With your help we can. What an opportunity to tell the world of the scripturalness of our plea for a return to primitive Christianity! What a chance to push the idea of the sinfulness of divisions and strife among the people of God! What an opportunity to preach the union of those who love our Lord Jesus! Never was time so opportune, never was period so gracious, never was opportunity so great as this. Shall we embrace it? Then let the first Sunday in November find us ready, heart and hand, for this gracious holy service. Let not our state lag in this great work. Let Missouri move up abreast of the leaders, ay, let Missouri take her rightful place and lead.

The Indian Territory as a Mission Field.

The territorial board of the Indian Territory during the last year has not done what it might, and ought to have done, but with the limited means we have had at our command we feel that we have done something. During the year the territorial board, in connection with the national board, has assisted twelve churches, churches that without this would have been helpless. But you will say that is a small matter; we know this, and yet when you remember that in the entire territory we have but fifteen churches that we can rely upon for any support in this work, and the most of them weak, it will be seen we have done a great work. During the year we have built five new houses of worship, had four hundred additions to the church; this has been the work of the board, or the two boards working together. Our greatest need in the Indian Territory is more men of the right kind, men that will go out and risk all for the cause of the Master. With twenty good men, men who have proven their armor, who know the joy that comes of self-sacrificing service, men who have faith in the promises of God, we can double our strength in the territory the next twelve months; we may not double our numbers, but our strength. I am sure we have the men if we could only find them. We also are in great need of houses of worship; this you can see at once when I tell you that for our one hundred churches, we only have in the territory nineteen houses, leaving eighty-one entirely without a church home and experience has proven that it is very hard to keep a church alive without a home, or house to meet in that they can call their own. Money spent now in this country in this way will soon return it one-hundred fold. Thirteen of our churches this year paid to home missions nine hundred dollars. Help the Indian Territory now to get the gospel to this people, and then to get them into houses and she will fall into line at once with the mighty host for the evangelization of the world.

The Work in Michigan.

Last year under the direction of our state board, 21 places received more or less help. There were 185 persons baptized, and 84 others added to the churches. There was only one man in the general field for all his time. This year we have four evangelists in the field—two in the general field and two located with mission churches.

We reported a net gain of 500 members in Michigan a year ago. This year promises far larger results.

W. H. Kindred, the Ionia evangelist working under the direction of our state board, started the work in Belding in July. They now have 87 members and a lot, and are about to build.

The church at Traverse City has over 250 members. They increased 100 last year. A $10,000 building will soon be dedicated.

The young church at Grand Rapids has a membership of over 125.

The churches paid $9,200 on building debts last year.

The new work taken up this year includes Hart, South Haven, Lansing, Belding, St. Johns and Frankfort. Others fields are calling to us.

We have at present in Michigan 112 churches and 11,500 members. We aim at having by 1909, 150 churches, 25,000 members and $100,000 raised for a Bible college at Ann Arbor.

We have in Michigan 83 counties. There are 41 counties where we have no churches. We have 68 churches in country places and villages of less than 500 of a population. There are 28 places of 1,000 population and over, where we have 32 churches. We have churches in only 18 county seats. Six of these were started within the last five years. There are 154 towns and cities of over 1,000 population where we have no churches. There are few churches in the northern part of the lower peninsula, and not a church in the 15 counties of the upper peninsula.

Our watchword for this year is $3,000 from the churches for Michigan missions. Of this the Ionia church has already promised $1,000. The day for larger things is at hand. We are just entering Lansing, the state capital.

If the churches sustain us this year in our undertakings, we are confident the number of evangelists in the field can be doubled next year.

Every church should take the offering the first Lord's day in November.

Kansas—Her Opportunities and Victories.

If America is another name for opportunity, it is certainly true of Kansas, the geographical center of the United States. Opportunities for the cattlemen, husbandman and tradesman, for the merchantman, oil man and gas man. But especially is this true of the state respecting the preaching of the gospel. The people of the east are here without so much of their conservatism and prejudice; these having been lost in transit. In this receptive soil, New Testament Christianity takes root quickly and grows rapidly.

There are vast areas of the Sunflower State untouched by the Disciples of Christ. There are thirteen counties in which we have no church. There are nineteen towns of 1,000 people and over in which we have no organization. There are twenty-six county-seats where we are practically unknown. All these fields are ripe. In many of them we have a few scattered brethren who are uttering the Macedonian cry.

But while there remains yet much land to be possessed, it is encouraging to know that something has been, and is being, done to establish primitive Christianity in the state. A few examples will illustrate the nature of the work of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society in this respect.

Ottawa, a county-seat of 8,000 people, aided by the K. C. M. S., for about four years altogether, now self-supporting, maintaining full time preaching, and contributing to all missionary enterprises. Kansas City, Kansas, Central, a scattered and discouraged membership in 1900; reorganized by the K. C. M. S., is still being cared for and has grown to a membership of 200, thoroughly organized in all departments is giving to missions and has a $5,000 building lot partly paid for. Oberlin, a county-seat, church organized, house built and nearly all paid for, full time preaching, is a promising field. Great Bend, county-seat of Barton county, meeting held by the K. C. M. S.; organization effected and house built. At Abilene, the county-seat of Dickinson county, the building was about to be sold for debt. By aid of the K. C. M. S. the house was saved, finally paid for and the congregation made self-supporting.

Besides these, mention might be made of many others where aid has been given, such as Clay Center, Colby, Concordia, Oakley, Florence, Perry and Marysville.

In addition to the above, fully one hundred and fifty churches have been touched and helped in a financial way and in many other ways by the State Mission Board within the last four years, not to speak of the work of former years. At the present time more attention is being given to evangelistic work. A special fund has been raised for this purpose, and the evangelist is already at work organizing new churches.

The State Society is nearest the churches of any of our missionary organizations; consequently in a better position to know the needs of the field and render intelligent aid. Moreover, the national organizations reach the churches largely through the state organization, its conventions, secretaries papers, etc. For these and many other reasons the State Society should be generously sustained, and State Mission Day be made a great day in all the churches.

Wisconsin State Missions.

Under the able leadership of C. M. Kreidler, of Milwaukee, our Wisconsin State Missionary Association passed through the most successful year, in many ways, of its history. Every one of our twenty-nine churches, with one exception, reported offerings for state work. The largest amount given was by the Footville Church. It averaged more than one dollar per member, besides raising more than all of its other apportionments in home, foreign and Church Extension work. The average in the state was 44 cents per member for state missions. Five churches were organized, among the number, one in the great city of Superior and two small Norwegian churches. We are, I believe, the only state that is doing work among the Scandinavians. Many of them, by independent study of God's word, have come to almost the same position that we occupy, but they need instruction and organization. We are planning to put one of their own men among them. We have had a church at Chippewa Falls for a number of years, where they have been ministered to on Sundays by one of their own number who has worked hard, six days in the week, in the shops. We need more money to support this man for all his time and to furnish them literature in their own language. Aside from this people, the great hindrance to our work is the large per cent of foreign population. One-fourth of the people are foreign born. Half are born of foreign parents. Our church membership increased last year a little more than eleven and one-half per cent. This year we are planning for larger things and our battle cry is, "Wisconsin State Missions to the Front." May every state take up a similar slogan and rest not until the work is accomplished, for our states are the basis of supplies for all missionary work. If we Christianize them we will soon Christianize the world. God said to the children of Israel, in the face of seeming unsurmountable difficulties: "Go forward." So God says to-day, to every member in our states, "Go forward." May we not prove cowards or faithless ones, but obedient soldiers.

The Situation in Western Pennsylvania.

The centennial in nineteen-nine is the cry that is arousing the Disciples of Christ of western Pennsylvania to a new and greater effort and interest in state mission work.

There are 2,300,000 population in the 25 counties which comprise the western Pennsylvania district, with only 113 churches; the foundation, however, has been well laid and the churches partake of the energy and prosperity which comes to the center in the great iron manufacturing and mining industry. Alive to every phase of our growing church life, there is no more promising mission field anywhere.

The Western Pennsylvania Board are planning to enter every one of the ten counties where now there are no churches of Christ, and to lay siege to the 14 county seats that are without organizations. There are 148 towns and cities of over 1,000 population who have no church.

This large unoccupied territory has many scattered Disciples who are awaiting the coming of the state missionary and will help in planting the cause.

There is a large number of foreigners who are approachable and need the gospel. The board is supporting Miss Anna C. Vasicek as reader and missionary among them.

The work that has been done has given confidence that greater things may be done, and we believe that the next six years will bring results that will be a matter of profound rejoicing for all.

The field partakes more of the nature of the conservative east, and any work to succeed, demands that it shall be laid hold of with a firm hand, and the Western Pennsylvania Board has made a good record by staying with every mission until it is safely self-supporting. The American Christian Missionary Society is helping to support Fred A. Bright as evangelist. A number of churches are caring for missions at promising points and supplement the work of the board.

If every one of the 15,094 Disciples in western Pennsylvania will give something toward state missions there can be more missions started, many more men supported, many more souls won for the kingdom of God.

Kentucky Missions.

In Kentucky there are 17 county seats where we have no church at all, and as many more where we have weak ones that need help. There are eight counties in which we have not a single house of worship, and as many more where we have only one or two buildings of our own. There are between three and four hundred towns and villages in which we are not represented. These are not large, as a rule, for Kentucky is not a state of large towns. We ought to preach the gospel of the first century to these fields for their own sake. The demand is upon us also for the sake of the towns and cities of the present and the future, and the great West pleads with us to send them people already reached by the gospel, that they become factors in our growth and progress there. The future of our general home and foreign missionary work depends upon the evangelization of this territory. From these states to-day they receive their largest support, and if we cease to grow where we are strongest, it means ultimately decreasing support for these great enterprises.

If the past may be construed as a prophecy of the future, then we of Kentucky have a right to face the rising sun with hope in our hearts. During the past 18 years we have added, through state missions, 35,504 to our numbers; we have organized 200 congregations, built 145 houses of worship, and accomplished many other things to the advancement of the cause. Already during the past year our churches have made a decided advance in support of this work, both as to number contributing and the amount given. To the brotherhood of Kentucky is given a peculiar task. A large part of our neediest territory is occupied by the Highlanders of the South. Among them is found to-day the greatest activity in business development in the state. In many sections of that territory the people are largely without adequate opportunities for enjoying the blessings of the gospel. Our message is one that conquers its way easily with them. Our opportunities are great in that region of the state, and our responsibilities are commensurate with them. Our past history is glorious; but our future work may far transcend that, if we are wise in our day and generation.

We most earnestly appeal to our brotherhood to make November great by an advance movement in the interest of Kentucky missions. It is imperative. We cannot be loyal to our Lord and to our day and generation unless we do something worthy of our opportunities and the great commission under which we labor.

Indiana.

During the year ending May 1, 1903, the state board directed 61 meetings in weak or in new fields, with 1,131 additions. The state evangelist held 27 of these, with 503 additions. He also attended 28 district conventions, carried the correspondence, etc., and including all expenses, the cost per capita of additions was $1.07. Thirteen standing missions were carried by the state board, and the additions in these missions, and by other evangelists employed by the state, cost each $1.77, and the average for all was $1.20 per capita.

This demonstrates three things: 1. That the Indiana state board has given the closest attention to economy, as the operating expenses were practically nothing.

2. That our state fields are the richest territory on earth for the plea we make, and that a dollar will go farther in soul winning under the direction of state boards in their state fields than anywhere else.

3. That with more money, the cost of accessions per capita can still be reduced one-half, as the operating expenses with $25,000 would be no more than with $1,000.

Indiana has the densest Disciple population of any of the states: 940 churches, 124,000 members, 808 Sunday-schools, 120,000 officers and teachers and pupils, and 702 preachers, and yet we have occupied but one-third of our available territory; 14 unoccupied county seats, 104 cities and towns of 1,000 population and over, not yet entered, one county with but one church, and 15 counties with but two churches each, and cities growing at an amazing rate.

With a uniform state day, and the help of our general press, state missions are coming to the front all along the line. The preachers are a unit now on the necessity of state missions. We all rejoice with foreign and American boards in their splendid achievements, financially, this year; but it requires no prophet to foretell that we must reach our limit, unless we give attention to our state work, the base of supplies. I plead for the November offering for state missions to the end that we may be thoroughly loyal to the great commission and the Great Commissioner, and finally effectually preach the gospel to all the world.

T. J. LEGG.

Washington State Missions.

The policy pursued by the Washington State Board last year was to foster the churches already established. No evangelist was employed by the state board, the available resources being appropriated to aid in the support of pastors. Whitman county employed an evangelist about six months last year and some missionary meetings were held by others, notably at Prosser and Wenatchee, resulting in an organization at each place. This year the state board has adopted a different policy. A larger evangelism is being undertaken. A state evangelist has been employed who will also act as corresponding secretary. Bro. J. M. Morris was chosen for this work, and is already giving evidence of fitness for this very important work. For some years past the office of corresponding secretary has been with some one of the busy pastors. It is to be hoped that the present order may be continued. Bro. Morris will devote himself to work west of the Cascade Mountains.

Bro. L. F. Stephens has been employed to evangelize in Eastern Washington with his wife as singer. They are now in a good meeting at Castle Rock. From this meeting they will go east of the mountains, and a great work is confidently expected from them. The Whitman county board continues Bro. McConnell in that field this year, so we may reasonably expect a large harvest of souls in this missionary year.

The offerings from the churches last year did not at all represent the ability of our churches in the state; but good offerings are already being made for the support of the evangelists, and the success of the forward move is assured.

The president of the board, Bro. J. T. Eshelman, will devote some time to evangelistic work and many meetings will be held by pastors.

The members of the state board are J. T. Eshelman, president, Tacoma; W. S. Crockett, Olympia, and A. C. Vail, North Yakima, vice presidents; H. K. Pendleton, Tacoma, treasurer; B. H. Lingenfelter, Seattle, recording secretary; J. M. Morris, Sumner, corresponding secretary.

Let there be a rally in every church for the evangelization of this state. So much depends upon immediate action.

MORTON L. ROSE.

Nebraska Missions.

The missionary forces of Nebraska have never been more active. The year ending June 30 has been profitable, if not wholly satisfactory. We are never quite satisfied. The secretary has been in the field all the time; a new departure in Nebraska. Many weak congregations have been visited and encouraged. There have been several instances of revived churches that amounted practically to a resurrection from the dead. Two new congregations were organized. Membership in the two being over 100. One of them has provided a new house. The churches received 350 additions last year directly from the work of the missionary society. Of these 215 were baptisms; 27 different places were helped. The secretary assisted in the dedication of four new houses. In every case, save one, all the money necessary to pay out was pledged. Mission points have been maintained in five places. One of these is just ready at this writing to dedicate a fine building in a city of 8,000. A start has been made in Omaha to establish a city mission. The Bible-school organized by the missionary has enrolled 100 pupils. The outlook is good.

Yet the field is wide. Of the million population, the disciples can muster at the outside no more than 20,000, and much less in organized bodies. The North Platte section, a large tract, growing each year more prosperous and populous, is almost virgin soil for our work. Towns and cities with populations ranging from 500 to 3,000 are destitute of preaching that has the note of New Testament unity prominent. Even in the southeastern part, where we are most numerous, there are two counties without a living congregation of Disciples, though in one of them there is a house. In the state at large there are 29 towns ranging from 1,000 to 4,000 population, and 14 others above 800, where we have no churches. Of these 21 are county seats. We have 34 counties, with 195,000 population, having not one single living congregation. In 17 others there is only one each, or at most two, and generally weak. Nebraska Disciples are the ones especially charged with the duty of correcting these conditions. We can do it and God expects it of us.

New England Missions.

The New England Christian Missionary Society closed at Springfield, Mass., on Sunday night, Oct. 4, one of the very best annual conventions it has ever held. Nearly all of the churches reported handsome gains in membership. An evangelist has been supported since March 1, jointly by the New England Society, the American Christian Missionary Society and the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. The field is regarded as one of the most difficult in the world for quick results. The evangelist has organized one church, located one pastor, held two tent meetings, besides six other meetings, most of them short ones; had 39 additions and 17 others by relation and from other religious bodies; collected in the field $280.32. He has done much to open up the field for future effort, and is pushing the campaign for still larger work this fall and winter. Two of the congregations have paid off old debts during the year, and one other made a handsome reduction of its debt. Most of the congregations have arranged for protracted meetings this winter.

The A. C. M. S. and the C. W. B. M. have proposed to appoint a superintendent of missions for New England, to do for this part of the country a work similar to that which W. F. Cowden has so well done in the northwest. The New England Convention heartily approved this move and will co-operate in securing and supporting the right man. This is a long advanced step, and one that ought to meet with the hearty support of every Disciple of Christ in America. The brotherhood ought to put $10,000 into New England next year. The convention resolved to make the strongest possible effort to plant at least one new church in some one of the large cities the coming year. One serious cause for regret and sadness confronted the convention, viz., the loss of its beloved president and leader, J. H. Mohorter, who has resigned his pastorate of the Boston Church and will soon remove to Pueblo, Colo. A. F. Heaney, of Manton, was elected his successor as president of the board. He, with G. A. Reinl as corresponding secretary and with the support of the board elected, will give us an aggressive administration. President Mohorter has worked hard in the face of many difficulties to bring the work here to its present hopeful basis. He received, and deserves, the thanks of all. The watchword in New England is "Forward."

Illinois.

The summary of work done by the State Society is as follows:

Men employed, 47; days' service, 2,152; churches visited, 181; sermons, 1,756; meetings held, 75; conversions, 713; other additions, 602; total additions, 1,315; churches organized, 8; churches aided, 63; Bible-schools organized, 8; Endeavor societies organized, 8; county rallies, 10; church rallies, 3; officers ordained, 6; ministers ordained, 5; dedications, 2; difficulties adjusted, 5; money raised for local purposes, $6,957.30; money raised for State Work, $10,999.98.

There are 805 congregations in the state with 84,668 members. There are 10 counties with one church each; two counties with two churches each; three counties with five churches each and six counties with 20 or more churches each.

There are 8 counties, 28 county-seats, 124 towns of 1,000 to 5,000 population; 7 cities of 5,000 to 10,000; 9 cities of more than 10,000—all without a church that is simply Christian. Then there is Chicago with one-half the population of the state and with less than 30 churches. It is well to bear in mind the numerous villages and moral communities now open to the simple gospel.

The resources of the board consist of the co-operation of about 350 churches and about 60 per cent of the ministry which results in $9,000 to $11,000. Interest on the permanent fund amounts to about $1,200.

In order to do a service that is reasonably proportionate to the field, there should be $25,000 given each year by the churches, and the permanent fund should be increased to $50,000. In view of the immensity of the field and the wealth of the churches, this expectation is modest.

The state and district boards are supporting missionaries in some prominent cities, but they wish to do more work of like kind. They wish also to open missions in a number of cities this winter, but it all depends upon the liberality of the churches on Illinois Day. Let the facts appeal.

Texas.

John A. Stevens, of Chicksha, I. T., is in a successful meeting at Oak Cliff, this city.

Geo. L. Bush, McKinney, is holding his own meeting and doing it successfully. George is one of our young, yet one of our best, all-around ministers.

The writer visited Sherman and preached for J. W. Holsapple Sept. 27. We found a live church in the city and a growing mission, recently housed, in the country near by. Brother Holsapple was holding a mission meeting at Tioga.

The Christian Courier gave us twenty pages brim full of good things, and promises a mammoth illustrated Texas mission number in October.

The first Dallas County Convention, under the auspices of the Christian Church, will be held in the Central Dallas Church, Oct. 8.

We have in this city six churches, and all but one are in good houses of worship. They are the First, Jesse P. Sewel, minister; the Central, M. M. Davis, minister; Ross Avenue and Dawson Avenue, Graham McMurray, minister; Oak Cliff, M. P. Harmon, minister, and West Dallas does not believe in a "salaried pastor."

Bro. George Duffy, late of Iowa, has engaged with the church at Alvarado and Venus. A splendid field and a live man wanted.

It was our privilege to spend a night recently at Carr Burdette College. I was delighted with the substantial and up-to-date buildings, with all the conveniences of a modern home. Girls committed to the care of Brother and Sister Carr are in good hands, and their location might well be advertised as a health resort.

The northeast Texas convention was held with the church at Longview, J. H. Fuller presiding. Brother Fuller is doing substantial work at Longview and it was, at least in part, due to his good work that this was pronounced the best convention yet. The reports of the evangelists, M. M. Smith, V. L. Graves, B. J. Waugh, J. H. McWhirter and Missionary Pastor A. L. Oder, were models and gave evidence of work that will continue to bear good fruit.

Bro. A. O. Riall was chosen president of the southeast Texas convention at the late meeting at Lufkin. This makes Brother Riall a member of the state board and gives us a strong, active man in the right territory. East Texas is coming to the front.

The Texas brotherhood feel most keenly the loss of Bro. A. G. Aldermon, our neighbor missionary. May our Father's love strengthen the bereaved ones in this trying hour.

Southern California.

After three months in Europe, A. C. Smith and wife have returned to Los Angeles. They have been greatly missed this summer in all circles of Christian activity. The great reception tendered them by the First Church was expressive of the welcome felt by our workers throughout the state.

F. N. Calvin gave a brief but blessed ministry to the church at Santa Ana. Southern California reluctantly submits to the overruling Providence in this case. Confident that the magic of this delightful clime will cast its customary spell over this choice spirit, we hope soon to greet him here again. He goes to the Compton Heights Church, St. Louis.

H. Elliott Ward has resigned at E. 8th St., Los Angeles, where for nearly four years he has done a splendid work in a difficult field. He has a ranch near Azusa, where he will live and labor for the church as pastor.

M. B. Madden and family stopped off, en route to Japan, and gave two excellent addresses before our churches in Los Angeles last week.

John C. Hay is now pastor of the congregation at Hollywood, and F. M. Kirkham has taken the oversight of the Vernon church, where T. D. Garvin ministered at the time of his death.

Mrs. Princess Long and family, whose permanent home is at Long Beach, started for Paris, Ky., Oct. 4. Mrs. Long has engagements as evangelistic soloist for a number of our large churches, which occupies her time all next year in the east. We reluctantly let her go, but are glad to make so much of a contribution to our success elsewhere. Mrs. Long will be at Detroit.

Southern California will be represented at Detroit by A. K. Crawford, J. P. Ralston, Mrs. Princess Long and Grant K. Lewis and wife.

Los Angeles is getting to be a great convention city. The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church met here in 1903. The World's Conference of Methodists convenes here in 1904, and the International Convention of the Disciples of Christ will assemble here in 1905.

After two years of delightful service, the pastor at Long Beach has resigned to take up the work of southwestern evangelist under the joint direction of the Evangelizing Board of Southern California and Arizona and the A. C. M. S. Great has been the conflict of soul in deciding to leave a happy pastorate and bend the back for the burdens of all the churches. But the call from the first was emphatic and insistent and, we believe, of God as well as from men, and so we obey. God bless the dear people at Long Beach and prosper our growing work in the great southwest.

GRANT K. LEWIS.

En route to Detroit, Oct. 1, 1903.

Wisconsin.

W. O. King, who has been faithfully serving the church at Ladysmith, half time, has resigned that they may secure a man for all of his time. Brother King was urged to continue in this work, but he declined on the ground that he desired to improve his timber farm and make for himself a home. Brother King reports three baptisms and one addition by letter for September.

We feel confident that we have the right man in the right place in F. W. Harlow at Superior. This is one of the churches that we organized last year in this city of over 30,000. Brother Harlow reports for September two baptisms and one addition by letter. He begins a meeting next Lord's day.

We hear the best reports from the union meeting held at Richland Center this summer. Bro. Wiley Cash, our minister in this city, immersed 13 one prayer-meeting evening and it was thought that many more would unite with our church.

The church at Footville remodeled their church building last year and they are now planning to erect a parsonage. They have had two additions by letter and two baptisms since last report.

Our state convention was most royally entertained by Brother Kreidler and his Milwaukee church. Our church there, under the able leadership of Brother Kreidler, is in a flourishing condition. They hold their meeting this year with home forces.

I would like to correspond with some self-sacrificing men who will come into this state. The work is most difficult because of the large per cent of foreign population, three-fourths of the people being either foreign born or born of foreign parents, but the people are appreciative and it is a delight to labor with them.

D. N. WETZEL, Cor. Sec.

Missouri.

A dear friend writes concerning the convention at Columbia: "Well, I guess you were well pleased with that convention, for surely you have not seen a better one, in nearly all respects, than the one at Columbia, the attendance, the reports, the committees, the spirit and the results. It ought to be a great inspiration all around and should put state missions to the front. Every member of the board should feel proud of the year's records, and you especially should feel thankful for it, and doubtless you are. Now for another year's work."

We thank our friend for his good words. It expresses our sentiments to a nicety and puts it better than we could have done. Then it has more weight, coming from another source. We are indeed rejoicing at the results of the year's work, and every lover of the Lord will surely rejoice with us. Think of it, 11,313 days' work; sermons, 7,267; churches organized, 33; Bible-schools, 69; baptisms, 2,329; otherwise, 1,801; total, 4,120; total money raised for all purposes, $134,053; actual receipts to the state treasury, $7,374.96, $1,108.58 more than last year. For every dollar sent to our treasury, $17 more was collected. It cost less than two dollars to win a soul for Christ. No business on this earth pays on investment like this; it is immense, it is wonderful, it is thrilling.

The convention was also a great success in every way. It was epoch-marking and making. Gradually, year by year, the reports are getting better and the receipts larger, but this year was a long stride in advance. The spirit of the convention was deeply devotional, and one thing that more than aught else made this possible were the superb devotional Bible studies by Dr. W. T. Moore. It was not a gathering simply for pleasure, but business, and that the business of our Lord and King. Every speech, every sermon, every report was dominated by this thought. It was indeed good to be there.

"Now for another great year's work." If the convention means anything it means just that. What if we have been on the mountaintop of transfiguration, if when we come down we find ourselves too weak to cast out the devils we find at the foot? This year ought to be a year of wonder-working among our people in this great state. The results of the past year's work ought to inspire us to greater diligence and more liberal-hearted giving to the work of the Lord. We have set our mark at $10,000 for state missions. It will be easy of realization if we all work with a will.

Give us the $10,000 and we will report 5,000 added to the saved in the next twelve months.

Our state is being compared to other states—especially Ohio—to our detriment and shame. Ohio has a few, very few, country churches; Missouri has hundreds of them, many of them too poor to have preaching even one-fourth of the time. It is a great injustice to make such comparisons without giving some reason other than that our people are stingy and illiberal. It is bad enough at best, but every year finds a constant improvement. Let us make this year the very best of all.

State Mission Day has been changed from January to the first Lord's day in November. We make this plea to four stronger churches that they set the example to the weaker ones and take their offering on this day. The balance in the treasury is only $7.77. This is written on the day of the first meeting and we are seriously handicapped by this condition. Let there be a great rally. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has promised us a great state mission number, for which we thank them. We call upon all our friends to make this a great day for our cause.

Remember, we have literature and collection envelopes; these you can have for the asking. Will you not ask to-day?

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

Would you believe it? Well it does just go right along and the indications now are that the campaign will be much more fruitful than was the one in the spring, judging by the inquiries for buttons, membership cards and "other information."

The buttons for the second campaign are just in the office, and are without doubt the finest on the market, and best of all, are to go to the schools at the same price, 80 cents per 100.

In mission schools we are now doing good work, only let us not get "tired." Brush Creek, Randolph, is a new school under an old hand. Geo. E. Goodell, formerly of St. Louis, is the superintendent, and the enrollment is now 75.

Carondelet has a mission at the South Broadway car shops, and the Fourth has one on North Broadway, while Brethren Hodgdon and Allen are doing fine work at Pestalozzi, as was manifest in the results during the Compton Heights meeting last spring. W. D. Cree is doing good work on Prairie Avenue.

Have you ordered supplies from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, for boys' and girls' rally day, and are you going to keep the day and help win America for Christ? Remember, if you will keep this day, Sunday before Thanksgiving or any Sunday that suits, we will gladly credit your school with the fifty per cent of the offering taken on that day, so you are helping Missouri and the United States.

That fine rally, the first ever held at Hickory Grove, Boone, though the church has been organized fifty years, was followed by a meeting by A. W. Kokendoffer, and the results were fine, and all the Bible-school workers are happy.

Mt. Cabanne and J. Q. McCanne, are doing the right thing, putting a revised Bible into the hands of all the pupils of right age, having 150 copies, and our other schools should do the same.

Mt. Cabanne, at their fall rally, issued a nice souvenir card, stating bearer was present, and assuring if no Sundays are missed until Christmas, such will be remembered. A song book for all the school is another good thing that your secretary saw while with them.

Mrs. S. McCoy Crank is our only lady minister in the state, and is doing fine work at Liberal and Minden Mines, only last Sunday dedicating the church house at the Mines, and organizing a new Bible-school. Wish we had more of the kind.

To meet our obligations promptly, we depend on you, friends, and need only say the second quarter is now due. Do not forget us, please, nor the fieldmen. H. F. DAVIS.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss ADA DORR, Sidney, Iowa.

Chinese Missionary Convention.

The annual convention of the Central China Mission met in Kuling, Aug. 10-13. The meetings were held at the home of Brother Cory. It was the first of our meetings to be held at Kuling and so far as attendance of missionaries was concerned was about the largest we have ever had. This is, of course, accounted for by the fact that nearly the whole mission was on the hill for a summer vacation. Some of us do not feel that it is the best place for the meeting as it takes the meeting, with its influence for good, away from the natives. It is most convenient for the missionaries and a saving of a few dollars to many of them. But we have a democratic government in our mission and the majority rules.

We had a most enthusiastic and profitable meeting. The question of expansion was the principal topic discussed. The mission has always been in favor of expansion, but we have not had the men with whom to expand. Now the society has begun to urge us to expand and as they seem willing to send us the men, we are most enthusiastic in the matter. We don't know where we shall house all of the new people who are coming, but some way will be provided. We have always advocated the policy of strengthening the places already occupied to the point at least of efficiency and we are still lacking in sufficient force of workers to do that, but there is hope now. When all of those under appointment and to be appointed soon are on the field, we shall be able to strengthen our present work and expand a little, too.

One new station will be opened in the near future. The mission has decided upon Tungchow as the place. We have a small work there now, but no resident missionary and it will be a center for a very needy field. Brother John Johnson will be asked to settle at that place.

There were a number of very helpful papers read at the meeting, notably one by Brother Cory on our college, and another by Dr. Osgood on methods of evangelistic work. Much interest was expressed in the prospective expansion in our school work. The Bible-school will be inaugurated right away, the new Science Hall will be built, our course of study revised and an institute organized for the instruction of the helpers already in the field. The reports from the field were most encouraging in most respects. We find that there is a steady and a healthy growth. It is felt that just at this time the regular and steady growth of the number of inquirers and converts is a more healthy sign than the great rushes that are reported from some quarters. The Chinese are beginning to feel, as never before, the power of foreign influence and there are large numbers anxious to do something to secure the benefits of this influence in their secular affairs. This is a great danger to the church, and great caution is necessary on the part of the missionaries lest they be imposed upon by this worldly element. It is the policy of our mission to go slow, but sure. This was the sentiment of our meeting on that point.

It was decided by the majority to have the meeting at Kuling next year.

Northern California.

We now learn that D. A. Russell has accepted the work at Red Bluff, and we may expect some good work from there.

Brother Brunk is to leave Butte City, Nov. 1. Hydesville has been reclaimed and should have a pastor.

Gallahann and Carroll held a good meeting there and begin Oct. 4 at College City.

Henry Shadle is giving good satisfaction at Willows. The people are well pleased.

Williams is likely to form a co-operation with Dunnigan in order that the latter may have preaching.

Some point should co-operate with Corning. By the way, Corning is surrounded with eastern colonies secured through advertising in denominational periodicals. That makes it difficult for us to do much here at present. We have a neat house of worship free from debt and 15 members. All we lack is a Christian colony. There is some of California's richest soil within one to ten miles of Corning to be had for $40 per acre with a water right. Fine for alfalfa, peaches, prunes, olives, apricots, oranges and almonds. Land that will yield over $300 an acre per annum in tomatoes and a cannery here to take them.

Almonds have paid as high as $400, and more, per acre this year. There is also much land through here that is very poor.

Beware of the gaysome real estate man. Now is a good time to come to California and look it over. Twenty-five dollars from Missouri River points, $30 from St. Louis. These rates hold until Nov. 15.

Bro. C. L. Hatch, of Corning, one of God's faithful ones and manager of the Sierra Lumber Company, has no land to sell, but will cheerfully tell our people where the good land is. Write him, enclosing stamp. There are immense possibilities around Corning. The Baptist people had 70 families move in here the past year, consequently they have outgrown their old house and to-morrow dedicate a large new house.

DAVID'S JOY OVER FORGIVENESS.—
Psa. 32:1-11.

Read also 2 Sam. 12.

Memory Verses: Psa. 32:5-7.

GOLDEN TEXT:—Blessed is the man whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.—Psa. 32:1.

Personal and National Experiences.

Remembering that the book of Psalms was compiled for use in public worship in the temple, and that temple worship was considered to represent the worship of the whole nation, the student is at once led to ask regarding any particular psalm that may be under consideration, whether it expresses the experiences and emotions of the individual who wrote it, or is intended to be representative. If it embodies a confession, is it a personal or a national confession? The English prayer-book bears something of the same relation to the Episcopal church service that the book of Psalms bore to the temple service. The prayer-book contains certain confessions and petitions. Clearly these are intended to be representative; they are forms, by the use of which the worshipers are expected to unite in a common expression of their contrition, adoration and supplication, and the fact that they doubtless expressed also the sentiments of the men who wrote them is purely incidental. Is the case the same with regard to the psalms? Do they represent only for primarily the experiences and sentiments of the nation, or of some imaginary individual who is supposed to be typical of the nation? Many modern students of the psalms incline to this view of them.

On the contrary it seems clear that much is lost if we cease to regard the psalms as primarily the sincere expressions of the actual religious experiences of their authors. The expressions of contrition and the prayers for forgiveness in such a psalm as the fifty-first are too circumstantial and detailed to be ascribed to a personification of the nation. These are the real cries of a real man who has felt the agony of real and particular sins. It is David mourning over his sin with Bathsheba in Psalm 51, and David rejoicing in the assurance of forgiveness for that sin in Psalm 32. But after all, do not these psalms make a wider and a stronger appeal to the hearts of men everywhere just because they represent the experiences of one real man?

A Psalm of Rejoicing.

As David had confessed his sin and implored forgiveness in one of the greatest of the seven penitential psalms (Psalms 51), so now in a psalm of thanksgiving and rejoicing (Psalm 32) he pours forth his gratitude to Jehovah for the blessedness of His forgiveness. The psalm divides itself naturally into two parts: the first (verses 1-5) is the recital of David's own blessed experience of forgiveness, with a retrospective glance at the abyss of despair and distress from which he had been rescued; the second (verses 6-11) is a general exhortation to all who are in similar need. The author's own personal experiences are distinctly made the basis for that part of the psalm which is of general application. The transition is made in verse 6: "For this reason (i. e. because of my sad experience in sin and joy in forgiveness) let everyone that is godly pray unto thee," etc.

Sin and Forgiveness.

The words used for sin and forgiveness in this psalm are significant. In the first two verses there are three synonyms for each, and they are not vain repetitions. "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven." "Transgression" here is literally rebellion and rejection of lawful authority, and the word here rendered "forgiven" means a lifting of the burden—that is, the burden of responsibility, guilt and punishment. "Whose sin is covered." The word translated "sin" means a missing of the mark; it represents sin as a foolish mistake. It is as if one were shooting carelessly at a target and coming far from the bull's eye. To cover sin, therefore, is to paint out the old target, to conceal the evidence of past blunders and to give another trial. "To whom Jehovah imputeth not iniquity." "Iniquity" is crookedness. It presents the picture of a wilful deviation from the straight line of rectitude or from the straight and narrow path. "Not to impute" means not to ponder on or take account of; to ignore past deviations in consideration of a straight course hereafter.

Sin and Suffering.

The gist of the whole matter is contained in verse 10:

"Many sorrows shall be to the wicked;
But he that trusteth in Jehovah, loving kindness shall compass him about."

David is not asserting here, as Job's friends did, that material prosperity is always the accompaniment of virtue; there are so many negative instances that it is impossible to maintain that naive view. But he is saying that, when everything is taken into consideration, the sinner is not a happy man. Sin does not pay. But to him who trusts in God (and here note that faith is put for righteousness, just as Paul might have done) there shall be granted such favor from Jehovah, such peace and joy within, as shall leave him no occasion for coveting the unsatisfying pleasures by which the sinful seek to conceal from the world and from themselves the sorrow of their barren lives.

IS YOUR STOMACH ON A STRIKE?

There is Nothing to Prevent You Employing a Substitute to Do its Work.

There is such a thing as forbearance ceasing to be a virtue even in the case of one's stomach. There is no question but that some stomachs will stand a great deal more wear and tear and abuse than others, but they all have their limit and when that limit is reached, the stomach must be reckoned with as sure as fate. The best way and really the only effective way to treat your stomach when it rebels is to employ a substitute to do its work. This will give the weakened and worn-out organ an opportunity to rest and regain its strength and health.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets relieve the stomach of its work by taking up the work and doing it just as one set or shift of workmen relieves another. They actually digest the food in just the same manner and just the same time as the digestive fluids of a sound stomach do. In fact, when dissolved in the stomach, they are digestive fluids for they contain exactly the same constituents and elements as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids of the stomach. No matter what the condition of the stomach is, their work is just the same. They work in their own natural way without regard to surrounding conditions.

The stomach being thus relieved by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, is restored and renewed by Nature and the rest of the human body does not suffer in the least by reason of its failure to perform its work.

A Wisconsin man says: "I suffered the pangs of dyspepsia for 10 years. I tried every known remedy with indifferent results until I was told of the remarkable cures of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I bought a box, began taking them and forgot I had a stomach. Three boxes cured me completely. I have had no trouble whatever for a year and have an appetite like a harvest hand and can eat anything that is set before me without fear of bad results."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c. a box. The druggist never fails to have them in stock because the demand for them is so great and so pronounced that he cannot afford to be without them. People who could not get them of one druggist would go to another and would get in the habit of buying their other drugs there as well as their Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

GIVING FOR MISSIONS.—
2 Cor. 9:6-15.

"Where a man's treasure is, there will his heart be," said Jesus. How can you expect to be interested in the progress of God's kingdom if you have invested nothing in it? A man who buys stock in a mine at once becomes greatly interested in everything pertaining to that mine. He looks eagerly for reports from it. He notices the quotations on the stock market. He finds himself looking into the mining journals to see if he can find anything about his mine. Why? Because he has an investment. If we notice that we are not interested in the work of the church, may it not be because we have no investment there? Try putting a little treasure into the work and see if your heart does not go with it.

And that saying is equally true when reversed—Where a man's heart is there will his treasure be. If a person's heart is in literature, he will spend money for books and papers; you can't keep him from it. If he is most interested in sports, his money will go that way. If business is the only thing that charms him, he will put his money back into his business so that it may grow by its own profits. If the progress of righteousness and religion is really dear to his heart, he will put money into that work. It will not require argument or persuasion, for by the law of gravitation the treasure will naturally go where the heart is.

Paul commends the liberality of the Macedonian churches, and says that "first they gave their own selves to the Lord" (2 Cor. 8:5). No wonder that they gave their money after that. A consecration meeting is the best preparation for a missionary offering.

Giving should be proportionate—both to the ability of the giver and to the results which he wishes to accomplish. There cannot be a bountiful harvest if the sower is niggardly with his seed. Generous sowing brings a generous harvest. So it is with missionary effort and missionary giving. If we really desire, with all our hearts, a great ingathering of souls into the kingdom, then we should be ready to make, without grudging, a great outpouring of resources for carrying on the work.

Give freely. Money collected by force or fear may be put to good uses. But money freely and joyfully given for a good cause is like mercy, "twice blest;" it blesses him that gives and him that takes.

The secret of abundance is not hoarding, but wise and generous distribution. The farmer multiplies his seed by sowing it. The capitalist increases his capital by putting it to work. There is a vast amount of money owned by Christians which is not Christian money—at least it is not doing Christian work. It is not feeding the hungry; it is not spreading the gospel; it is busily dodging the collection basket and the subscription list. It is so eagerly trying to save its life that in the end it miserably perishes. Save your money! Save it by putting it to work saving men.

Midweek Prayer-MeetingBy Frank G. Tyrrell.
Oct. 21.BEAMS AND MOTES.—Matt. 7:1-5; Luke 6:37, 38.

This passage admits of two interpretations: first, it is said that the man who, with a serious fault of his own, judges his brother for a lesser fault, is illustrating the parable. All have faults, and the spirit of criticism is rampant. And there can be no doubt that such instances are common. For a man's own fault seems small and insignificant, if indeed he is conscious of it at all. But the faults of others are conspicuous; they noisily advertise themselves.

The other view is this: the beam is not some fault, however grievous, other than that which is condemned in the first and second verses of the chapter, namely, censorious judgment. The figure of the mote and the beam is merely an application of this principle. A man may be without faults of the ordinary kind; he may be prim, precise, exact and careful in the market, a tithe-payer, a regular church-goer, a conspicuous worker in the vineyard of the Master, and yet an uncharitable censor of his brethren, a hawk-eyed critic, a furious judge. And this censoriousness is a great beam across his eyes. Because of his uncharitableness, because of his censoriousness, he cannot see clearly to do the very thing he appoints for himself.

We are not going to misunderstand the Master. We must make distinctions; we must discriminate. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Tolstoi goes so far as to hold that the injunction, "Judge not," forbids courts of justice. But the same word is used in other places, where the meaning is quite clear: John 3:17, "God sent not His Son into the world to condemn the world,"—the word condemn is the same as the word judge in this lesson. And so we understand the Master to prohibit, not the formation of opinions and judgments concerning others, but the formation and utterance of damnable judgments. The spirits of hyper-criticism and all uncharitableness he would exorcise from every heart.

There are not a few who have fallen into this very grievous habit. They are keen-eyed, merciless, cruel. They form the condemnation of one who has erred, and then they frame their sentence, and pronounce it with fiery breath. All the time they themselves are without the faults they condemn; but their censorious disposition clouds their minds, so they cannot see clearly. If they would get rid of the beam, then they could with something approaching ease and accuracy, help the faulty brother to extract the mote. The uncharitableness which prevails among Christians of different orders is a case in point. But we fear that nearly every church has illustrations among its members.

The cure for the harsh, unbrotherly disposition is comradeship with Christ. Before his judgment seat we must all appear. He is acquainted with us. He knows our weakness and our strength: whether we bear the mote or the beam. He wept over the rebellions that arose against his beneficent reign. The outcast, crouching at his feet, heard the sweet words, "Doth no man condemn thee? Neither do I. Go thy way, and sin no more." If we keep close to him, and set a watch at the gates of speech, we shall soon conquer this bitter disposition.

Unless we do, there is coming a great recoil. "With what judgment ye judge, ye shall be judged." This is not the law of retaliation; it is rather a statement of the law of moral justice. The man who sourly condemns his brethren will come to realize some day that in all the world he has not a friend. If he is attacked, if he makes a slip, if critics assail him, there is no one to befriend him. The world stands aloof, and rather rejoices that his chickens have come home to roost.

But the cure of this disposition will work wonders in the church and in the world. The adversary will lose one of his choicest weap-

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK?

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

To Prove What the Great Kidney Remedy, Swamp-Root, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of the Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

The kidneys filter and purify the blood—that is their work.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the great kidney remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for many kinds of diseases, and if permitted to continue, much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable. Makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache, causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

Swamp Root is pleasant to take and is used in the leading hospitals, recommended by physicians in their private practice, and is taken by doctors themselves who have kidney ailments, because they recognize in it the greatest and most successful remedy for kidney, liver and bladder troubles.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores

EDITORIAL NOTE—You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful remedy, Swamp-Root, sent absolutely free by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root, and containing many of the thousands upon thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women who owe their good health, in fact their very lives, to the great curative properties of Swamp-Root. In writing to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure to say you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

PRAYER.

O God, help us to cast out all bitterness from redeemed hearts, and sweeten every fountain. Forgive the bitter, barbed word. Take the beam from our eyes, and the malice from our hearts. Give us the spirit of great gentleness and tender love, for Christ's sake. Amen.

This is a short program, but it is crammed full of good things.

—T. T. Holton writes that he can be had for several protracted meetings soon after the holidays, and before entering again upon settled work.

—J. T. Boone writes that there is a splendid opening at Jacksonville, Fla., for a homeopathic physician who is a member of the Christian Church.

—Geo. A. Miller, pastor of the First Christian Church at Covington, Ky., is beginning a series of Sunday night sermons which will be book studies of the books of the New Testament.

—T. P. Haley, writing from Kansas City, Mo., under date of Oct. 5, says: "Bro. Z. T. Sweeney was with us yesterday and raised about $3,500 for the Jackson Avenue Church. He only asked for $3,000." Thus the good work of paying church debts goes on all over the country.

—Read the pleas we publish this week for State Missions. Delegates from our National Convention ought to return to their homes so full of missionary enthusiasm as to raise the largest State Mission offering in their respective states, the first Lord's day in November, they have ever had.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the church at Wylie, Texas, is making an appeal for money to do some needed work in repairing and seating the church. Although supporting a preacher for half time the little congregation gave over $100 this year to co-operative missionary work. C. C. Bearden is pastor of this devoted little band.

—W. T. Brooks has resigned at Ladoga, Ind., to take effect Jan. 1, 1904, when he will enter the evangelistic field. There have been over 500 additions to the church during his six years' pastorate at Ladoga, and the church has grown in all directions. He will have a good singing evangelist and will devote all his time to evangelizing.

—Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Hughes announce the marriage of their daughter, Jeannette Drake, to Mr. Oliver Dighlman Knode, at Macatawa Park, on the 7th inst. Their home will be Richmond, Ind. Jeannette was the youngest of three lovely daughters of Brother and Sister Hughes. Our congratulations are extended to the young married couple.

—The suggestion is made that in connection with the Detroit Convention there should be a veterans' meeting led by W. T. Moore, J. W. McGarvey and S. Harrison Jones. Such meetings have occasionally been held in connection with the conventions, and they have always been memorable and profitable. The younger men will be glad to pay their tribute of respect to the veterans.

—In a recent issue of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST we stated that the Herald of Gospel Liberty claims the honor of being "the oldest newspaper in the world." What we should have said, of course, was that it claims to be the oldest religious newspaper in the world. Our honored and aged contemporary is well contented with the distinction to which it is justly entitled and does not lay claim to such sweeping priority as our previous statement would indicate.

—R. Lord Cave has been called for the third year to serve the church at Clarksville, Tenn., at an increase of three hundred dollars in his salary, which shows how his work is appreciated by his people. The church has 274 members, and seems to be in good working order. It raised about one hundred dollars the past year for state missions and the Sunday-school raised fifty, just twice as much as in former years, for missions also.

—President Johann writes: "Christian University, Canton, Mo., opened her 48th session on Sept. 22 with a larger attendance of students than have been present for twenty years, and new students are coming in frequently. The roof is being put on our new college building, and we expect to move into part of the building in about four weeks. At present our classes are reciting in three churches and four public halls, without much inconvenience. The students are very patient, knowing that better things are in sight."

—J. N. Crutcher, pastor at Moberly, Mo., writes: "I am delighted with the new book from the pen of George Hamilton Combs, 'The Christ in Modern English Literature.' It is wholesome, helpful and fascinating. The style is strictly 'Combsian,' and the matter is indeed quite worth while. The analysis of some Latter Day writers and their attitude toward the Christ is clear and convincing. Mr. Combs writes as one having authority in his chosen field. I thank him for his timely book and thank you for the mechanical excellence of the volume."

—Bro. Morgan Morgans writes: "I am going to move back to Southwest Missouri where I obeyed the gospel and began my ministry, and where I lived ever since I was 15 years old up to four years ago, when I moved to Texas. I want to become identified with the great brotherhood of Missouri again, and especially the southwest part of the state where I lived for 33 years, and where I did perhaps the greater part of my work as a minister of the gospel. I am going to move to the county where I obeyed the gospel and where I began my ministry. I shall be with old time friends, relatives and near our children."

Number of contributing churches....	145
Amt. received from the churches....	$2,442 64

Total $2,595 37

Many churches that have promised to take the offering for Church Extension have not yet sent their contributions. They should do so as early as possible in October. Remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Charles Forster, West Pawlet, Vt., says: "We have only two churches in Vermont. The Disciples of Christ are unknown and the people live and think very slowly in established channels. One of our churches is situated in a village very much resembling the 'Sleepy Hollow' of Rip Van Winkle, and the other in a village, two-thirds of the population of which are foreigners. Both churches have been established for over fifty years." Referring to the meeting of Bro. J. H. Hardin, which we reported last week, he says: "Brother Hardin has given the church a great uplift. We all rejoice in the week's work which he did among us."

—Our attention has been called to the fact that our printers made Brother Darsie, in his report of the Kentucky Convention, say that "the Mormon's Society served daily free dinners." Brother Darsie disclaims responsibility for this statement and says that the free dinners were served by the Woman's Society. That is different to be sure. It may be more accurate as a report of what happened, but it is not nearly so interesting or sensational. Of course a Woman's Society in Kentucky would serve free dinners. There is no news in such a statement as that. The

—The Riverside Park Christian Church, Baltimore, is a remarkable instance of what the cause of primitive Christianity may accomplish in the conservative east. Started only a little over a year ago with eight members, it now has two hundred with a church property, which is the basement of a handsome church which will be completed later. The property as it now stands cost $7,200. A thousand dollars was given by Dr. Theodore Cooke, a wealthy physician of Baltimore, who is not a member of the Christian Church. Many of our brethren in all parts of the country have contributed to the work. Governor Drake recently sent a cheque for $25. The pastor of the church, J. O. Shelburne, made himself personally responsible for the money borrowed to build the church, and is trying to raise $1,000 before Thanksgiving day to pay the floating debt. The work is backed and approved by such men as F. D. Power, B. A. Abbott, E. B. Bagby, Peter Ainslie and W. S. Hoye. We hope many of our readers, even those who feel that calls are becoming too numerous, will strain a point as Gov. Drake said he did, and give the brethren in Baltimore a lift. Address J. O. Shelburne, 1531 Belt Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Dedication at White Hall, Illinois.

The church at White Hall, Illinois, has just completed and opened a new, modern and beautiful house of worship. Better than all, at its dedication, they provided for the indebtedness against it.

The house is substantially built of brick, stone and slate. In addition to the main auditorium, it has lecture-room, Sunday-school rooms, baptistry, robing-rooms, etc. The basement contains a furnace-room, fuel-room-dining-room and kitchen.

It is well finished and furnished. The floor is carpeted; it is brilliantly lighted with electric lights. It has two organs; one for the main auditorium and one for the Sunday-school room. The property is valued at $6,000. The weather on dedication day was ideal; the number in attendance was large, the singing and music grand. The preaching as good as the writer is capable of doing; the giving was generous and the joy and rejoicing was unbounded.

The Methodists, Presbyterians and Baptists all adjourned their service so as to give their people an opportunity to attend the dedication. The house is said to be the best house of worship in the county. Brethren were present from different parts of the country.

Do not fail to secure and read a copy of "Helps to Faith"—Brother Garrison's latest book. Its reasons for believing and its statement of the things which hinder faith will suggest many a sermon to the preacher, and serve to strengthen the faith of all who carefully read the book. It contains the results of the author's maturest thought on the great topics treated. Beginning further back than the average argument for Christianity goes, even to the religious instincts of man, it brings the argument further down than the old-time apologetics do, even to present Christian experience in the hearts and lives of men. A Church Plan.

[We were informed that the church at Lewiston, Idaho, had a building which was designed to do on a small scale what the large buildings of the great institutional city churches do on a large scale, and we requested the pastor, Brother Pine, to tell us about it. His description may be of interest to those who, with a small church plant, are trying to perform some practical services to the community.—EDITOR.]

The present church at Lewiston, Idaho, is the result of an addition 16x36 feet across the rear end of the main building 30x48, giving, it will be readily seen, a very ordinary sized house. The entire cost has been something over $2,000.

The church is planned to do a special Christian social work among young people and children, placing around the young people of the church a strong Christian social life and also reaching out after the unsaved. We have endeavored to provide something for them after we get them.

The main building has the usual church furniture. Our baptistry, enclosed by a partition on the ends and back and by a sliding door in front, is placed at the rear of the pulpit platform with the top of the baptistry two and a half feet above the level of the pulpit platform. Doors at the ends pass those baptized at once to the robing rooms. This is an ideal plan. Everyone in the audience can witness the baptism without moving a muscle.

The new addition is two storied. The upper floor is made into two rooms by a completing partition back of the baptistry. I should have said that the pulpit sets in a recess made in the end wall of the main room and projects four feet into the square. The recess is seven feet deep; this breaks into the back rooms somewhat, but they are still large enough for Sunday-school, Junior Christian Endeavor and Aid Society rooms.

The lower room is connected with upper by an inside stairway. This room was formed by excavating about five feet of earth. A post in the center supports the baptistry. Here we have an excellent Christian Endeavor and reception room. We intend to furnish this room as a parlor, supply with books, games, musical instruments etc., so that on short notice it can be ready for an evening with boys or young men, Sunday-school class receptions, Christian Endeavor socials, church receptions, etc. We have excavated room for a kitchen under the main building and adjoining the Christian Endeavor room. So we have used every foot of space in our ground dimension. The main building is heated with a furnace but the new part with stoves.

We can seat, by crowding, about 350 people in the main room and the two new upstairs rooms, whose floors are level with the pulpit platform.

Our building looks well and is the most serviceable I have ever seen. We like it very much.

Colorado Convention.

The twenty-first annual session of the Colorado Christian Missionary Convention, which was held with the Broadway Church, Pueblo, Sept. 28 to Oct. 1, was one of the best conventions in the history of organized work in the state. The welcome was hearty, the spirit excellent, and the interest sustained from first to last.

The Ministerial Association occupied Monday evening and Tuesday morning. The opening sermon was preached by Samuel M. Bernard, of Boulder, who took for his subject, "In the Harness: Ready For Work," using as its basis Paul's farewell address to the Ephesian elders. David C. Peters, of Trinidad, gave practical suggestions on "How to Promote Closer Fellowship Among the Ministers of Colorado." J. E. Pickett, of Denver, showed clearly that "The Relation of Our Pastors and Churches to the C. W. B. M." is one that should not be neglected or minimized. E. E. Violett, of Loveland, presented in a practical speech, the work of the Benevolent Association of the Christian Church, and discussed "The Proposed Orphanage at Loveland, and Colorado's Relation to It."

The sessions of the state missionary convention proper occupied Tuesday afternoon and night and Wednesday morning. Pres. Wm. Bayard Craig, in a stirring address, reviewed some of the history of our organized work, and pointed out the great possibilities before us. The report of Leonard G. Thompson, corresponding secretary, gave a review of the year's work. A summary of the work of the mission churches is given in another column of this paper. F. F. Walters gave a thrilling account of his work in the northwestern part of the state and in southern Wyoming, showing that the days of heroic pioneering are not over. The report of A. E. Pierce, treasurer, of Denver, showed that there were funds enough on hand, with receipts at the convention, to pay all bills of the year. The only indebtedness is a note for $500, carried over from last year. J. E. Pickett, as chairman of the Committee on a Summer Assembly for Colorado, reported with care, showing that the committee had given much thought to the subject. A standing committee was appointed with Brother Pickett as chairman, to consider the question more fully during the year. The general sentiment seemed to be favorable to the enterprise. A. N. Glover, of Colorado City, made a splendid business speech in favor of "Larger Self-Support Among the Churches: Why? How?" M. M. Nelson, of Rocky Ford, showed that he had a practical grasp upon the needs of "Our Work in the Arkansas Valley." L. E. Brown, of Colorado Springs, preached the convention sermon on Tuesday night.

The sessions of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions on Wednesday afternoon and night were full of good things. Mrs. L. S. Brown, of Denver, the vice-president, made a good presiding officer. Mrs. O. B. Amøden, the president, having removed from the state. The reports of the state officers showed good work done. Only Mrs. Mary L. Parks, of Denver, the treasurer, and Miss Louise Pomeroy, of Pueblo, the junior superintendent, besides Mrs. Brown, were present in person. The report of Mrs. Parks was in her usual business-like manner, while that of Miss Pomeroy showed real interest in and love for the children's work. Miss Effie D. Kellar, while on her furlough from China, spent two and one-half months in useful labor as state organizer, much to the benefit of the C. W. B. M. work in the state. Mrs. J. E. Turner, of Greeley, president of the northern district of the C. W. B. M., read a practical paper on "The Development of Our State Work." The analysis of the constitution of the auxiliary, given in a symposium, showed still more plainly the farsighted wisdom of those who led in organizing the C. W. B. M. 29 years ago. The round table and practical talk by Mrs. Effie Cunningham, of Indianapolis, national vice-president of the C. W. B. M., aroused much interest. Mrs. Cunningham gave the night address on "The Message of the Awakening World." All felt that Sister Cunningham's coming was a benediction. Another valuable helper in the C. W. B. M. sessions was Mrs. Minnie G. Himes, state organizer of Washington.

Thursday morning was given to the Y. P. S. C. E. Miss Minnie Brown, the state superintendent, who had removed to California during the year, sent a sweet spirited message, which was heard with pleasure. The first part of the morning was devoted to the question "How?" in relation to our work. William L. Cline, of Manzanola, showed the need of consecration and enthusiasm in order to best "Grasp the Present Opportunity for Service." T. T. Thompson, of Denver; R. H. Lampkin, La Junta; J. W. Maddux, Golden; and F. F. Walters, Craig, told, in three-minute speeches, "How the Pastor Can Secure a Volunteer Corps of Trained Personal Workers." Wm. J. Lockhart, of Fort Collins, conducted an open parliament on "Practical Plans and Methods," which elicited many happy suggestions. Mr. J. D. Husted, an officer in the Presbyterian Church at Cripple Creek, and vice-president of the Colorado Christian Endeavor Union, presented, in a terse and business-like speech, the work of that organization. Miss Nellie Williams, of Cherry, the state superintendent of Junior C. E. work for Colorado, gave a helpful round table on the Junior Work. Clyde Darsie, the pastor of the Broadway Church, told us plainly and helpfully of "Our Relation to the C. E. Union."

The Sunday-school work occupied attention Thursday afternoon and evening. Rev. J. C. Carman, of Denver, state superintendent of the Colorado Sunday-school Association, spoke on "Skilled Workmen in the Sunday-school," while Mrs. J. A. Walker, of Denver, president of the Primary Department of the International S. S. Association, spoke on "Principles of Teaching" and "The Home Department." Mrs. Mae Lucas, superintendent of the primary department at Colorado Springs, conducted an excellent round table on primary work, and then taught a primary lesson about Saul and David. She was afterwards elected state primary superintendent—a new officer in our state work. The "Pastor's Hour," participated in by Rev. J. C. Carman, L. E. Scott, Robert W. Moore and J. E. Pickett, brought forth excellent things. At night, B. B. Tyler, president of the International S. S. Association, delivered an address on "Some Recent Experiences in the Orient."

The convention recommended that we raise $2,500 this year for state work; that every church be urged to observe Colorado

Day, the second Lord's day in November; that help be continued to fields which must still have aid, they being urged to work as fast as possible toward self-support; that new fields be opened this year; that hearty support be given to our new state paper, the Colorado Christian Herald; that C. W. B. M. Day, the first Lord's day in December, be made a great day, and that the Missionary Tidings be pressed upon the attention of the membership; that generous support be given the Board of Church Extension, which, like the C. W. B. M., has done so much for Colorado; that larger evangelistic work still be undertaken; that all the Sunday-schools observe Boys' and Girls' Rally Day for America, and that we heartily endorse the work of the Benevolent Association and the proposed orphanage at Loveland.

The state board and convention officers for the year are: Clyde Darsie, president of the convention; B. B. Tyler, vice-president of the convention; Wm. Bayard Craig, president of the board; J. E. Pickett, recording secretary; Leonard G. Thompson, corresponding secretary; A. E. Pierce, treasurer; other members, Wm. J. Lockhart, Mrs. Mary L. Parks, Mrs. Laura H. Pettit and H. C. Morse. J. W. Maddux was elected state superintendent of Sunday-school work, and Miss Mossie Elmore, of Trinidad, state superintendent of Christian Endeavor. The place of the next convention is left with the Committee on Summer Assembly. The music, which was led by F. F. Walters, aided by the choirs of the Broadway and Central Churches, was inspiring. The hospitality of the Pueblo churches was abundant, and the courtesy of the ladies of St. Paul's M. E. Church, in serving meals, highly appreciated.

The Kansas Convention.

The annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Kansas met in Newton, Oct. 5-8. The attendance was large. The spirit was all that could be desired. The program had been carefully thought out. The addresses were of a high order. The Sunday-school work was carefully considered for a half day. An equal amount of time was given to Christian Endeavor. The national superintendent of Christian Endeavorers, R. H. Waggener, of Kansas City, made a telling speech. He pleaded with young men to prepare for the work of the ministry. Seven were found almost at once who were ready to give themselves to this service. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, represented the Board of Ministerial Relief. His address on "An Unpaid Debt," produced, by its array of facts and the manner of its delivery, a profound impression.

A noticeable feature of the convention was the large proportion of young men. There were but few men with gray hairs. And a noble body of young men it was too. To be associated with them in service under our common Lord is an honor. It is an occasion of joy to those whose work is almost finished to see such men coming on to take their places in this divine enterprise. The outlook for the Disciples was never brighter than it is to-day. The horizon is radiant. Success, in the truest and best sense, is assured. The young men who are entering our ministry, so far as I am acquainted with them, are fully convinced that they have a message for the world—and they have.

"Our plea!" What is it? It is this: A plea for the unity and union of Christian believers by a return to the Christianity of the Christ as it is described in the New Testament—its creed, its ordinances, its life—and this in order to the speedy and successful evangelization of the world. Such a plea ought to make any man eloquent.

The reports of Sunday-school work, of Christian Endeavor, of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions, and of the Kansas Christian Missionary Society showed that the Disciples in the Sunflower State are well organized for aggressive work. The reports contained encouraging evidence of the fact that the blessing of the Head of the body, our Lord Jesus Christ, attends the efforts of the workers. Note the following:

There are 318 Sunday-schools in the state; 262 schools reported 19,363 scholars; the net gain during the last year, of pupils, was 3,265; there was a gain of 20 schools maintaining teachers' meetings, and a gain of 35 having home departments; 169 schools observed Children's Day. The money contributed was $1,847.56. The state work was assisted by 120 schools to the amount of $592.79. The total amount of money raised by the 262 reporting schools was $3,250.67. The Fort Scott Sunday-school has the largest home department. The largest Sunday-school in the state is at Atchison. The Third Church Sunday-school in Topeka made the largest offering for state mission work. There was a gain of 876 in the home departments during the year. The school at Hutchinson sent in the largest offering as a result of boys' and girls' rally day. Fourteen new schools were organized during the year.

There are 193 societies of Christian Endeavor; 16 societies were organized during the year; the number of members in the 193 societies is 4,749—a gain of 51. In the amount contributed to missions there was a gain of $374.08. In the amount of money raised for all purposes by our societies of Christian Endeavor there was a gain of $858.03. The number of conversions reported was 306, a gain of 64. The most discouraging fact is that only one society in the state—the one, I believe, at Hutchinson—uses the Bethany Christian Endeavor Reading Course. There was a gain during the year of 13 societies using a plan of systematic beneficence.

The Disciples in Kansas seem to be more than pleased with the Bible chair work in connection with the University of Kansas by Wallace Payne. He has evidently found his place and mission at Lawrence. Societies of Christian Endeavor contribute to the support of his work.

President Aylesworth, of Cotner University, Bethany, Neb., was present. Fifty young men have enrolled as students in the Bible department of that institution at the very beginning of the scholastic year—about double the number enrolled last year.

There are 100 societies auxiliary to the Christian Woman's Board of Missions; 20 auxiliaries were organized during the year. There are 1,534 members in the auxiliaries. These good women raised during the year $3,172.42.

We have 376 congregations in Kansas; eight churches were organized last year. There are 290 church buildings. Only 109 congregations have preaching all the time. There were 2,470 baptisms during the year. The number of additions to the churches from other sources was 2,135, making a total of 4,605. The amount of money raised for Kansas missions was $5,087.16. Seventeen houses of worship were erected. More than 2,000 women are officers in Kansas churches.

The convention closed with a great meeting in the auditorium, the largest place in town where a congregation can be assembled.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society was well represented by J. J. Morgan, of Kansas City, Mo., and G. W. Muckley told about Church Extension.

The work for the coming year starts off with a bound. The end of the year was changed. The next missionary year will have but nine months. It was resolved to raise $7,000 during these months. A guarantee fund was raised and an evangelist will be put to work in new fields. More money was raised than in any preceding year. The pulse of the brotherhood is strong and steady. Still larger results will be secured in the future than have been gained in the past. I am enthused by what I saw and heard in the Kansas Convention.

RODEFER.

Sister Mary E., wife of T. A. Rodefer, went to be with the Lord Sept. 14, 1903, at the age of 57 years. She was a good woman full of faith and of the Holy Spirit, and of good works and alms deeds which she did. She was one of the most widely known and best beloved members of the Bellaire Christian Church. For more than twenty years she had taught the primary department in the Sunday-school and a host of these children rise up to call her blessed. She organized the local auxiliary to the C. W. B. M. and was always its president; and these missionary women are bereaved indeed. She was for years district secretary of the C. W. B. M. and an active worker in the W. C. T. U. and other reform and charitable movements. She leaves a Christian husband and son, the latter a senior in Hiram College. The church and community will miss her sadly. She rests from her labors and her works do follow her.

SUMMY.

Mrs. Susan F. Summy fell asleep at her home in Washington, D. C., September 24, aged 92 years. She was one of the founders and most earnest and devoted workers in the Vermont Avenue Church. Coming with her late husband, Benjamin Summy, to the city in 1855, they at once identified themselves with the little band of Disciples and was steadfast through all the early days of struggle. She was born in Lancaster, Pennsylvania. A woman of great faith, of largest charity and benevolence, of thorough devotion to the Savior and His cause, intelligent in the Scriptures, active in all the work of the Church, useful in her home and to her friends and neighbors, serving well her generation—she filled a large place in the long period God gave her to live. She leaves six children; Mrs. N. J. Hillman, Orlando D. Summy, Dr. Benjamin W. Summy, Miss Susan E. Summy, Frank L. Summy and Lena H. Summy—all active workers in our Washington churches. The memory of the just is blessed.

About 20 additions in meeting; 4 confessions at regular service Sunday, also direct result of meeting. Sixty-two have been added since March 30, 1902, just about doubling membership. Sunday-school growing rapidly. Our plea for Christian union is becoming popular and we shall have a large church here at no very distant day. We wish the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST well.—P. C. MACFARLANE, pastor.

ILLINOIS.—West Salem, Oct. 10.—We have just closed a meeting at Antioch (Gallagher) lasting over three Lord's days, which resulted in 20 additions: 1 from the Baptists, 2 from the New Lights, 3 from the Methodists, 1 from the Presbyterians, 2 by letter, 2 by statement and 9 by baptism. Fine audiences and good interest to the close. Baptized one at Shiloh not previously reported.—G. W. TATE, Eureka, Oct. 6.—Am just beginning my second year with this excellent old church. They have given as much to missions and education this year as to local work. There have been a number of accessions, mostly at the regular services. About one-half of the baptisms are young men. We are looking forward with great anticipations to our meeting in November with that princely preacher, E. L. Powell, as evangelist. Audiences are larger than at any time during the year. The Sunday-school is being put on a thoroughly graded system and is going on toward a higher efficiency.—ALVA W. TAYLOR.

Sheldon, Sept. 30.—One accession by baptism last Lord's day. The work is progressing nicely. W. F. Shearer will help us in a protracted meeting beginning Oct. 12. I recently held a two weeks' meeting in a school house, where much good was done.—G. H. CLARKE.

Hampton, Oct. 5.—I have closed my second year here, and am now on my third. Our annual reports yesterday showed a gain in every department. One of the best things heard here lately was the lecture of Mrs. Elizabeth Roubush on "A Whole Humanity vs. the Man with the Hoe." Seldom have we heard such a clear presentation of the present industrial problems as she gave. Everyone who heard her was pleased.—HOWARD CRAMBLER.

OREGON.—LaGrande, Sept. 30.—One added by statement Sept. 20, 1 baptized Sept. 21 and 2 Sept. 29. We are paying off on our building and have a pretty good sum yet to pay, yet we dare not neglect the calls of those more needy than ourselves. We send $7 to Church Extension and raised $10 for Jamaica on last Lord's day.—O. H. KING.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Sandy Lake, Oct. 2.—Two additions at Millageville by confession and baptism—husband and wife. The work is moving nicely. We are getting very large audiences; the people seem to want to "hear the truth as it is in Jesus."—THOMAS MARTIN.

Current Literature

A Life for God in India. By Helen S. Dyer. (Revell.)

A record and a memorial of the life and work of Mrs. Jennie Fuller, missionary in Akola and Bombay.

A Christian or a Church Member—Which? By John G. M. Lutenberger, D. O. (Paper; pp. 83, $50. Published by author, 5104 Morgan St., St. Louis.)

An appeal for a view of religion which shall redeem man through and through, body, soul and spirit. The author quotes Scripture abundantly and makes many practical points which are well worth thinking about.

Lomai of Lenakel, A Hero of the New Hebrides. By Frank H. L. Paton. (Revell. $1.50 net.)

This book, by a son of Dr. John G. Paton, tells the story of some remarkable missionary work on an island of the New Hebrides group, and is a sequel to the Autobiography of John G. Paton. It is "a living and unanswerable proof that the Gospel can transform almost demonized cannibals into Christian heroes."

India's Problem, Krishna or Christ. By John P. Jones. (Revell. $1.50 net.)

The author has spent twenty-five years in missionary and educational work in India, and writes with a thorough knowledge of the field—if anyone can be said to really know a field so vast and varied. The book is a comprehensive treatment of the conditions, problems, processes and results of Christian missionary work in that land of many races, tongues and faiths.

The Better Way. By Charles Wagner. Translated from the French by Mary Louise Hendee (McClure Phillips & Co. $1 net.)

Out of the confusion and complexity of the modern Babylon, comes a voice pleading for simplicity and sincerity. Out of the city of glittering sin, comes a call to follow the better way. Charles Wagner, a Protestant minister of Paris, has some true words to speak to this generation, and he is saying them in a way which commands and receives attention. His volume entitled "The Simple Life" is not only a gem of literature, but is the voicing of some most sane and wholesome sentiments about the art of living. We need such warnings in this age of clutter and contrivances, when we are in constant danger of losing sight of life itself and its real value under the encumbering multiplicity of things and devices and diversions which are supposed to make life pleasant. And now comes this later volume called, in English, "The Better Way." The title in French is "L'Ami," that is, The Friend, and the book is arranged as a series of dialogues between a man and that inner companion who is the embodiment of all his best impulses and truest insights. It is a little book of indescribable power, full of wisdom and tenderness and of those views of life which make for peace. We can recommend it most heartily as a book with a unique charm and with a message which all of us need. The two extracts which were printed on the cover of recent issues of this paper will serve as samples of its style and spirit.

A Reply to Harnack on the Essence of Christianity. By Hermann Cremer, D.D., LL.D., Professor of Theology in the University of Greifswald. Translated from the third German edition by Bernhard Pick, Ph.D. (Funk and Wagnalls. $1.00 net.)

It is not to be supposed that all Germany has run after Harnack, though his brilliant writings have acquired a wonderful vogue in his own country, and have been imported into ours rather more than those of the theologians who represent the more conservative view. Dr. Cremer's Reply has been generally accepted as the most adequate and important that has yet appeared. The book is not in reality a reply to Harnack, for the two men occupy such radically different points of view and are so constitutionally unable to appreciate each other's position, that it is almost impossible for them to make a clear issue except on an occasional detail. So Dr. Cremer's book seems to us to be a supplement and a corrective to the undue emphasis which Harnack places on some aspects of truth, rather than a reply to, or a refutation of, Harnack.

In upholding the testimony of the apostles, as recorded in Acts and in the Epistles, as credible and first hand evidence regarding pure, original Christianity, Dr. Cremer strikes a true note which Harnack misses.

In saying that "Jesus himself accomplished nothing until his death," and virtually eliminating the human life of Jesus as a source of Christianity, he strikes a false note, of which Harnack would be incapable. In theology, as elsewhere, extremes meet, and it is curious to observe how this conservative writer, in his anxiety to combat the theory that the essence of Christianity is to be found in examining the life of Jesus as depicted in the gospels, comes dangerously near to the position of modern liberal Jews who claim that Christianity did not originate with Jesus, but with his disciples after his death.

Again Dr. Cremer says, and thinks it important enough to put in italics, that "he (Jesus) is not, like ourselves, a subject of religion; on the contrary he is the object of the religion, the object of Christianity." If what he means to say is that Jesus was not merely a Christian man whose example is worthy of imitation, as that of any other Christian man may be, he says what no one will deny. But if he means what he explicitly says, that Jesus, during his human life, was not a "subject of religion," then he takes away all religious value from the earthly life of Jesus and casts suspicion upon the genuineness of his human experiences which, according to any theory of his person, play so large a part in fitting him to be the Savior of sinful men. That he was "tempted in all points like as we are," that his fight against sin was a real fight and not a sham battle, that his prayers were the sincere expressions of a soul reaching toward God, that his agony in the garden was a real agony—these are truths with which Christianity cannot dispense. But how can it keep any vital hold upon them if it is to deny the reality of his religious experiences and assert that he was not "a subject of religion," but only its object?

Nevertheless Dr. Cremer's work is a very valuable one and it should be read by every one who has read Harnack's book, and especially by those who are disposed to swallow all the statements of the latter unquestioningly. As an antidote for acute Harnackitis—a theological malady which is considerably in vogue just now—it will prove valuable. But it cannot be warranted to bring the thoughtful reader to an acceptance of all of its author's opinions, nor can it prevent the discriminating reader from finding much that is helpful in Harnack's book. It is to be regretted that the name of Dr. Harnack is more than once misspelled in this volume which replies to him.

More October Magazines.

The Century for this month is a Sportsman's Number, with several good articles on hunting and some good color pictures on the same theme. An article of special interest treats of the new method of hunting—with the camera. This new line of approach to the beasts and birds has several advantages over shooting; it does not diminish the supply of game, it encourages a more intelligent study of wild life and a more sympathetic attitude toward it, it requires more skill, and it produces more permanent trophies. Richard Whiting's serial, "The Yellow Van," is concluded in this issue.

One of the most remarkable developments of present-day journalism is the ten-cent magazine Everybody's under its new management is setting a new pace even in that fast race. The publishers say that they have

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powdered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

gained 100,000 in circulation in the past five months, and it is easy to see why. The current number is a specially excellent one. "The Lotus and the Cockleburrs" is the best piece of humor of the month. An able writer in an article on "Chicago," endeavors to do what Mayor Carter Harrison declares to be impossible—to tell the truth about that city.

The World To-day is a journalistic magazine with 140 pages of reading matter devoted chiefly to current topics. The weekly paper, "Christendom," after a brief, but brilliant career, made over its assets to The World To-day, the most valuable of the assets being its editor, Prof. Shailer Matthews. The magazine shows an impressive list of distinguished contributors and is in every way a commendable publication.

An interesting feature of the Critic this month is a series of composite photographs representing various combinations of the most authentic Shakespeare portraits. The new serial "The Jessica Letters," a literary correspondence between a New York editor and a talented young woman of the south, promises to be well worth following.

The North American Review presents as usual, authoritative articles on the most important current topics—currency legislation, Macedonia, lynchings, flood prevention and irrigation, the outlook for Ireland under the new land laws, and the pope in international politics. Pres. Thiving has an article on "College Training and the Business Man." Henry James' novel draws happily near an end.

Text.—"For the invisible things of him since the creation of the world are clearly seen, being perceived through the things that are made, even his everlasting power and divinity."—Romans 1:20.

The Beginning.

There is a strange sublimity of mystery in the beginning of the Book of books. It is simple as any nursery story; so much so that the unwary might read it once, and throw it aside, thinking he had grasped it all. But if we read it with the child's mind, the very charm of its simplicity will bring us to it again and again; and as we read, the story grows upon us, like the wonders of a virgin forest, or the prospect from a mountain-top. We see the shades of primeval night dispelling, and the clouds rolling in from the sea and up the slopes, until the newborn land is revealed. We see the April beauties of grass and tree, scattered about the landscape by a hidden hand. Our wandering gaze pierces the depths of waters, and finds them peopled with their myriad tenantry; and the warble of the song-birds breaks upon our listening ears. Wonder after wonder bursts from the teeming matrix of young Mother Nature.

Man's First Experience of Nature.

In the midst of all these marvels, suddenly there walks a new wonder, stranger than they all. Erect, alert, he moves, with a child's amazement and delight written in his every feature. See how he scents the rose, and stoops to pluck the violet; and even in his stooping pauses to catch a strain from the thrush's song! Now he is lured by the whisper of a stream, and stands beside it to see the leaping of the trout. Now he follows its course into the open vale, and lifts up his eyes unto the hills beyond. Now the reddening evening sun attracts his eye. From beneath his shading hand he gazes upon it, until it clothes itself in gorgeous curtains of cloud, and glides behind the mountain-ridge. Still he stands, with his face turned toward the paling west, until the evening star comes out; then, one by one, the little lights of heaven; until, turn where he may, gentle eyes beam upon him from every part of the sky. And as the full moon begins her stately course, the vaster world above his world seizes upon his soul with some sense of the majesty of its proportions, and quickens wonder into awe.

The Idea of Continuity.

But if the passing day and maiden night can evoke these solemn emotions, what of the dawn, with its thousand changing tints and its opening freshness? The glory of the new day is but a reincarnation of the old. Every new dawn brings to his mind the brightness that was heralded by the dawn of yesterday. Thus each succeeding day is but another pearl upon a shining string of memory, and each declining winter sun and freshening breath of spring calls to his mind the unbroken sequence he has found in all the works of nature. He begins to know what will be from what has been. There is no conscious gathering of facts, and summing of them up, and learning of laws from them; but simply a vague wontedness of wonder, and a spontaneous expecting that is half-remembering, and does not separate the accidental from the essential. He is the child-scientist, with his hand in that of Nature; and she, volatile, impulsive, wild, undisciplined in the hard school of a scientific civilization, leads him in the tortuous paths marked out by her own fickle fancy. Still, broken and knotted and tangled as is this first thread of sequence which she spins, it is yet a thread, and holds his experiences together. The world coheres, and the things he sees acquire a new charm, because he can expect and anticipate them. They are all bound together by the great new-found law of continuity.

The Struggle for Existence.

Great as were these childish joys of seeing and learning, of wondering and expecting and realizing, they by no means took up all the time of primeval man. He soon learned that Nature could show her teeth as well as smile. The brute elements knew no favorites. The struggle for existence was not a spectacle upon the stage, for him to view and criticise from his safe seat in the balcony; it was an intense and stern and pressing reality, in which his watchword must be, "Victory or death!" Was he hunted? His enemies were both swifter and stronger than he. Was he the hunter? Whether his quarry were beast or bird or fish, there was always some escape—it could climb, or fly, or dive, or burrow, where he could not go. So he must put his wits to work. From sticks and stones it was but a step to the tomahawk, the spear, the bow and arrow, and the boomerang. He soon learned his power over the beasts, and ventured to attack even the aurochs and the cave bear. He made the dog his friend and servant, and hunted down the fleet and more timid game. He despoiled his fallen foes of their furs, and with that protection braved the Himalayan winter, and added the relentless seasons to his list of triumphs. He laid his even more skillful hand upon the wild wheat and the wild rice, and ruled the triple realm of nature. As occasion demanded, the sword became a plowshare, and the spear a pruning-hook. Confidence grew with success; his numbers increased; man helped man; until at length he moved among his former foes and rivals, a conqueror and a king. Fear fled before a consciousness of power.

The Intuition of Causation.

Man has thus changed from the passive to the active side in the struggle for existence. At first, when he was a plaything for the brute forces of nature, hunted by the great beasts, and buffeted by every pitiless tempest, he had felt nothing but effects, and had thought chiefly of what he experienced. But seeing that there was a certain sequence in those effects, and moreover finding it in his power to modify them, or even to produce effects of his own, there was fanned into flame that dull spark of mind within him that taught him to see in every effect the outworking of some adequate cause. While his restless mind, moved by an active curiosity, discerned the cause of many a simple thing in his everyday life, and shrewdly guessed that everything must have some cause, the question, "What is the cause of this?" often baffled him. The overflow of the Nile made his land rich and his crop of barley heavy, but what made the Nile overflow? The thunderbolt shivered the oak into a thousand splinters, but what caused the thunderbolt? The sun brought light and warmth, and song of birds, and blossoms, and days of labor, and the fruitage of the earth; but what mysterious cause was back of that silent and calm and sure return of days and moons and seasons?

The Idea of Divinity.

Man does not wonder long. His kindling imagination quickly peopled any unknown realm with denizens like himself, for he knew no other kind. Here we tread upon sacred ground, for we have the first beginnings of a possibility of the knowledge of God. The thought of an invisible Being, working visible effects, was undoubtedly the most stupendous leap that the growing mind had taken. It was vague at first, no doubt, and often interrupted; but it quickened the fancy and awakened to still more vigorous life that ever searching curiosity of his.

When he first conceived of a God behind the unsolved mysteries of nature, he must create him from his own imagination. He could hardly do else than think of him as an exalted and stupendously powerful man. Surely, thought he, the One who roars and flames in the thundercloud can see me, and is angry with me; surely it was some kind Being whom I cannot see, that led that big deer in my way on yesterday's hunt; surely, the One who lives in the sun has seen how cold I am, and how low my store of rice is running, and is coming back with his big fire to drive away the snow and tell the grass to grow and the birds to build their nests. And so he learned to regard the Unseen—whether one or many, to his mind—with all those feelings which his fellowmen called forth. He feared the earthquake god, and anxiously awaited the gift of the overflow from the river-god, and loved the sun-god, and secretly whispered his awe of the god who ruled the nightly host of heaven.

Polytheism.

Thinking thus of his divinity as a greater and deathless man, there was nothing in nature to prevent him, and everything in the constitution of his own mind to cause him, to attribute his own nature to God, even in those points where it was not manifested in the works of nature. Lust and selfishness and revenge; the tyranny and power and the thirst for conquest; pride and sorrow and fear; as well as the grosser necessities of eating and drinking, of sleeping and being clad; all these tended to enter into his conceptions of divinity. And it should be noted that in all this there was no thought of searching and proving whether these things were so—he imagined them, and therefore they were. It was not strange, either, that he should think of many gods, rather than one. Could a man do more than one thing at a time? And could a god overrule a battle here, and hurl a thunderbolt yonder, and keep the wheat growing and the sun shining, all at once? Surely not! And coupled with this sense of human attributes, there was the extension of other human limitations to Deity. His god could be persuaded, deceived, overreached, if man were only shrewd enough. One might escape from his power, or secure the aid of a stronger god. Such great thoughts as omniscience, omnipresence, omnipotence, and eternal consistency, as attributes of God, were neither natural nor easy for man to originate; and, once given to him, he easily lost them. As a result, his conception of worship was necessarily vague. A keen curiosity prompted him to feel after God, and to seek his face in all the ways of nature; a sense of his personality made it easy to regard him with personal feelings. Awe and fear, admiration and gratitude, deepening into a certain vague and fitful love, were all called forth by one wonder or another, but dimly, and in shadowy flashes, or like the struggling and broken murmurings of a man talking in his sleep. That fervent and trustful and adoring prostration at the feet of a heavenly Father, infinitely strong and wise and loving; that pure and sacred ecstasy of worship, food and drink and breath of life itself to the Christian's soul, was as far removed from the genesis of man's religious life as is the noon-day splendor from the earliest peep of dawn.

The Necessity for Revelation.

This, then—God like man, and gods like men—is man's highest and his best; virgin soil, indeed, but not the blooming tree of true religion, nor even its seed. That must await the gracious planting of revelation. Whether God began his speech with man long before, or awaited this full-grown tree of polytheism, it is not our purpose to inquire. Whether through the evolution of a century of centuries, or by a day's wandering amid the flowers of Eden, certain it is that man did reach the point where, without an unerring message from the Eternal, he must inevitably have begun to deify his own suicidal passions and follies. Voltaire voiced the truest necessity of man's childhood when he said, "If there were no God, we would have to invent one." And it must be true that God himself, great and far-seeing and wise, and loving through all and over all, kept a fond eye upon the first staggering footsteps of his child, and stood at hand to help him; listened and caught his first dumb heart-cry for a Father's love, and sprang to meet him, and told him in those sweet and simple nursery accents of the Book's beginning, the story of his conception and his birth. And listening man—glad in a new-found light and strength—what must he have said? What else could have been his utterance?

"When I consider thy heavens, the work of thy fingers,

The moon and the stars, which thou hast ordained;

What is man, that thou art mindful of him,
Or the Son of man that thou visitest him?
For thou hast made him a little lower than God,

And crownest him with glory and honor.
Thou makest him to have dominion over the works of thy hands;

Thou has put all things under his feet.
O Jehovah, our Lord,
How excellent is thy name in all the earth!"

What if we must bear a burden?

Have not others burdens, too?

Look about and then be thankful

That your burdens are so few.

HOW TO BE CURED. WITHOUT PAIN.

Don't wait until you are a helpless invalid, for a seemingly simple case of hemorrhoids, or piles, may, if neglected, rapidly lead to worse. The unnatural formations become tumorous and permanent, and the inflammation grows until abscesses form; the disease burrows into the tissues, forming tubular growth which discharge pus; cancerous conditions, and general gangrenous degeneration appear.

What is needed at the start, or at any stage, is something to soothe this inflammation, reduce the swelling and distension, and at the same time restore the diseased parts to normal condition. These three things are accomplished perfectly by the Pyramid Pile Cure. It checks all progress of the disease, and rapidly returns the affected parts to health, besides relieving at once the pain and fearful irritation.

"I began using Pyramid Pile Cure, and in order to make sure of a cure bought five packages; for the past six weeks I have not been troubled in the least, and I had been bothered for thirty-five years, and had spent more than fifty dollars for different remedies; this is the first permanent help I have had, and no one could feel more grateful that I do." L. M. Williams, Conneaut, Ohio.

Pyramid Pile Cure is sold by druggists generally for fifty cents a package, and we urge all sufferers to write Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., for their valuable little book describing the cause and cure of piles.

The Quiet Hour

"Thy word is a lamp unto my feet,
And light unto my path."

There is something very beautiful and instructive, too, in the way in which the Old Testament saints cherished the word of God and consulted its sacred precepts. They could exclaim:

"How sweet are thy words unto my taste!
Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth."

If the light of God, shining through the Old Testament Scriptures, was so precious to God's ancient servants, how much more so should be the brighter light of the Christian revelation to the believers of to-day? And yet is there not reason to fear that there are many professed Christians who have little or no appreciation of the richness and fullness of that revelation, and who neglect to study its sacred pages, or to make it a lamp unto their feet and light unto their path?

A lamp is to give light in darkness. How welcome is even a very feeble light that lights our pathway in a dark night along a difficult way! But moral darkness is more to be feared than the darkness of the night. Jesus Christ is the moral and spiritual light of the world. The light of his life shines in the pages of the New Testament, and is even anticipated in the Scriptures of the Old Testament. It reveals the moral dangers to be avoided, the spiritual perils that beset our way. Who can be safe without the heavenly light to illumine his pathway?

We plead, therefore, with our readers for a daily perusal of God's word. If only a few moments can be snatched from the duties of the early morning to ponder upon some great utterance of divine wisdom, accompanied with an upward lift of the heart to God that He may bless it to our good, it would linger with us and be a source of strength to us through the whole day. We are depriving ourselves of much-needed light and strength, yea, comfort and joy, by our neglect of this daily reading of God's word and daily communion with Him. Life has its dark days to all of us, and sooner or later we shall feel the need of the light that shines from God's word to guide us on our way.

Go to your duty, every man, and trust yourself to Christ; for He will give you all supply just as fast as you need it. You will have just as much power as you believe you can have. Be a Christian; throw yourself upon God's work; and get the ability you want in it.—Bushnell.

No man or woman of the humblest sort can really be strong, gentle, pure and good, without the world being the better for it, without somebody being helped and comforted by the very existence of that goodness.—Phillips Brooks.

O Thou who dwellest in light ineffable and unapproachable! "Now I Lay Me."

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere,
Like troubled spirits here and there
The firelight shadows fluttering go;
And as the shadows 'round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And softly, from a farther room
Comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And somehow, with that little prayer,
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thoughts go back to distant years
And linger with a dear one there;
And, as I hear the child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me,
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hand again.

O for an hour in that dear place!
O for the peace of that dear time!
O for that childish trust sublime!
O for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet as the shadows 'round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "Now I lay me down to sleep."

Not the Treaty of Paris.

By Dugald M'Killop.

Perhaps it was because Tilly was a girl that she did not always get along pleasantly with Marcus, who was not. She loved her five-and-a-half-year-old brother; not simply because he was little and her own brother, but really because she could not help it. And yet Marcus was a trial at times, no doubt of that. He just could not bear to have sister away at school several hours each day, and on each return Tilly was greeted with joy and delight, but sometimes in but a little while the dear children would begin to squabble over some matter which seemed great to them, but which mamma would call a trifle. The mamma of these children was one of those humble, noble women, who fear they know but little, and who are not surprised into knowing how wise they really are till their grown-up children, or other people call attention to the matter.

From day to day Mrs. Dodds spoke to the children about being kind to each other in word and deed, but small people have sometimes small memories, and so, off and on, Mrs. Dodds sighed, and had her husband help her in this at times.

On one vacation day it happened that Tilly was reading a book of history, for this particular owner of fluffy hair and numerous dolls (though but a poor speller) was such a reader that she fairly read everything she got hold of, and she loved to pore over such a book as Dickens' "Child's History of England."

Now, Marcus did not care to read history, and truth to tell, he could not; but he could tease Tilly, and he did. Miss Matilda could have stood the teasing, in patience, but did not, and then; well—the result was that their mamma was obliged to hasten to the room, looking kind of serious.

Said Marcus, in answer to the searching look from the doorway, "Well, Till called me a nimpuf mischief!" The accused Till rose to her feet, and was about to rise to the occasion in the usual way, but somehow the eye of the mother quieted her, and she hung her head. Wise Mrs. Dodds left the Dodds' children standing there, the girl flushed and mixed-up looking, the chubby boy as ferocious as it was possible for him to look, though just here it may be stated that Marcus at his worst was not very fierce.

After some time, during which Mrs. Dodds was busy in an adjoining room, a girlish figure appeared in the doorway, and then:

"Mamma!"

"Well, dear!"

"Let's make a treaty!"

"A treaty! What do you mean, my child?"

"Well, mamma," said Matilda, "I have been reading a lot about treaties, and I think Mark and I might make one."

"That is an idea," said Mrs. Dodds, laughing. "Well, suppose you try your hand at drawing one up."

After some study, Tilly showed her mother the following document, written in the vertical hand then being taught in school:

TREATIE

We the Undersined Tilly and Markus Dodds promise not to do another no harm till night to day.

(Sined) T. I. Dodds,

M. A. Dodds, X his mark.

The mother smiled a little, said it was a fair treaty as far as she could see, and then stuck it up behind a vase on the mantelpiece. Boy and girl ran off to play, and worked so hard at it that all else was forgotten. Once in a while voices sounded high, the prelude to a storm, but this seemed to be followed by a lull. Whether or not the paper on the mantelpiece had anything to do in bringing about the calm no one seems to have inquired. But at bedtime Tilly said suddenly:

"Mamma, I like treaties. I just wish we could have one for a whole week."

"What do you think of that plan, Marcus?"

"I fink the pwan is all wite, I do!" said the little man.

Editorial Limitations.

The belief that an editor knows everything is widespread, but one small boy has discovered the limitations of the editorial mind. Here is the anecdote as we get it from a contemporary:

"Father," asked this small son of an editor, "is Jupiter inhabited?"

"I don't know, my son," was the truthful answer.

Presently he was interrupted again:

"Father, is there any sea serpent?"

"I don't know, my son."

The little fellow was manifestly cast down, but presently rallied and again approached the great source of information:

"Father, what does the North Pole look like?"

But, alas! again the answer: "I don't know, my son."

At last, in desperation, he inquired, with withering emphasis:

"Father, how did you get to be an editor?"

The Color Line.

The United States mail service is continually handling all sorts of curious things, but all previous records were broken, so far as the Omaha post-office is concerned, when a kitten, properly tagged and addressed and stamped, was pushed through the window labeled "Packages." The sender was a colored boy so small that he could scarcely reach the window, and, when the clerks explained to him that the animal could not go through the mails, and forced him to take it back, his contempt for the institution was unlimited.

"Why can't I send it?" he wailed. "It's a present to ma aunt, and they all needs a cat. I done spend ma money for stamps for dis animal, and spec' youse don't take it 'cause I'se colored."—The Ram's Horn.

The Money That Slips Away.

"I get fifteen dollars a week, and I never have a single cent of it when Saturday comes," said a boy of nineteen to me one day not long ago.

"Perhaps you have some one besides yourself to support," I said.

"No, I do not," was the reply. "I pay four dollars a week for my room and board at home, and all the rest goes."

"How does it go?"

"Well, it just seems to slip away from me somehow or other. I just cannot save a cent of it. There's so much to tempt a fellow to spend money nowadays. I never expect to save a cent."

I looked at the young man as he stood before me. He wore a handsome tailor-made suit of clothes. His tie must have cost a dollar and a half, and he had a pin on the tie for which he had said rather boastfully that he had "put up eight dollars." His link cuff-buttons were showy and expensive. A full-bloom rose, for which he paid twenty-five cents, was in his buttonhole, and one of his pockets was bulging out with expensive confectionery. I heard him say that he and "some of the other fellows" were going to have a box at the opera the next night, and that it would cost them three dollars apiece. And yet, he could hardly tell just why it was that he could not save anything.

Now, the men who have made themselves independent, and who have money to spend for the good of others, were not like this young fellow when they were boys. Had they been like him they would never have been independent. I suspect that this boy will verify his own prediction that he will never save a cent. He certainly will not until he acquires more wisdom than he seems to have at the present time. The wealthiest man I know once told me that from his earliest manhood he made it a fixed rule never to spend all that he earned.

When he was nineteen, he began teaching a country school at a salary of eight dollars a week, and he saved three dollars of it. Later, when his salary had been increased to ten dollars a week, he saved four dollars of it, and when he was earning fifteen dollars a week, he saved seven of it, investing it carefully.

Of course, he did not wear tailor-made clothes, and did not buy a new tie every two or three weeks and pay a dollar or more for it. I doubt if he ever paid a dollar for a tie in all his life. And yet he is by no means niggardly, for he gives away thousands every year to the suffering and for the benefit of humanity in general. There were temptations for him to spend all his earnings, but he did not yield to them. I have heard him say that he never went in debt for anything. If he could not pay for it, he went without it. Some one has said: "Never treat money with levity; money is character."

It is certainly proof of a great lack of force of character when a man allows all of his earnings to "slip away from him somehow or other." There is an unhappy future in store for the boy who spends all that he earns. The boy who begins by doing this is sure to spend more than he earns before very long.

I have knowledge of a young man earning a salary of twenty dollars a week who had his wages attached by a tailor to whom he owed fifty-four dollars for five fancy vests. His excuse was that "a fellow had to dress well nowadays or be nobody." How much do you suppose those five unpaid-for vests added to his character or to his standing in the community? And of what value is the good opinion of those who judge you by the clothes you wear?

You may set it down as a fact that if you do not save anything in your young manhood you will be sure to have a poverty-stricken and dependent old age, and there are no sadder people in this world than the old who are wholly dependent on the charity of others for their support. If all that you earn is "slipping away" from you, you will be wise if you go straight to a savings' bank as soon as you receive your salary, and there deposit a fixed proportion of your earnings before it "slips away" from you. And having once deposited it, let nothing tempt you to draw it out. Any successful business man will tell you that this is good advice.—Young People.

The Old Spring.

A path that leads from the kitchen door,
Through a little garden plot,
Down past the cherry and apple trees
That grow in the pasture lot,
Thence on through a beechen avenue
Till you hear the waters trill
Upon the pebbles and over the stones
By the old spring under the hill!

The old spring under the hill is cool,
With blotches and rifts of sun;
Its air is as grateful and fresh and sweet
As the air of a summer dawn.
The song of a bird in the trees above,
Below the song of a rill,
Are the only sounds that are heard around
The old spring under the hill.

How oft we have trudged in other days,
When boys and girls at our play,
To the shade and stillness of that old spring
Remote from the garish day!
How oft by its sparkling waters clear
We have knelt and quaffed our fill!
And never a draught was so sweet as that
From the old spring under the hill.

The years are many, the years are long,
Between us and that fair time;
We hear no more the tinkling song,
Nor the water's silver chime;
But oft in the mirror of memory
We can see the image still
Of the winding pathway, the shadows deep,
And the old spring under the hill.

The Harm Slang Does.

There is still another serious objection to the use of slang. It tends to limit the vocabulary of him who uses it. Now a limited vocabulary is almost as inconvenient at times as a limited purse, and it is far more intendant. If there was practically limitless wealth within the reach of him who was minded to take it, it would argue a certain stupidity in any one who declined to avail himself of the supply. The same assertion holds true with regard to him who is willing to limit his choice of words. There is even more to be said than that. There is a limitless wealth of words at our disposal, but the most of us are too stupid to make use of them.

There are about two hundred thousand words in the English language. The average educated person is able in reading to understand perhaps twenty-five thousand words, but the most of us who write and speak, limit ourselves to about five hundred or six hundred. Indeed, there is a vast number of fairly intelligent people, or people who pass as fairly intelligent whose working vocabularies do not comprise more than three or four hundred words each.—Adeline Knapp, in the Household.

A Marvel of Science.

During a visit to the South with an eclipse expedition some years ago, says the Omaha Mercury, an eminent American professor met an old negro servant whose duty it was to look after the chickens of the establishment where he was staying. The day before the eclipse took place, the professor, in an idle moment, called the old man to him and said: "Sam, if to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock you watch your chickens you will find they will all go to roost."

Sam was skeptical, of course, but when at the appointed time next day the sun in the heavens was darkened and the chickens retired to roost, the negro's astonishment knew no bounds. He approached the professor in awed wonder. "Massa," he asked, "how long ago did you know dat dem chickens would go to roost?"

"Oh, a long time," said the professor, airily.

"Did you know a year ago, massa?"

"Yes."

"Then dat beats de world!" exclaimed the astonished old man. "Dem chickens weren't hatched a year ago."

A Valuable Asset.

There is no better passport into good society and prosperous business than politeness. A boy who is able to number this among his possessions has a good capital with which to begin business.

The following story shows how true politeness was once rewarded: Two boys, the one a gentleman's son and the other the son of a poor widow, applied to a merchant for a situation, when the latter was chosen. A trifling incident decided the choice. Just as the two boys came together to the merchant's door, a poor, ragged girl fell on the icy sidewalk and lost her pennies and cried bitterly. The first boy laughed rudely; but the other went to the girl's aid, and, fishing in the gutter for the pennies, found one and replaced the others from his own little purse. The merchant observed all, and, though the first had strong recommendations and the other none, the poor boy's politeness secured him the place.

Politeness costs so little, and withal is so valuable, that the wonder is that any one should neglect its cultivation. —The Children's Visitor.

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

M. J. O'Dell, Lebanon, Mo.: "Wonder how many of the 3,000 Advance Society members would like to take an advance step in mission work? What a delightful work it would be for the Advance Society to adopt a child from some orphanage for its very own! Do you not think we could do what many local Endeavor Societies are doing?—support and educate a child in some of our mission fields. Let us hear from the Advance Society on the subject." This idea should appeal to every reader of this page, and I should like to hear from every one in regard to it; not only from those who keep our five rules, but from those who are interested in our Av. S. Children who appreciate the advantages of home-life must sympathize with orphans. If by our means some child may be given a happy life, rescued from lonely years, and brought into a companionship of love and usefulness, what greater good could we do? Imagine yourself without father or mother; without a home; without a place where you feel it your right to be; without friends who look upon you as one of them. If you were in that condition, what joy would be yours to be taken charge of by the Advance Society, given a home and an education! We have that chance to make some lonely child happy and a blessing to the world, instead of a burden, and in doing so we will find ourselves, it may be, happier than we ever were; for it's lots of fun to make another person happy!

You who are no longer children, reflect what your life might have been had you been left in some orphan home with no one to care for you but an organization which had in its protection a hundred other helpless ones. And in reflecting upon such a fate, join with us children of the Advance Society to take charge of one child and make its life happy and good. Now, I know we can do this if everybody goes into it with a will and some money all around. It won't take much money for each one, if each one helps, but each one never does that. It's pretty safe to estimate that the larger half of our 3,000 will do nothing. But that will still leave enough to care for our Advance Society orphan. It's pleasant to hear people talk about the good that has been done to little children, and about Christian unselfishness and generosity, but here is a chance to do a little of it instead of just talking about it and making prayers. You like to hear stories about the poor little child whom everybody imposed upon, and whom all the family neglected, but who finally turned out to be a princess with a lien on everything in sight. And now you have a chance to become a sort of a fairy-godmother yourself, and make some Cinderella of an orphan turn into a princess with a Christian heart and trained mind, which are better than glass slippers. Will you help in this work? Perhaps you can't wave a wand and turn rats to horses, although there are plenty of rats, but you can contribute a little money which will buy things more useful than horses.

I can't tell whether you are in favor of this plan or not, till your money comes. I'd like to know right away so we can begin work immediately. Please don't write me letters saying what a noble work you think it would be, unless you send your money in the letter. Those letters without money simply mean nothing. If you want to help an orphan, you will pay something to do it; and if you can't spare the money, don't say your heart is with us, because we can't do anything with those kinds of hearts; we can't swap them for anything. How much must you send? Send what you feel you can spare for the purpose, if it's only five cents. It is only right to tell you, however, that five cents will not go very far. But if that is all you can send, the sending will do you just as much good, and I will be just as glad to get it, as if it were ten times that much (which would only be half a dollar, anyway).

I have made no inquiries after our orphan, nor decided where to seek one, nor will I do so, till I know the Advance Society is in earnest in the matter; I will know that when your money comes. If enough money doesn't come to do the work, I'll not spend it for some other good purpose. No, I'll return you every cent, except what it takes to buy your return money order. So you won't wait to see if enough will be raised, because if enough is not raised, you'll get back your money. I shall not charge one cent for my time or trouble. I am glad to give both for this purpose. Therefore, all you send will go to the orphan; I will have to make my living some other way. Another thing; don't send stamps, unless you can rake and scrape together only as much as five cents or a dime to send—and don't send stamps then, if you can help it. Orphans don't use many stamps. Another thing; don't think you have to give anything because you belong to the Av. S. If you don't want to help, we don't want you to. If there is to be an Advance Society orphan, it must be supported with love and cheerfulness. There isn't any good in giving when it's forced. Now young people, this thing must be decided soon, for I'm not going to harp on this theme week after week in our page. If you don't like it we'll drop it. If you like it, let's carry it through with a rush. As soon as I get your orphan, I'll tell you all about it, where it lives, what it looks like, what we will do for it. All money received will be acknowledged on this page, so the printed announcement will stand as a receipt. I don't wish to appear indifferent when I say you needn't help "unless so disposed." The fact is, I should like an Advance Society orphan above a trip to the World's Fair—what more can I say? It is my sincere hope that many older heads, reading these words, will dive into old pockets and send me something; something big enough to see without my spectacles. But I don't want a cent that is given grudgingly. Giving is like any other kind of good deed. If a brother falls, it's mighty poor Christianity that picks him up and then cuffs him for falling. I think it's almost like robbery to take money from a man when he wants to keep it—even if it's to pay the preacher. Same way with our orphan; if you want no stock in the same, invest in something else.

The Advance Society can do no grander visible work than the adoption of an orphan. You all know that. Then let's pray that the enterprise may succeed. I wish each one who reads this page, would turn to God in prayer and ask Him that this sacred trust may be given us, and that enough means may be raised to support it. But I don't want anybody to pray for this unless that person means to help by giving something towards the support of the orphan. Let that person pray for something else. I repeat the principle points of my discourse. I. Send all the money you can spare for the Advance Society orphan to my address; if enough money isn't raised to support the orphan, the amount will, in each case, be returned. II. If you are not glad to help in this glorious work, don't do it, and say nothing about it. III. Don't send stamps over ten cents' worth. IV. If you send anything, write your opinion of our scheme, and any suggestions. V. If you cannot send much, send little; it will do you just as much good, whether it does the orphan or not. VI. If you can't afford anything, don't feel bad about it. VII. If you are not a member of the Av. S. play like you are—and contribute. VII. Attend to this matter immediately.

The contents of this book are mostly New Music, but contains also the standard songs which are found in all first class music books.The sentiments of the songs are in strict accord with the teachings of the Christian Church.The following extract from a letter written by Chas. Current Events

Persons of the best intentions are sometimes subject to strange and serious errors of judgment which are dangerous both to themselves and to their neighbors. Just now the leaders of organized labor are making so many mistakes, and so many different kinds of mistakes, that the position of those who habitually defend the unions is rendered embarrassing. There is that man Parks, who is still threatening strikes by wholesale in New York and upon whom neither his allies nor his opponents have yet been able to put a quietus—though both have good reasons to desire it. District Attorney Jerome says that Parks will be back in Sing Sing within six weeks. If he is not re-convicted in his new trial, it will mean, for a time at least, the triumph of his program of blackmail, a winter of strikes, partly for revenge and partly for graft, and, according to one well posted authority, a loss of not less than sixty million dollars to New York. The fact that any considerable element of organized labor will support this Tammanyized regime in their own ranks, indicates a condition which may most charitably be called madness. A few days ago the Morse Iron Works were driven into bankruptcy because they were unable to pay an increased scale demanded by the International Association of Machinists. The walking delegate congratulated the union on the failure of the firm, and the union answered with cheers. The suicidal quality of this course is too obvious to require comment. When Samson pulled down the temple of the Philistines, he killed some Philistines, to be sure, but the whole wreck fell on himself.

As a result of the recent visit of the Czar to Vienna, during which the Macedonian situation was under discussion, identical notes have been sent to the Sultan's government by the Russian and Austro-Hungarian representatives at Constantinople, demanding the acceptance of the program of reform published some months ago and the establishment of a system of foreign control in Macedonia to carry it out. At the same time notes have been sent to the Bulgarian government urging it to use its influence to pacify the Macedonian insurgents so that Turkey might not make the continuance of the rebellion and the attendant disorders an excuse for postponing the introduction of the reforms. The reform plan was drawn up last February and was accepted by the Sultan without a quibble, but nothing was done toward putting it into execution. His two most important near neighbors now unite in a peremptory demand that the reforms be at once introduced. The reforms consist chiefly in the reorganization of the constabulary so that the Christian population will not be at the mercy of Mohammedan rural police; a reform in the system of taxation, which is at present absurdly oppressive; and a limited supervision of the general administration by Russia and Austria.

Sometimes, for brief intervals, the tail may succeed in wagging the dog, but this can never be a permanent or normal condition. It is the capital blunder of Wall Street that it thinks it controls the financial condition of the country. In reality it only records and reports it with more or less accuracy. Just now the report lacks a good deal of being accurate. The financial temperature of the country is very comfortable, but the Wall Street thermometer registers somewhere near freezing point. Railway stocks and industrials are quoted far lower than last year, yet the earnings of most of them are considerably higher and dividends are being paid as regularly as ever. Fortunately, the country does not have to shake every time Wall Street has a chill. The people who are speculating in stocks and carrying them on margins must, of course, have some anxious hours in these little pseudo-panics, but real business has nothing to fear from them. At no time in the history of France, says Carlyle, were the silent masses of the people more comfortable and peaceful than during the so-called "Reign of Terror," which owes its grewsome fame to the fact that "it was not the dumb millions who suffered here, but the speaking units who made the world ring with their wrongs. That is the grand peculiarity." It is well to be on one's guard against being deceived by a similar grand peculiarity now. Some balloons of speculation may explode with terrific noise, but the solid structures of business, great and small, are in no danger.

The trial of Ed Butler, the St. Louis broker in municipal ordinances, on appeal before the Missouri Supreme Court, developed some extraordinary arguments for the defense. "When is a briber not a briber?" is the conundrum with which the court is now wrestling. The trial court left little doubt as to the facts. That money was offered for legislation is as well established as it ever can be. But now, by way of defense, it is argued by the Butler attorneys that bribery is not bribery when the ordinance in the interest of which it is practiced fails to become a law, or that the official to whom the bribe was offered was not constitutionally qualified. To offer a bribe to an official on the hypothesis that he is authorized to perform certain acts or is in a position de facto to do so, and then to seek to escape responsibility for the crime of bribery by attacking the charter under which these benefits were to be secured, and claiming that the official was not qualified de jure to deliver the goods, is a procedure which has at least the merit of novelty. What view the Missouri Supreme Court will take of it can, of course, not be predicted. Since that extraordinary body delivered its opinion in regard to punishing libel as contempt of court, it is impossible to anticipate what decisions it may render about the most transparent matters. But to the lay mind it seems impossible that any tribunal which aspires to be in any sense a court of justice, can hold that bribery is not bribery when the criminal purpose fails by mere accident to bring its full fruitage of valid but venal legislation, and that the prosecution of such an offender can be confused and complicated by questions so remote as the validity of the charter under which the bribed official holds office, and the constitution under which that charter was adopted.

After a brief trial for the murder of Editor Gonzales, ex-Lieut. Gov. Tillman, of South Carolina, was acquitted. The defense was that Tillman was afraid Gonzales would kill him some time. The two men were political enemies, and with their political animosity was mingled a degree of personal enmity. Whatever fears Tillman may have entertained for his personal safety, there was nothing to show that he had reason to expect attack at that particular moment or that his act was in defense against an assault. The reasoning was about as follows: Tillman hated Gonzales and had been known to utter threats against his life. This being the case, it would be natural to suppose that Gonzales would hate Tillman and would, if convenient, give expression to his hatred by the same murderous measures. What each one thought and said was duly reported to the other. Each, therefore, had some reason to expect an attack from the other. That Gonzales did not consider himself in imminent danger and had no immediate intention of taking the initiative is shown by the fact that he carried no weapon. While he was thus neither expecting nor intending hostilities, he was shot down on the street. And in extenuation of this attack, Tillman's attorneys successfully pleaded "self-defense." If this is justice, than anyone may with impunity murder anyone whom he hates, and plead self-defense against the hypothetical attack which his enemy may perhaps be intending to make upon him some time.

Once more we give space to a statement of the conditions in Jamaica as the result of the great storm. As reports come in, there is still greater evidence of the present suffering and of the need of immediate relief. The following statement comes from C. C. Smith:

The Truth About Jamaica.

"This morning papers have come to me from which I glean that the suffering in the island of Jamaica is on the increase and must continue to increase for months to come. The half has not been told in regard to the conditions in Jamaica, and I presume the condition cannot be given in words. Indeed I am at a loss to know how to write so that it may be known how terrible and wide-spread the suffering there is and how urgent the call for us here in the United States to send aid to the brethren there.

"The reports of the commissioners sent to investigate the conditions of the island, are both heartrending and appalling. Of Chesterfield, one of our mission stations, the commissioner writes: 'It is no exaggeration to say that the situation is extremely critical. There is no food in sight and there cannot be until the bananas begin to bear fruit again. The yam fields cannot yield food for fourteen or fifteen months.' Of Castleton (another of our districts), he writes: 'A large number of the houses are smashed. I learn that the people have been subsisting on fallen bananas since the storm. These are now finished and many do not know where the next meal is to come from. A goodly number are already hungry and a few days hence will see a total absence of food.'

"W. A. Meredith, one of our missionaries on the island, says: 'Hundreds of the homeless and foodless people come to the mission house begging for aid, and the most painful part to us is our inability to give them the help they so urgently need.'

"The facts, briefly stated, are these: In, at least, 20,000 homes (representing 100,000 people), the inmates are on the verge of starvation; literally have no food, and no hope of relief from this condition, from the soil, can come before next April or May.

"C. E. Randall said in one of his letters that some of the 'American Relief Fund' was being used, but that that help was but small. Other religious bodies are sending relief funds to their brethren in Jamaica, and unless we do likewise our brethren will not receive aid.'

"I know that my pen fails to put the situation as bad as it is, but still if the above facts are not enough to cause our brethren to raise a splendid relief fund for Jamaica I know not what would. The C. W. B. M. has sent $250; it ought to be able to send $5,000 at once. Churches, brethren everywhere, societies, I appeal to you in the name of the Christ whom you serve, to send an offering, at once, for the Jamaica Relief Fund, to Helen E. Moses, secretary, 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind."

There was a time when highway robbery was considered the crime of the great and lawless west. Then New York and Philadelphia took counsel how they might apply to municipal politics the effective methods of highwaymanry—subtilized, to be sure, as the new conditions required, but not essentially altered—and great was the success of their project. The modernized method of robbery has now been reimported into the west. Missouri has its Jesse James of the ballot-box, and now Denver has been the scene of a great robbery. We publish on another page an account of the recent charter election in Denver. It gives particulars of a steal which commands admiration for its sheer magnitude and effrontery. The crucial points of the charter were those which placed limits upon the granting of saloon licenses, and provided for effective punishment of offenders against the excise law. The political plug-uglies stood against the charter as one man, and each of them voted against it as ten men—and all of their votes were counted. And when a great wave of righteous indignation arose and a grand jury was impanelled to investigate the election frauds, Judge Booth M. Malone—remember his name, Booth M. Malone—discharged the grand jury because "public feeling runs so high against violators of the election laws that it would not be advisable to have an investigation at this time." A Daniel come to judgment! Crimes which are so patent and outrageous that even the sluggish pulse of the easy-going respectables is quickened in indignation, must not be investigated. Let the courts confine their attention to the misdemeanors which are so petty that nobody cares. How honorable a work has Judge Booth M. Malone laid out for his profession. With such a judge, the Denver ballot-stuffers have no need for the Missouri ruling that the ballot-boxes cannot be opened and that it is more important to keep the ballot secret than to keep it honest. The meaning of Judge Malone's decision is: Know all criminals by these presents that the way to commit a safe crime is to commit a big one. If it is big enough to arouse indignation, it will be too big to punish.

The growing belief that the Senate is becoming less amenable to control by public opinion than it used to be, or than it ought to be, encourages the movement for a constitutional amendment to provide for the election of senators by popular vote. The Massachusetts Democratic Convention recently put a plank in its platform to this effect, and other states have done the same. The need of a change is clear. A congressman was protesting against the control which a senator from his state tried to exercise over his actions. "I am responsible only to my constituency," said the congressman, with a swelling chest. "No, sir," said the Senator, "you're responsible to the machine in our state, and I'm it!" If so, to whom is the senator responsible? There is a missing link between the Senator and the people of the state which he is supposed to represent. Popular election would help to supply it. But how shall this be brought about? Constitutional amendments come hard, especially when they strike at the power of the Senate, for specific amendments proposed by either house require a two-thirds vote of the other, and the Senate would never give the required majority. The only other way of securing the adoption of amendments is to call a constitutional convention, which Congress must do whenever two-thirds of the state legislatures petition for it. But such a convention has power to revise the whole constitution, and such a measure is too dangerous to be adopted except in case of emergency. The easiest escape is to treat the members of legislatures very much as we treat presidential electors, whose constitutional right to cast ballots for whom they please has dwindled to the mere formal duty of casting ballots in accordance with the popular vote. If any party in any state really wants a popular election of senators, let it agree to submit its nominees for the senate to popular vote, and let its candidates for the legislature pledge themselves to cast their ballots for the senatorial nominee who is chosen by the people. Put this in the platform of the party, and the thing will be done, so far as that state is concerned, without waiting for a highly improbable constitutional amendment.

The Detroit Convention.

The "City of the Straits" greeted us with open gates but with lowering and dripping clouds. All day Thursday and Friday, and late into the night the incoming trains brought car loads of delegates from the different points of the compass. White-capped young ladies of the reception committee were at the stations to greet and direct the arriving delegates. Addressing a group of these young ladies, a delegate asked, "Is there a 'Campbellite' Convention meeting in this city?" "No, sir," one of the young ladies replied, "but there is a Christian Convention meeting here, and you would better go to that." Looking at his wife, the inquiring delegate said, "Well, dear, as there is no Campbellite Convention here, I guess we would better attend the Christian Convention."

The Christian women, as usual, have led the way, holding their sessions first and giving the key-note. It is enlargement—more money and more missionaries. The first session began at 2 P. M. Friday, in the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church, whose large auditorium, including the galleries, was packed with an attentive and interested audience. The forenoon was given over to an informal reception in the basement of the Woodward Avenue Congregational Church, which is the "headquarters" of the convention. Here the delegates register, receive a delegate's badge and a program, and are assigned to their places. It was a glorious jargon of happy voices all forenoon, as friends greeted friends and talked together of matters of mutual concern.

But we have said the key-note of the Christian Woman's Board of Missions was enlargement. That was the note that was most prominent in the address of President Mrs. N. E. Atkinson, who did not take time to congratulate the women on having raised $147,800 during the past year. "We have 600,000 women in our membership," said she, "and only about 40,000 of these are enlisted. If all were engaged in the work, our means and missionaries could be multiplied by fifteen." Everywhere the missions need re-enforcement, and many ripe fields are waiting for the laborers. This same idea came out in the various reports and addresses made. The report of the corresponding secretary, made by Miss Burgess, the report of Miss Pounds on the Young People's work, the address of Miss Lackey, with its sad revelations of childhood suffering and degradation in India, where she has been for five years laboring as a missionary, all emphasized the needs of the great field.

It was a magnificent audience that filled the church in every nook and corner to hear the address of Bro. W. M. Forrest, late of Calcutta, India, on "Our Possessions in India." It was a great speech, sketching the history of that ancient land, so far as it is known, and pointing out the great conflict of antagonistic religious that are now contending for supremacy there. The speaker also pointed out the condition and needs of our own mission stations in that storied land, and voiced India's cry for the gospel of Christ in a most eloquent plea for enlargement. All the Mohammedan country, he said, was now dominated by the true followers of the false prophet, only because of the neglect of the false disciples of the true prophet, to occupy that land with the gospel of Christ. This is certainly a warning fact of history. It was a strong address and evoked enthusiastic applause. The session was made more impressive by the singing of Mrs. J. M. Philput before, and by Mrs. Princess Long after the address. These are both queens of sacred song, and we anticipate much from their singing.

These lines are written Saturday while the women are in session, and the friends of prohibition are about beginning their rally. All the signs point to a great convention. We shall telegraph later news.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

DETROIT, Mich., Oct. 19, 1903.

On Saturday the women closed a great convention, re-electing the same officers and planning for larger things.

The prohibition rally held on the same day in another part of the city was large and enthusiastic.

Christian Endeavor and Good Citizenship occupied the time Saturday evening in stirring addresses by F. G. Tyrrell and Oliver W. Stewart. The latter dealt sledge-hammer blows against the liquor traffic to an applauding audience.

The Home and Foreign Boards held their sessions Saturday, and the reports showed great gains all along the line.

On Lord's day about one hundred of our preachers occupied Detroit pulpits morning and evening, the churches of the city being generally thrown open to us, except those of the Episcopalians and Roman Catholics.

In the afternoon there were three great communion services held simultaneously in three of the largest churches in the city. Large offerings were made at these meetings for ministerial relief.

To-day the Foreign Society holds its session. We are using the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church for our regular sessions, while headquarters are maintained at the Woodward Avenue Congregational Church. The weather is now fine, clear and cold.

This is not the largest, but is likely to be one of the best conventions in our history.

Delegates are here from California to Virginia and from Massachusetts to Florida. Canada is largely represented and many other foreign countries.

J. H. GARRISON.

Earth's Dearest Spot.

When John Howard Paine wrote,
"Mid pleasures and palaces though we may ^{roam,}
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like he struck a universal chord of the human heart, and made his name immortal. It is the testimony of chaplains of penitentiaries and reformatories that if there be one appeal that can touch the heart of the criminal, no matter how far gone he may be in the ways of sin, it is the appeal to home and parents and childhood. Away back there, through the vista of years and through the smoke of many a conflict, looms up the far-off Eden of childhood and the old home. It is the one oasis in life's desert way. At times there come floating down across the years the strains of a mother's song, and it may be of a father's prayer. Many a wayward and wandering prodigal has testified that in the "far country" amid scenes of want and woe, there have come to him visions of the father's house, and this has been a restraining influence preventing him from going farther away, and often causing him to resolve, with the prodigal of old, to arise and go to his father.

If such be the sacred character of the home and the permanent nature of the influence which it exerts on the plastic minds of the young, who can overestimate its value as a mold of character and a fashioner of the life that is to be? How criminally neglectful it must be, then, not to see to it that the highest and holiest influences are brought into the home-life to work out their permanent results in the lives and characters of those who go out thence to meet the trials and temptations of the world! If parents could only know what impressions of a pure and abiding character may be made on the minds of the children by the reading of the Bible, and by an evening or morning hymn or prayer, they could not be so careless about maintaining religious worship in the home. More than preacher or other teacher is the molding hand of the father and the mother, shaping the characters and determining the destinies of the immortal souls committed to their care. Who is sufficient for these things? Only those who daily seek divine wisdom and grace to meet their parental obligations.

There rises before us as we write, a vision that often comes to us in the tumult and strife of these busy years. It is that of a humble home far removed from the city's tumult and strife and distant from the smoke and din of the railroad and its traffic. It is a sweet old country home, with its "Orchard and meadow and deep-tangled wild^{wood,}
And all the loved spots which my infanc

There is an old-fashioned garden where the old-fashioned flowers grew and flourished, the fragrance of which lingers even yet in memory. It is the evening time. The tasks are done. The lamps are lighted. A cheerful fire glows in the old-fashioned fireplace. The boys and girls are seated around the fireside, in an expectant mood, for the father has taken down the Bible, and is about to read from its sacred pages. His eyes are dimmed with age, but he can read by the feeble light the familiar words. The family kneels. It is the mother's voice that is heard in prayer. There is a quaver in it that tells of her intensity of feeling, and there is a pleading tone which all the kneeling children feel must be heard of God. It is father's voice again that is heard leading us in the familiar strain,

"The day is past and gone,
The evening shades appear."

These are the influences that make home the dearest spot on earth, and the very seed-bed of all those virtues and graces which should adorn character. If we could pluck out of our memory of home the hallowing influences of religion, it would be far less endearing and sacred to us. The children will soon be gone from the homestead. Soon they will be out buffeting the trials and temptations which beset every life. While they are yet with you, fill the home with the sweet influences of religion, that it may turn the current of their lives in the right direction, and remain with them an abiding force through all the stress and storm of life. In a word, let us try to make our homes here a preparation for, and a foretaste of, that brighter and purer home to which we all aspire.

An Era of Greater Things.

There are not wanting signs in our moral heavens that we are entering upon an era of larger things for the kingdom of God. The whole history of the people committed to the restoration of New Testament Christianity has been a series of victories, and its advocates have always worked under the inspiration of triumphs won and of new triumphs anticipated. Hope, or the brightest optimism, seems to have been a prominent characteristic of the movement through its whole history. This has grown out of the conviction of its advocates that they had a message for the world to-day—a message for both the church and the world. Apart from this conviction there can be no real enthusiasm in Christian service.

In the past, however, our victories have chiefly been in evangelistic work in the local fields where evangelists have gone to proclaim the simple gospel of the grace of God. Many of these efforts were carried forward on individual responsibility, and some of them by local churches. The era of co-operative effort came later. This has had a slow but steady growth because there were certain strong individualistic tendencies to overcome.

But we have learned the lesson that union of effort among ourselves is essential both to the propagation of the great truths and principles for which we stand, in our own land, and to the spread of this same gospel in other lands. It has taken years of experience to impress this lesson fully upon us, and even yet there are some who seem not to have learned it, but who cherish the impracticable idea that by individual effort, without concert of movement, we can accomplish the great tasks which have been laid upon us. The number of such, however, is gradually diminishing, and must diminish in the very nature of things, under the operation of the very laws of religious life and growth.

The advance step taken by all our missionary agencies, by our educational institutions, and our benevolent work, shows that we are entering upon an era of wider co-operation, of greater liberality, and hence of more splendid achievements. We have by no means yet reached the limits of our capacity for expansion. We are only at the beginning of our wider activities, our systematic, organized efforts. The increase which has been made during the past year and within the past decade is only a prophecy of what is to be in the years to come. Our national organizations are proving to be safe and efficient channels through which the liberality of the brotherhood may flow to the accomplishment of the desired ends. They include the evangelization of our own country, the assisting of weak churches in the erection of suitable buildings, the carrying of the gospel into foreign lands, the enlistment of our Christian women in this great service for God and humanity through an organization of their own, and also of the children of our homes and our churches in the same blessed work.

It is not simply the increased gifts to the various purposes mentioned above that furnish evidence that we are entering upon an era of greater influence. There is a corresponding growth in our conception of the magnitude of our responsibilities as stewards of the manifold grace of God. There is a clearer vision of what God expects us to be and to do in order to fulfill our high claims to be restorers of His gospel in its original purity and power. We are coming to see that not by profession, but by deeds, we are to make good this claim before the world. If primitive or apostolic Christianity be superior to any corruption of it, that fact must be made evident in purer living, in greater sacrifices for Christ's cause, in a closer unity, and in a better manifestation of the Spirit of God in the lives of those who are its advocates.

In the last analysis, the only permanent basis for unselfish service to God and to humanity is a spiritual life which lifts men to an altitude where the motives of faith are stronger than the appeals to appetite, to earthly ambition and the greed of gain. It follows that just as any people advance in their spiritual development, the higher needs of the world make a stronger appeal to them, and the solicitations of the flesh are more easily disregarded, and these two facts determine the direction of men's gifts and energies. This is why the increase of receipts by our various missionary organizations, and the larger gifts to education and benevolence, carry a meaning above and beyond the mere fact of the additional aid thereby accruing to these worthy enterprises. They are the sure harbingers of a deepening spiritual life, and this life of faith has in it the promise and potency of still grander achievements than we have yet dreamed of in behalf of the kingdom of God. It is on this foundation that we predict a steady growth from year to year of all these general interests, and a much larger number of generous gifts from our men of wealth to the cause of Christian education. The finger of God is surely pointing the way to greater things for the triumph of his kingdom among men, and we can not but advance.

Editor's Easy Chair.

For a time to travel across our great country, commend the Easy Chair to the glorious month of October, when Autumn has hung her yellow and crimson banners on the citadels of the everlasting hills, and Indian Summer spreads her soft haze over all the land. For a destination give us a national convention of the Disciples of Christ, "whither the tribes go up, even the tribes of Jehovah." There is nothing that gives more zest to a journey than its destination. There is no destination this side of heaven that has more inspiration in it to one who loves his brethren and the cause for which they stand, than a national convention, where gather the noblest spirits in the interest of the noblest cause known to men or angels. For traveling companions we would choose men and women having the same high ideals, animated by the same high hopes, and striving for the same great ends.

"For the friends that most cheer me on life's rugged road,
Are the friends of my Master, the children of God."

Given a combination of these favorable adjuncts of travel, and a day's journey on the train is an experience to be treasured up forever in the halls of memory.

As the Wabash train moved out from the great Union Station at St. Louis at 9 A. M. Thursday, we soon became acquainted, and found that there were aboard, bound for Detroit, Missourians, Arkansans and Oklahomans, and as it moved on its way eastward, Illinois and Indiana swelled our delegation until an extra car was put on at Decatur, and our delegates filled it. A short time sufficed to make us feel at home with each other, and our unity and joy found expression in a number of familiar songs, and the volume of music rose above the din of the train. The people sang as only delegates to a religious convention can sing. "At the Cross," "Sweet Bye and Bye," "Blessed Assurance," "Nearer, My God, to Thee," were some of the old favorites that rang out along the way, reminding the onlookers that a religious convention was going to be held somewhere, for what other kind of delegates sing in going to their conventions? Why has Christianity so much music in it? The answer is, it has more joy in it, more of the buoyancy of hope, than anything else on earth.

"Let those refuse to sing,
Who never knew our God,
But children of the heavenly King
May speak their joys abroad."

At Logansport we ran alongside a Big Four train, which was waiting there. Many of its passengers were on the platform and others were looking out of the windows scanning us as we were scanning them. It was apparent that it was a convention crowd before we discovered any familiar faces. They had that buoyant, happy, hopeful appearance that betrayed their destination. Soon we identified the Indianapolis and Irvington delegation, with others from Indiana and Illinois, and greetings went forth and back from car to car. Several windows went up and an informal reception was held. Delegates from the other train insisted they had a better crowd than we, and they were a pretty fine looking lot of people, but we replied to them by starting a song, and as our train moved on to the strains of our music we left them side-tracked to follow later. We have all heard the saying that "it doesn't matter by what road you go to heaven, just so you get there." So it doesn't matter much by which road delegates go to Detroit, so they get there; but all roads do not lead to heaven, any more than do all roads go to Detroit. Examine your guide-book and see if you are on the right road.

We have learned to-day that all the pleasure and profit of a visit to a national convention is not in the convention itself, but in the journey thither. That is a lesson many of us have to learn about "going to heaven." The joy is not all in heaven; much of it is in the journey there. This world is not a "howling wilderness," nor a "wilderness of woe." It is God's world. His smile is on it. His Spirit is in it. He gives us many foretastes here of joys that await us beyond. Let us sing along the way, and have sweet companionship with those we love. A little heaven here will prepare us to enjoy all the more the heaven that lies before us. We expect our fellowship with kindred spirits along the way, to-day, to have its culmination at Detroit, when all the converging roads land all the delegates there in a great communion of love and service. So heaven is to be not the beginning, but the culmination of the joys of the redeemed. . . . But we near our destination, and these lines, jotted down in the happy jargon of talk and song, must here close.

That Prohibition Rally.

DEAR BRO. GARRISON:—I see your committee has made a program for a prohibition rally at Detroit and, as usual, has put on none but third party prohibitionists. Nine-tenths of the voters of the Christian Church vote against party prohibition, and yet have no chance to be heard. The speeches at Omaha were all an attack upon the nine-tenths by the one-tenth, without a chance for reply. Do you think this fair? D. R. LUCAS.

Indianapolis, Oct. 12.

We do not think all the speakers at Omaha were Third Party Prohibitionists, and we are sure there were no attacks on brethren who do not vote the Prohibition ticket, at least not in any offensive way. We quite agree with Brother Lucas, however, that if there is to be any program of prohibition in connection with our National Conventions, every phase of the question should be represented. Brethren who believe there is a more effective way of dealing with the liquor question than by voting the Prohibition ticket should have a fair chance to state the reasons for the faith that is in them. We doubt, however, the wisdom of having such rallies in connection with our National Conventions. It was a mistake, in our own judgment, to arrange a program for a Prohibition rally at Detroit during the time of the C. W. B. M. Convention, and the editor of this paper disclaims any responsibility for such program.

Notes and Comments.

In a speech on good citizenship at Chicago, recently, ex-president Cleveland closed with the following eloquent peroration:

"In the day when all shadows shall have passed away, and when good citizenship shall have made sure the safety, permanence and happiness of our nation, how small will appear the strifes of selfishness in our civic life and how petty will seem the machinations of degraded politics! There shall be set over against them in that time a reverent sense of co-operation in heaven's plans for our people's greatness, and the joyous pride of standing among those who, in the comradeship of American good citizenship, have so protected and defended our heritage of self-government that our treasures are safe in the citadel of patriotism, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal."

True and noble as these words are, one cannot but think on reading them of another application of the sentiment that is still more true and more important. In the day when all shadows shall have passed away, and when the loyalty and unity of Christ's followers shall have made sure the triumph of the church and the salvation of the world, how small will appear the strifes and divisions in our religious life and how petty will seem the machinations of bitter partisans.

The District Plan in Texas.

We are now trying successfully the division of the state into districts that we may the better prosecute our Texas mission work. We have ten districts and in each of these an executive committee to select the workers and direct the work. The chief advantages are that it brings the mission work close to home; that is, under the eyes of the brethren; they can see what is being done and become personally acquainted with the workers. This removes much prejudice and enlists numbers who would remain indifferent if not opposed to the organized work.

We hold, in most of these districts, two conventions annually. These are essentially missionary institutes; thus the people are educated in the practical working of a systematic effort. At first there was some confusion growing out of the fact that the workers must settle financial accounts with two treasurers, district and state. We have overcome this difficulty by abolishing the district treasury. We take pledges for Texas missions, and while we have local boards for directing the work we have one common mission fund. This plan works well where it is sufficiently worked, and it is always the worked plan that works well. Our mission work is growing in Texas. In a late district convention, two brethren, elders in a church in a town of two thousand people, stood up and confessed that they had been readers of a certain paper which opposes organized missionary work, and said that they had been misled; that this work had been misrepresented, and henceforth they were for it. They both subscribed liberally for its support.

In another convention a faithful minister when urged to do so, gave as his objection to the "state board" that it dominated the churches, and was extravagant even to the misappropriation of means. A half dozen elders and ministers testified in the meeting that they had been doing work in fellowship with the "board" and that there was an utter absence of disposition to domineer, and that the money was faithfully and economically disbursed. When we asked the objector if he thought that he would misappropriate the funds, he said, no. We insisted that the "board" was only a committee of the best men that the brethren could look out among themselves, after the manner of the Jerusalem Church, and therefore scripturally appointed over this work. The objecting brother is now a district evangelist, and, far better than a stranger could do, it he is convincing those among whom he labors of the scripturalness, and importance of systematic and persistent work. If we are under obligations to "do with our might what our hands find to do," then we must choose the best methods. By the way, why should it be less scriptural to use consecrated common sense than to use a consecrated hand or foot for the Lord? But we are growing.

TWENTY - EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE Foreign Christian Missionary Society

The past year has been by far the best in the history of the Society. The interest has been deeper and more widespread than ever before. Most gratifying and encouraging advances have been made in every department of the work. The churches are coming to realize more and more that this is their one and supreme business. The receipts for the year amount to $210,008.68. As compared to the previous year this is a gain of $31,685. The churches as churches gave $79,785.46. This is a gain of $11,198.63. The offerings of the churches averaged $28.37. Six years ago they averaged $15.30. Next year it is proposed to ask the churches as churches for $100,000 on the first Sunday in March. Twelve have been added to the number of Living Link Churches. A Living Link Church is one that supports a missionary on the foreign field. It costs $600 to do this. There are now, all told, thirty-one churches of this class. The High Street Church, of Akron, O., supports two missionaries. Within five years there ought to be a hundred churches each with its own missionary on the field. Those who have undertaken to support a missionary testify as to the ease with which it is done. They find it easier to raise a handsome amount than a small amount.

The Sunday-schools have given $51,630.25. As compared with the year previous, this is a gain of $3,513.27. The contributing schools numbered 3,310. Of these, 1,251 raised their full apportionment. The Endeavor Societies contributed $7,009.14, a gain of $1,936.15 as compared with the gifts of a year ago. The Endeavor Societies are supporting 345 orphans at Damoh, India.

The Society received in the year from legacies $4,945.87. Compared with the previous year, this is a gain of $1,919.82. The whole amount received from this source from the first is $118,856.48. There has been received on the Annuity Plan in the year $30,930.50. The whole amount received for this fund from the first is $175,323.50. Of this amount $11,410.92 has been expended in paying for land and buildings in foreign fields, and $52,612.58 is now safely invested. The remaining $11,300 has been transferred to the general fund. The profits on this fund for the year amounted to $9,566.50. The Annuity Fund has been a marvelous blessing to the work. Without it we never could have done what has been done. In ten years there has been a gain of 300 per cent in the receipts.

The report shows that Ohio leads all the states, with $32,301.57. Kentucky is second, with $21,412.35. Indiana is third on the list of givers with gifts aggregating $19,795.93. Generous amounts have been received from England, from Canada and from Australia.

The watchword for next year is, "A Quarter of a Million for Foreign Missions." This is not too much to ask and to confidently expect from a great people for a cause like this. Before the Centennial celebration in Pittsburg in 1909, the gifts for foreign missions ought to amount to half a million a year.

Nine new workers have gone out from America. Two capable teachers have been employed in Japan. The new workers are as follows: H. P. and Lillian C. Shaw and Miss Alma Favors, a trained nurse, have gone to Lu Cheo Fu, China; Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Pickett have gone to Laoag, in the Philippines; Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart and Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Shelton have gone to open the work in Tibet, and Miss Rose T. Armbruster has gone to Osaka, Japan.

The missionaries at home on furlough have returned to their fields. R. L. Pruett and family and M. B. Madden and family have returned to Japan, Miss Effie D. Kellar to China, Miss Stella Franklin to India, and Dr. and Mrs. R. J. Dye to Africa. They went back refreshed in body and mind and praising God that to them was this grace given that they should preach among the nations the unsearchable riches of Christ. Others have come home on furlough. Thus, W. P. Bentley and family, of Shanghai, China, Frank Garrett and family and Miss Mary Kelly, of Nankin, China, and Miss Bertha Clawson, of Osaka, Japan, are now in this country. While restoring their wasted energies they will visit the churches and conventions and will rehearse what the Lord has done through them.

At their own request, W. H. Hanna and H. P. Williams and their families were transferred from Manila to Laoag in the Philippines. This place is in the northern part of the Island of Luzon. They organized a church of Filipinos in Manila, secured a building, and left it under native control. The outlook in Laoag is bright. A. E. Cory and family have been transferred from Lu Cheo Fu, China, to Nankin. He goes there for the present to assist in the college. A new man has been appointed for that position. When he reaches China, Brother Cory will return to the evangelistic work. Miss Nellie Daugherty, of Nankin, was married to Dr. Butchart and has gone to live in Lu Cheo Fu, China. John Johnson has left Smyrna and will go to China. David Rioch and family have removed from Damoh, India, to take charge of the new mission at Hatta. Miss Maude Plunkett and O. J. Grainger were married, and now live in Harda, India.

The gospel has been preached far and near. Every missionary agent is a herald and makes it his business to speak good words for the Lord Jesus. The medical work is auxiliary to the evangelistic. Every school is a center of evangelism. Every publication has for its object the redemption of the readers. Great numbers have heard the Word of truth, the gospel of God's salvation. Over 70,000 patients were treated in the hospitals and dispensaries of the Society. Most of these were suffering from serious diseases. Some came hundreds of miles for relief. The poor were treated without charge. Every patient heard the gospel message and received a portion of the Word of God. Every one carried back to his own family some knowledge of the true God and of his Son, Jesus Christ. The medical missionaries are better equipped than ever before. The hospital in Lu Cheo Fu has been finished and dedicated. It is a spacious and convenient building. Dr. Macklin has an accomplished assistant. Mrs. Molland has charge of the hospital and the patients. From her the Chinese get new ideas of cleanliness and sanitation.

Day schools have been conducted as heretofore. In addition, work of a higher grade has been begun. A college has been started in Japan. This school bears the honored name of F. M. Drake. H. H. Guy is in charge. He spent two years in preparing himself for the position. The school opened with fifteen students. A graduate of Eureka College is preparing himself to teach in this institution. Fifteen thousand dollars have been secured for the enlargement of the college at Nankin, China. G. W. Brown has a training class in Harda, India. This is a nucleus of a Bible college. A suitable tract of land has been secured in Tokio for the college. Suitable buildings are in course of erection. A home for the president is being built. Land has been bought for a home for Miss Kate Johnson. In Osaka, land has been purchased for a home for C. S. Weaver and for a chapel. Both buildings will be completed within a few months. The street chapel in Wuhu has been bought. A strip of land has been bought adjoining the compound in Nankin, and another strip in Lu Cheo Fu. The chapel which C. B. Titus has been using has become the property of the Society. R. R. Eldred has built a small hospital on the Congo. The funds have been given by the students and teachers of Cotner University. Two homes are being constructed at Bolengi.

Bewildered Britain

By William Durban

The church has been distracted by the coming into force of the new Clerical Education Act. And now follows the cyclone raised by Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Balfour in their new attitude as protectionists.

Passive Resistance in Full Blast.

In all my long observation, I have seen nothing in the way of public agitation to equal that now raging in England over the execution of the Education Act. We are in the midst of the gale, and yet that gale has not yet reached the heart of the land, because London cannot be affected till next year. All over the rest of England warrants are being issued against Passive Resisters, who declare their determination to incur the utmost penalties of the law rather than pay the sectarian rate. Extraordinary things are transacting. Already 7,000 rate-payers in various districts have been summoned to appear in the courts and each week hundreds are served with distraint warrants. Furniture of every description is seized, and then it is sold at public auctions to indescribable accompaniments.

The New Protestantism.

All sorts of orations are delivered in the police courts by these Resisters, for every one has a right to be heard, and many an eloquent protest is made. In many cases, however, men and also women who never before uttered a word in public, blurt out bits of their mind to the magistrates. "God my Father does not mean me to pay it, and I do not mean to pay it," was the simple but forcible of one Resister. All this trouble arises from one singleroot of bitterness. That root is the desire of the government, instigated by the High Church Party, to foist on the country a system of elementary popular education which shall mainly be controlled by the priests, for the scheme of the act is so arranged as to put it into the hands of the parish clergy to influence irresistibly the appointment of teachers after their own heart. However splendidly qualified a teacher may be, he or she will have but little chance of securing an upper position without making a profession of attachment to the State Episcopal Church. This act is intended to establish the Established Church on firmer foundations than ever. But as always, the clergy have once more over-reached themselves. It is singular that they should simultaneously have perpetrated this error in both England and France. In the latter, the Jesuits have just been expelled, but unfortunately we have now the benefit of the presence of the majority of these exiled monks and nuns. I have alluded to the stormy scenes at the auction sales in various towns and villages. But I have not attempted to describe them. I will only say that in some cases three thousand or more excited people hoot the auctioneer and often he would be mobbed but for a strong force of police guarding him. Then there are torchlight processions with banners and songs and open-air orations. And in the midst of it all, the government gives no sign of interest, but has now made a new trouble for itself in taking up the tariff conundrum.

A Skull-Cracking Problem.

I discover that there is one big subject which nobody seems to have mastered. I refer to the dual question of free trade and protection. But as for myself, I firmly believe that retaliation in any department of life is unchristian and therefore immoral, and therefore ruinous to the nation which adopts it. I do not believe that protection is unchristian or immoral, or is necessarily hurtful to national interests. And I do not believe either that free trade is unchristian or immoral or necessarily hurtful to national interests. As England can produce only a little of the necessities of life for its teeming people, free trade might be rational. At any rate it has saved the masses from starvation by cheapening food prices through free imports. But the case is different with a nation which can produce its own necessary commodities. It may not need free imports, but it may need to protect for a period its infant manufacturing interests. I thoroughly believe that free trade has been good for Britain, and that protection has been good for America. But I equally feel convinced from all that I have learned by frequent sojourns on the continent, that protection has been an unspeakable curse for Germany, France and Italy. For Russia, again, protection has been and for years will be a political necessity. It is in certain respects like America, however different in others. I dread the experiment of a tariff of reprisals and retaliatory imposts. Even now it is an appalling fact that in mighty London one person in every twelve is either an inmate of some vast parish poorhouse, or is a pauper helped by the rates in some miserable hovel of a home.

Our Fleet at Suda Bay.

I now touch on a subject which makes many of our hearts to ache. We hear day by day repeated that awful cry from Macedonia, and some of us ask what is the use of the British fleet. It is true that a squadron of the biggest navy on earth is at Suda Bay, in Crete, and that the Sultan is restless while it stays there. Many of us are of opinion that the proper place of those warships would be inside the Dardanelles, close to Constantinople, with orders to be ready to penetrate the Bosphorus itself, and to take up a position opposite that Yildiz Kiosk—"The Castle of the Star"—where Abdul Hamid hatches in his murderous brain the plots which his miserable myrmidons carry out. Once more we English people must congratulate our noble American cousins. For your statesmen have had the courage and decision to order a detachment of warships to Beirut. That is the true way to touch the Turk. When shall the end of these things be? England is moving. Immense meetings are being organized, the first having been held this week at St. James's Hall, London. It was a magnificent demonstration, but there was no Gladstone to electrify the hearts of the hearers. England wants a grand leader. We have no Cromwell, no Pitt, no Cobden, no Bright, no Wilberforce, no Knibb, but only a squad of mediocrities who do not all know their own minds, and therefore naturally do not know how to lead the minds of the masses. We have no picturesque figure like your Roosevelt, no political administrator like John Hay to speak with the enemy in the gate. We rushed into war with a handful of Boers, but no clarion voice inspires us with the grand chivalrous impulse that would give the trumpet signal for a crusade to save our dying fellow Christians. A nonconformist gentleman of high commercial position and great wealth in London told me only yesterday that if England took up the cause of Macedonia, he knew that there would be a coalition of all the other great powers in Europe against her, and said he, a massacre in London would be infinitely worse than a massacre in the Balkans. As the gentleman is a very influential Member of Parliament, he ought to know better than I do what dangers might threaten, but it occurred to me that if we fail to do what God is calling us to do, because we fear that there might be a massacre in London, then that fear is sure to invite the great carnal, selfish, callous powers to attack us in concert when the opportunity seems to them to have arrived. No coward people ever escaped conquest and ruin. But there is no fear in the heart of the nation. It would rush to-morrow with indomitable ardor against the miscreant who lurks in the far corner of the Mediterranean, but it trusts its leaders to give the signal which is never given. Yet Britain's mission of mercy is surely not over. Her call to rescue the perishing will be yet heard and will be heeded. Then will be heard that "thunder booming on the brine," which the despots of the world dread. The guns of the navy, with which Cromwell threatened the pope, may speak on some unexpected day, and their echo will startle the world with a shock such as this generation has not yet felt.

Our National Benevolent Association

By Geo. L. Snively

No expression of our religion is more vitally related to the triumph of Christianity than are the altruistic ministries of the National Benevolent Association of the Christian Church. The Association is erroneously supposed by some to be an evidence of the increasing opulence of the Church of Christ and a manifestation of its growing power for good.

Christian benevolence is not a mere outgrowth of Christianity, but is of the root, stalk, branch, foliage and fruit of the tree of Christianity—without it there is no real tree of life. Neither is Christian benevolence a mere pulse token of the inner life of the church. It is of the very fibre of the heart of the church, with which the church loves; it is of the feet and hands of the church, with which it goes and does; it is of the eye of the church, with which it sees duty and privilege and inspiring millennial vision; it is of the beauty of the church, with which it attracts men unto it, and to the Christ within. Its relationship to Christianity is not functional, but organic.

The church without benevolence is a bridge with a single pier, an organ with half the manuals sealed, a task half done, a statue of Mercy with broken arms, a Christ teaching, but not going everywhere, doing good unto all men.

Proofs of benevolence's being a pillar of the church and a fundamental factor of Christianity, abound in the life and teachings of Jesus, in the autographs of his apostles, in the history of the primitive church as recorded by Luke in Acts, and other credible writers. As we read these books we are convinced that not otherwise than by the persistent practice of benevolence could the church have been instituted or maintained. Its Author, he whose name it bore, was already celebrated for feeding the hungry, as a healer of the sick, a comforter of mourners, before he said, "On this rock I will build my church."

With the first voicings of its own life and mission, it charmed even the ears of its persecutors with songs of cheer and promises of help. Its wake of living deeds and grateful beneficiaries has ever lengthened and widened with the years. Not its doctrines of sin, pardon, atonement, resurrection and immortality so much as the personal holiness and uncalculating altruism of its devotees, softened the hearts and stayed the brands of its furious foes. Through knowledge thus gained of good, antiquity found its God, and when persecutions ceased, all enjoying that first era of peace knew it was the gospel of the helping hand that placed the laurel wreath of victory on the fair young brow of the church:

In view of this original and organic relationship between church and benevolences, it is almost incomprehensible that the development of this phase of the church should have been so sadly neglected by us, who as a people are distinguished above all others by zeal for the restoration of faith and practice apostolic.

True, our people have always been generous and have ever cherished sentiments of brotherly kindness, but previous to the organization of our National Benevolent Association, accomplished little more of real and telling work than we did on the mission fields before the incorporation of our Foreign and Home Missionary Societies. All the considerations justifying, those great organizations appealed to many practically benevolently disposed among us for the organization of this Association, whose members are doing all in their power to restore primitive Christian benevolence to its ancient place, prestige and power in the economy of the Church of Christ. God is wonderfully blessing their efforts with unmistakable evidences of his approval.

The national headquarters are at 903 Aubert Avenue, St. Louis. Mrs. H. M. Meier is president, Mrs. J. K. Hansbrough, corresponding secretary, and Geo. L. Snively, formerly pastor of the church at Jacksonville, Ill., general secretary. These, with many gifted, consecrated colleagues, are endeavoring to increase the membership of the Association, the number of its correspondents, its revenues, endowment, variety of service, centers of activity and power for alleviating distress.

It now has regularly accredited vice-presidents in more than one thousand churches; it has cared for more than two thousand orphan babes and children, and is now giving sweet asylum to many aged Disciples. Orphans are received into the Homes at St. Louis and Cleveland regardless of religious affiliations. At present only Disciples who have come to seventy years in absolute indigency can be taken into the Old People's Homes at Jacksonville and East Aurora. None are more cordially welcomed than aged ministers and their wives. It is hoped ere long, small stipends may be accorded some of these, enabling them to live 'neath their own vine and fig tree.

A department of the work now attracting intense interest is the hospital and nurses' training department. It seems incredible, almost, that for ninety years we should have challenged the attention of the religious world as claimants of the honor of restoring primitive Christianity to the world without dedicating one hospital to the honor of the Great Physician.

The president is now advocating the institution of a sisterhood under the auspices of the Association, whose membership may be drilled in a proposed training school for Christian usefulness as teachers in our orphanages, as care-takers in our homes for babes and old people, and as nurses in the hospitals we ought soon to establish in many cities. This sisterhood will be a splendid medium through which hundreds of our gifted young women, for whom the fashionable rounds of social indulgence have no charms, may redeem their years and fill them with holy ministry and consecrated delight.

These ministries are maintained by the voluntary offerings of Disciples. In 1892 the Association adopted Easter as the special day for instruction in this grace by press, pulpit and Bible-school, and as a time for special offerings to be given by the people through the Bible-schools. This day is rapidly growing in popular favor, and its revenues are increasing most gratifyingly. The supreme interests of the kingdom commend the general observance of Easter as an occasion for the propaganda of the grace of Christian philanthropy. Every preacher should dedicate an annual sermon to this cause with an earnestness and eloquence no less intense than is consecrated to world-wide evangelism. Our press should glow with fervent exhortations to emulate the goodness of Christ and his first disciples toward helpless age and orphanhood and the friendless sick.

Too general is the sentiment growing that the church is a "mere theory of righteousness and not a practical aid in the solution of the world's great woes." The absolute refutation of this dangerous heresy is wrapped up in the benefactions of the Association. Nothing else so successfully tends to the popularization of the church and turning of men to Christ as the doing of practical good under the auspices of the church—to seek to save men from poverty and cold and hunger and despair, while also seeking to save from sin and an adverse judgment.

Value of State Missions.

Our neighboring state, Missouri, is a living exemplification. For more than twenty years she has kept an active and efficient force in the field. In that time the church membership has doubled. County seats where we are unknown are rare, churches are planted in destitute fields, weak churches are visited and helped and the moral tone of every community is uplifted. Jefferson City was and is a mission, and the missionary there began the great fight for clean government. So it may and should be in every state.

W. A. OLDHAM.

Current Interest in the Crucifixion.

By W. J. Lhamon.

This is the title of a suggestive article in a recent issue of The Biblical World by Professor Charles Gray Shaw. The Christological view-point of the writer is apparent. He sees quite clearly "the fact of Christ," and he teaches that the Christ as a fact must be presented in a historical way. Since Christ is a fact, and therefore belongs to history, he cannot be fairly presented in his death alone, but his life also has historical value. Thus one is driven to continuity in the study of Christ, and in the acceptance and presentation of him. From this it follows that the atonement also is a fact inhering in the whole career of the Redeemer, and not pertaining merely to any isolated portion of that career. The whole Christ becomes thus the atoning Christ. The death has value in connection with the life, and as the climax of the life. To such a life, such a death was inevitable, and in such life and death, vitally associated with human needs, vitally sympathetic with human sufferings, vitally experienced for the love of men—in such life and death there is atoning, reconciling power.

A few quotations, though so brief as hardly to be just to the writer, will help the reader to an appreciation of his position.

"Christ's message was a gospel of death as a part of the natural order; his crucifixion became a life force relating man to God."

"In itself, the historical point of view deserves recognition, and when once theology has adopted it, much light will gather upon the problem of the atonement."

"The crucifixion was the culmination of Christ's career. Herein the true perspective may be found; and to this Christian thought must adjust itself."

"History and historical religion bring out the career of Jesus Christ as given in the gospels. When these documents are studied in the light of Christ doctrine and the effect which this had upon the world, they bring out the fact that from the outset the teaching of Jesus was certain to bring about his death."

As my purpose is to give the pith of this article, and to suggest a view of the atonement that has done my own life great good, I find it convenient to close with a longer quotation. But let me beg the reader to remember that the theme of the atonement is a vast and sacred one and that it is only a suggestion that I am offering. Devout minds view it from many a different angle, but all must agree in accepting it as a great and precious fact. I rejoice in the belief that the historical, rather than a dogmatic study of it is now in the ascendent, and in the further belief that such a study must ultimately be corrective of fragmentary and legalistic views of it that have grown impossible, if not repulsive, to the greater portion of Protestant Christendom. I offer, therefore, the following closing quotation.

"From two distinct quarters there may be noticed the tendency to separate the life of Jesus from his death. On the one side traditional theology has put practically all of its emphasis upon the death; on the other side the claims of Christ's life have been urged. The result has been to break up the unity of his mission. The desire of the church has ever been to exalt the crucifixion, because therein is to be found the atonement. On the part of rationalistic thought the aim has generally been to magnify the life of Jesus, his wise teaching and benignant work. Where orthodoxy has spoken of Christ's ministry, it has done so in a brief fashion, without attempting to relate his doctrine and his historical deed to systematic theology. Thus it has failed to measure up to the significance of Christ's life, while yet regarding his death as supreme. Others have begun with the historical career of Jesus, but have halted at the crucifixion. They have considered the death of the founder of Christianity as the noble end of a martyr. In this way theology has been abrupt in its beginning, starting at once with the Lord's death; rationalism has made an equally brusque termination, concluding as it does with Christ's life."

Christian Education.

By J. Hopwood.

Christian education is the hope of the world. Distinct aggressive teaching of righteousness, both by example and precept, is the ground work for all advancement in homes, government or church. Public schools and state schools are great powers for good, but when conducted from the secular standpoint alone, they only give us agencies, forces, and except these forces are filled with the spirit of righteousness they will not carry the human race toward God. All that saves our country is the fact that so many of the teachers of these schools and state universities are Christian men and women, and their lives and incidental teachings make a partial leaven for good.

When the Jesuits turned their attention to teaching, that they might propagate their doctrine, they were wise. When the Church of Christ realizes that there ought to be a Christian academy in every one hundred miles square, an aggressive Christian college in every twenty or thirty thousand square miles of average population, then they will have the underlying idea necessary to evangelize the world.

These schools should stand distinctly for Christ; for the religion of the Christian dispensation; for a standard of righteousness in business and politics the same as in home or prayer-meetings. They must mean work and growth in godliness. They must be the hope and glory of the church. Through them the young people are to go out into business, law, preaching, carrying with them ideals of perfection through Christ.

This thought is possible of application. Five millions of dollars as a general fund could inaugurate the work. Local communities would add as much more and philanthropists would rejoice in the opportunities that it would suggest to them. It is of little concern how highly developed are the public schools and state universities. A school planted and conducted as distinctly Christian will always command an interest and find a patronage. If it should be planted in a country where there are but few members of the church, a high standard of Christian life, hope and hard work would bring young men and women to the school. These students would be field messengers and workers for the school's life and progress. Out of such a system of academies, colleges would naturally find support and at least two or three great universities would grow up.

BUSY DOCTOR

Sometimes Overlooks a Point.

The physician is such a busy man that he sometimes overlooks a valuable point to which his attention may be called by an intelligent patient who is a thinker.

"About a year ago my attention was called to Grape-Nuts by one of my patients," says a physician of Cincinnati.

"At the time my own health was bad and I was pretty well run down but I saw in a minute that the theories behind Grape-Nuts were perfect and if the food was all that was claimed for it, it was a perfect food, so I commenced to use Grape-Nuts with warm milk, twice a day, and in a short time began to improve in every way, and I am now much stronger, feel 50 per cent better and weigh more than I ever did in my life.

"I know that all of this good is due to Grape-Nuts, and I am firmly convinced that the claims made for the food are true. I have recommended, and still recommend, the food to a great many of my patients with splendid results, and in some cases the improvement of patients on this fine food has been wonderful.

"As a brain and nerve food, in fact as a general food, Grape-Nuts stands alone." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Our Silver Jubilee

By F. D. Power

More than a hundred and fifty enthusiastic souls came up the past week to the Vermont Avenue Church, Washington, D. C., to the twenty-fifth Anniversary of the Christian Missionary Society of Maryland, Delaware and D. C. The quarter of a century has been a fruitful one. Beginning at Rockville, Md., in November, 1878, with eighteen delegates pledging $150 for state work, with but ten churches and missions in the territory, having a membership of only 1,635, we have gathered more than $25,000 for state work, organized fifteen churches through state evangelists, and added 2,250 to the saved.

These figures, however, do not begin to represent the good accomplished by this organization. It has brought so many earnest souls into loving fellowship; stimulated churches and missions to greater faithfulness, larger liberality and more heroic endeavor; cultivated the spirit of missions in all our people; aroused Sunday-schools, Christian Endeavor Societies, Women's Auxiliaries, preachers and workers of every class to render a service worthy of their high calling; shown its blessed fruits in the offerings for home and foreign missions and in souls born into the kingdom of Christ.

There is no better field than ours. These two great cities, Washington and Baltimore, the capital of the nation and the capital of the South, with nearly one million souls; these two growing commonwealths, Maryland and Delaware, with their 1,700,000 people, their political, commercial, intellectual and religious influence, their commanding position in the mighty East and developing South, their present needs and future possibilities. Only one-third of this population has been brought into the churches, and 350,000 of these people are negroes who offer an inviting field for missionary service. In Baltimore, with an estimated population of 560,000, we count 1,500, and in Washington, with 290,000, we claim 2,000. In only six out of twenty-three counties in Maryland have we any representation, and these are mainly country churches; and in Delaware, with 157,000 people, we have but one church with sixty-seven members, and our embryonic seaside resort.

The progress made in this territory, however, will be seen when the figures of our jubilee meeting are contrasted with those of the first convention. Then, 18 delegates; to-day, 150; then, 10 churches and missions; to-day, 33; then, added during the year, 247; to-day, 684; then, membership, 1,635; now, 5,345; then, amount raised for all purposes, $6,245; now, $59,246; then, raised for all missions less than $300; to-day, $6,824; then, in Sunday-schools, 1,228; now, 3,867; then there was no co-operation, no evangelist in the field; now we aid in the support of nine workers, who added the past year 239 to the saved. These figures are modest enough, but they tell a blessed story.

The convention opened on the 7th with "Preacher's Day." Papers were read by H. C. Kendrick, on The Preacher and His Limitations; F. B. Sapp, The Preacher and the Spiritual Life; G. W. Lindner, The Preacher and the Jew; W. S. Hoye, The Preacher and the Country Churches; J. R. Gaff, The Preacher and His Books; J. O. Shelburne, The Preacher and Protracted Meetings; C. C. Jones, The Preacher and His Bible; W. F. Shinall, The Preacher and the Lion in the Street; P. P. Hasselvander, The Preacher and Temperance; Jacob Walters, The Preacher and His Finances; and W. H. Dickerson, The Preacher and the Prayer-Meeting. W. H. Schell presided over the morning and D. E. Motley over the afternoon session. B. A. Abbott gave an effective Bible Study, and the day closed with a Silver Anniversary address. W. C. Wade, Bernard P. Smith, W. R. D. Winters, J. T. Watson, P. A. Cave, D. A. Snow, W. F. Winbigler, of the Baptist Church, and Dr. J. E. Gilbert, of the Methodist Church were presented. R. P. Shepherd, of New Jersey ably represented Church Extension.

The reports of the Board and of the churches were inspiring. Three new churches were organized during the year; Wayesboro, Antioch and Lansdowne, and a large percentage of increase was gained at Riverside Park, Baltimore and Martinsburg, W. Va. The A. C. M. S. assisted during the year to the extent of $1,026.66 and the State Board raised $1,565.50. New fields have been opened, some old ones revived, and all the missions under the care of the Society have prospered. It was resolved to enlarge the work and increase the apportionment ten per cent.

The Woman's Session was a very profitable one. Nine auxiliaries to the C. W. B. M. reported for Maryland with 363 members, raising $667.26. The District of Columbia reported four, with 182 members, giving $317.87. Ladies' Aid Societies raised $1,635.22. There was a C. W. B. M. "Drill," an eloquent address by Miss Lura Thompson, the national organizer, a number of our Baltimore women gave brief papers on the Stations in India, and some of our Washington Juniors, from Whitney Avenue, under Miss Payne, gave a flag drill. A glad session closed the day with addresses by W. J. Wright, George L. Snively and W. P. Bentley, representing our national societies. Mrs. Rosenau, of Baltimore, presided.

The Sunday-schools have a prominent part in this convention. Thirty-one schools reported 140 conversions and $3,389.44 contributed. Ninth Street, Washington, received the banner for largest attendance, conversions and offerings. Miss Lena Summy gave an interesting, illustrated primary lessons, and Charles D. Wagaman, of Hagerstown, an address on The Relation of the Sunday-school to the Church.

The convention closed with a large C. E. Consecration Service, Peter Ainslie delivering the address, and W. L. Harris conducting a conference "When I Go Home—What?" The blessed dead were not forgotten, a tender memorial service being held in remembrance of Ira W. Kimmel, Alexander Newcomer, H. C. Stier, Mrs. Susan F. Summy and Miss Ruth Stotemyer. The next meeting goes to Martinsburg, W. Va.

Altogether this Silver Jubilee was a worthy one. G. P. Rutlege and B. Q. Denham looked in on us at the close. E. B. Bagley made a fine presiding officer and was re-elected president, and J. A. Hopkins was again chosen corresponding secretary. All our preachers, save one, were present. Five of our churches are without pastoral care. One, a country charge, has averaged for twenty years $8,000 annually for educational, missionary, and benevolent work, aside from a generous support of its local interests and the building of a $14,000 house of worship. Is this the banner country church in the brotherhood? Our educational fund is now $3,000, and fourteen young men have been aided, two of whom are missionaries on the foreign field. Jacob B. Thomas, John W. Horner and William Newcomer were the patriarchal figures of the convention. Bethany Beach received all proper consideration. The society's property is transferred to a board of control representing the larger interests of the brotherhood in the east. The part taken by business men and the younger men and women was specially noticeable and gratifying. Music of the best quality was furnished by the choirs of Vermont Avenue, Ninth Street and Whitney Avenue Churches. Come to Maryland if you wish to learn the best convention methods. Charles B. Richards, our pastor at Petersburg, Va., and Miss Ida M. Atwell, of this city, were married here 12th inst. by E. B. Bagley and F. D. Power.

Faith is better than fame or fortune. Fame is the fleeting breath of man that is mortal. Fortune is the doubtful blessing of a day. Faith sweetens every solitude, softens every grief, is our chaperon through the last lone valley, our guarantee of glory and our friend through the eternal years.—The United Presbyterian.

Guiltless Before God.

By W. O. Moore.

It is no light matter to trifle with the word of God. It means to trifle with what pertains to spiritual life. To deny Christ; to depreciate the need of faith in him; to speak lightly of the necessity of obeying Christ, would be regarded as a terrible course to follow, or as a terrible position to occupy.

Some will exalt some portions of Christ's word, and others other portions. Some can make much of all that is said about faith. They depreciate baptism. Others make much of faith and baptism, and perhaps not much of other commandments. It is well to know the whole will of God, that we may obey him fully.

A commandment that has received little attention by many, is the commandment to go into all the world and to preach the gospel to every creature. It is the first commandment in Christ's last charge to his apostles. Why should this commandment be obeyed? We assign some reasons:

1. Christ commanded it. Respect for Christ's authority will prevent a disposition to be careless about what he requires. Can a church disrespect this commandment and be guiltless before God? Does it possess the Spirit of Christ?

2. Obedience to the commandment to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature makes it possible to bring the gospel, with all of its commandments and promises, to the attention of all. "Faith comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. How can they believe in him of whom they have not heard?" If we are not anxious that all may know Christ, that they may believe in him and obey him, how can we be guiltless before God? Have we the spirit of Christ? "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his."

3. The disposition to go into all the world with the gospel should possess our souls. The love of Christ should constrain us. Interest in the redemption of those out of Christ and out of the regions where the gospel is proclaimed, should move us to help in every movement to carry the gospel where it is not known.

4. Paul said: "Woe be me if I preach not the gospel." Again he said: "Knowing the terror of the Lord, we persuade men." Many a time I have heard the preacher say: "Those out of Christ are under condemnation." If this be true, how greatly the church should be exercised with the desire to reach such souls with the gospel! Is it not true that the church is under great condemnation if it is void of the missionary spirit? The church that feels no disposition to say, "Woe to us if we preach not the gospel," is under fearful condemnation. It is not guiltless before God. It keeps its light under a bushel if it knows what God demands it should do for the heathen and says and does nothing.

Shall we say that the church is not educated, that it is ignorant of its duties to the heathen world? If it is, then how can the heathen world be saved from its ignorance of Christ and the salvation which he offers, before the church is saved from its ignorance of duty to the heathen world? Woe be those who neglect to hold forth to the church its duties. Woe be to the church or churches that care not to know what God demands that they should do that the gospel may be extended unto all the world.

How Shall the Christian Grow?

By Clayton Keith.

We are all "babes in Christ" when we enter the church. What a pleasant sight it is to every parent to observe the budding graces of their children! It was a proud day for mamma when the little one took its first step, when Willie "stood lonie" for the first time. See the plant how it grows; first the tendrils, then the leaves, and afterward the extension of the vine, and all toward the light.

So with the Christian; if he abides in God's love and in the sunshine of his presence, he will grow day by day. In order to promote this growth, however, there is much that he can do. The young Christian asks the question, "What can I do?" The answer is:

1. We can pray. Every Disciple of Christ should learn to pray as soon as he enters the church. There is no duty better to begin with than prayer in commencing our reformation in life. Prayer will help us to grow. The Christian who is often upon his knees realizes the presence of God, not only in prayer, but in the guidance of his daily life. No truth has been more clearly demonstrated to the satisfaction of every pious heart than has this. In the language of Chas. Elliott, "Then is my strength renewed," and with Chas. Wesley:

"Restraining prayer we cease to fight;
Prayer makes the Christian's armor bright,
And Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

2. We can study God's word. We should know the Bible in order to wield the sword to advantage in the daily conflicts of life. "Oh, how I love thy law," said David; and like him we should "hide God's word in our hearts." This can be done by reading it daily; reading and meditating thereon.

3. We can assemble ourselves together for the worship of God, and for the observance of his ordinance, the Lord's Supper. When health permits, we should allow no childish or worldly excuse to come between us and this duty. To neglect it is not only to cease to grow, but to become weak, and begin to walk with a halting, tottering gait.

4. We can live a consistent and godly life. It is our duty, as far as possible, to live a holy life in the sight of God and before the world (2 Tim. 2:11, 12). We pray, we read the Bible, we engage in his worship, that we may be able to do God's work—to perform the daily duties of life. Our life work does not consist alone in praying or in reading the Bible or in worship. We engage in all of these that we may gain strength to go forth to the work to which God has called us, our proper and chosen sphere in life.

This requires labor and patience and a vigilant watchcare over all our passions. The language of the good old Quaker should be ours. Said he: "Let me do my whole duty fully and thoroughly now, for I shall not pass this way again." And if every Disciple of Christ resolves to so live that something may be written daily to his credit by the recording angel, his growth will be assured.

Why Support State Missions?

1. Because, in general, a man's first duty is at home. "Begin at Jerusalem" was the command.

2. Because the world must be evangelized in detail, not en masse. Business, common sense, patriotism, all say "Win your home state for Christ."

3. Because the state board is on the ground and is supposed to be conversant with the field and thus able to use the money wisely.

4. Because each state is the "reserve force" from which the world's work must be augmented.

DOCTOR KNEW

Had Tried it Himself.

The doctor who has tried Postum Food Coffee knows that it is an easy, certain, and pleasant way out of the coffee habit and all of the ails following and he prescribes it for his patients as did a physician of Prosper-town, N. J., one of his patients says: "During the summer just past I suffered terribly with a heavy feeling at the pit of my stomach and dizzy feelings in my head and then a blindness would come over my eyes so I would have to sit down. I would get so nervous I could hardly control my feelings.

"Finally I spoke to our family physician about it and he asked if I drank much coffee and mother told him that I did. He told me to immediately stop drinking coffee and drink Postum Food Coffee in its place as he and his family had used Postum and found it a powerful rebuilder and delicious food drink.

"I hesitated for a time, disliking the idea of having to give up my coffee, but finally I got a package and found it to be all the Dr. said. Since drinking the Postum in place of coffee, my dizziness, blindness and nervousness are all gone, my bowels are regular and I am again well and strong. That is a short statement of what Postum has done for me." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

News From Many Fields

Texas.

The writer has just closed a meeting of two weeks at Lufkin, in which there were 28 additions; some dozen or more of them men. This meeting was held under very grave difficulties. The first week the preacher was sick and unable to preach; the second week the rain came and the electric lights went out for three consecutive nights. Money was raised to employ Brother Jackson for all his time as pastor, and a building committee was appointed to solicit funds and build a new church house, which is greatly needed.

In passing through Houston, I learned that Bro. A. F. Sanderson was doing a fine work, and that the members were well pleased with their new pastor.

J. C. Mason, our new corresponding secretary, is getting the work well in hand and is ingratiating himself into the hearts of the mission workers. Mason is a level-headed man and counts the cost well before undertaking any class of work. He will succeed.

John W. Marshall is in a very successful meeting at Paris, where G. Lyle Smith ministers. There had been 14 additions the first two weeks of the meeting, with prospects of many more to follow.

E. M. Waits pastor of the church at El Paso, writes that the work is prospering in that thriving city, but that a new house of worship was the problem with which the church had to contend. This they need, as the little chapel in which they meet is not at all adequate to the demands of the city.

The church at Pilot Point will soon be without a pastor, as Brother Adcock has resigned, to take effect January 1. They want some live, wide-awake pastor to take his place. Let all correspondents address G. Flake, Pilot Point, Texas.

Abilene, Sweetwater and Pecos Churches are all without pastoral aid; the right men are needed at these places. B. B. SANDERS.

Austin, Oct. 8.

The Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home is now assured. Two hundred acres of excellent land has been purchased, located on the Interurban car line, also on the Texas & Pacific railway, twenty miles from Dallas. This will give us a farm in connection with the Home. Property worth $10,000 or more was left by Mrs. Fowler's will for this purpose. Bro. A. J. Bush has been asked to take the superintendency of this Home. No better selection could be made.

A city evangelist, employed by our State Board, is another forward move. His duties are defined, "a builder, one who will spend weeks or months in one city, if need be, securing church sites, buildings and developing into good working churches, with regular ministers, the missions as they are begun." One of the most successful men in the brotherhood will be engaged in this work in Dallas when this is read.

Bro. M. M. Davis, although comparatively a young man, is probably the senior Texas pastor as to service with one church. He and his church celebrated on Sunday, Oct. 4, their thirteenth anniversary as pastor and flock. Brother Davis came to the Central Church as minister and found it burdened with debt. In the midst of his labors there was a collapse of the "Dallas boom." Many of the well-to-do members were heavy losers. At one time it was thought the property would be sold for debt. The agent of the Roman Church looked through the building with a view of purchasing it, but the faithful minister labored earnestly, and at last successfully; the debt is paid and the brotherhood of Texas saved the chagrin of the failure of the greatest church enterprise in Texas. This church has raised $172,000 in these thirteen years. Long may this happy union of shepherd and flock be continued.

The many friends of R. E. McKnight will rejoice to know that he is doing a splendid and substantial work at Cisco.

Atlanta with 21 additions. One result of the Graves-Oder meeting at New Boston will be a new house of worship. J. C. MASON.

It has been reported that Hugh McLellan, of Richmond, Ky., has been called to Seventh Street Church, Richmond, Va. This is an error. Seventh Street has called H. D. C. MacLachlan, of Shelbyville, Ky. It is not yet known whether he will accept or not.

During the recent months, A. J. Renforth has been preaching at Riverview, on Hampton Roads, near Hampton, Va. There have been a number of accessions. A lot is owned by our people, and a chapel is being built, which will be opened Nov. 1. H. C. Combs is expected to conduct the opening service.

C. B. Richards, at Petersburg, Va., reports three confessions in the month of September. W. J. Hall reported 18 accessions in Piedmont District.

J. T. T. Hundley, who has held some very successful meetings this year, and organized one good congregation in a county hitherto unreached by us, has been called to Norfolk. Brother Hundley has accepted the call and entered upon his work the first Sunday of October. He is an aggressive young preacher, and already has plans for lifting the debt from the Norfolk Church. Brother Hundley and the Norfolk Church ought to be a strong team.

J. A. Campbell, Lee County evangelist, had 21 accessions last month.

F. F. Bullard and wife are happy because the walls of the new $18,000 church are now going up. Lynchburg, with this new church, and Virginia Christian College, bids fair to be a center of influence for the Disciples of Christ in the Old Dominion.

A new church will be dedicated near Newport, Va., the first Sunday in November. This church is in a section where there are a hundred children who have never attended a Sunday-school.

B. P. Smith, who recently resigned at Charlottesville, after a successful pastorate of seven years, has been called to Rochester, N. Y. Although we did our best to keep him in Virginia, we are informed that he will accept the New York call.

The Virginia State Convention will be held in Seventh Street Church, Nov. 3-6. The opening exercises will be at 8 P. M., Nov. 3. Churches that have not sent an offering for this year are urged to do so at once, so that the offering may appear in this year's report. Our books must close Oct. 28. Delegates are urged to send their names to Michigan.

Let Michigan Disciples carry the Detroit convention into every church in the state. Go to Detroit prepared to carry as much of the convention away with you as possible. Do not fail to give a report to your home congregation. In this way only can the convention do our churches the greatest good. There are hundreds whose hearts hunger for the feast, but are prevented from sitting at the table. They will rejoice to partake of the crumbs you may take them.

Michigan day is near at hand. Here is a privilege in which all may share—the privilege of helping to bear the bread of life to the multitude in our great state who know not Christ. "It is more blessed to give than to receive." Let every member of every congregation in our state claim this blessing. Nov. 1 is the day. Let nothing stand in the way of this offering. Pray that it may be the greatest offering in the history of our work. The cause of Christ in Michigan demands it.

J. F. Green has closed a fifteen months' service with the Fifth Avenue Church, Grand Rapids, and is ready for work in another field. During his pastorate at Fifth Avenue, 57 persons were added to the church at regular services, and the church has prospered in every way. We hope that some good church in Michigan will secure his services, for we cannot afford to lose such men from our state.

G. W. Daines has accepted the work at Bailey, and is already on the field. He will assist the writer in a meeting at McCord's, following the Detroit convention.

The writer spent about two weeks in adjusting difficulties at Coats Grove and locating a man. Five were added to the church, and Bro. Alfred McCully was left in charge of the work temporarily. C. M. KEENE.

New England.

D. C. Tremaine, the young pastor of the church at West Rupert, Vt., has resigned on account of the ill health of his wife. He is uncertain where he will locate, but possibly will attend Eureka College and preach in a near-by town.

The West Pawlet, Vt., church was completely renovated during the summer and rededicated Lord's day, Aug. 30. The New England corresponding secretary preached the rededication sermon. A large delegation from West Rupert was present, the pastor participating in the services.

Bro. Charles Forster, the pastor of the West Pawlet church, is an Englishman, 25 years of age. He received his B. A. degree from the School of Evangelists, Kimberlin Heights, Tenn., and began his pastorate at West Pawlet last June. He is doing splendid work and is well liked by both the church and community. He possesses a good mind, a clear head, a true heart and gives promise of a great future. Such men are needed in New England.

Bro. J. H. Hardin, our New England evangelist, led a meeting at West Rupert and West Pawlet, Vt., during the month of September. Considerable interest was manifested; there were several additions and the work was greatly strengthened.

On Sept. 17 a public recognition of the beginning of the pastorate of Bro. J. McD. Horne, at Brockton, Mass., was held. Five of our New England pastors were present and took part in the exercises, a Congregational minister of the city giving the address of welcome. It was a notable occasion, inspiring to our people and helpful to the cause. Brother Horne, though but a young man, adds strength to our ministerial forces. He graduated from Eureka College last June, and was highly recommended by our good Brother Hardin. Beginning work July 15, he has already made his influence felt. The audiences are larger, the Bible-school has increased in attendance, there have been a number of additions and the outlook is very bright.

Bro. J. H. Mohorter has resigned from the Boston church, because of the continued illness of his wife. He has accepted a call to Boulder, Col., and will soon depart for his new field. Brother Mohorter has been in Boston for four years and one half. The church has made excellent progress under his ministry. Never in its history was it so active, nor the prospects so bright, as at present. He will be missed not only by the Boston brethren, but by all New England. May the new climate restore the health of Mrs. Mohorter and may heaven's richest blessing rest upon both of them!

The Haverhill Church recently burned its mortgage of $1,600. A year ago this church was pastorless and the membership greatly discouraged. They felt unable to employ a pastor. At this point Brother Mohorter came to their rescue and prevailed upon them to accept Bro. H. L. Calhoun as their pastor, who began work Jan. 15. Brother Calhoun comes from Lexington, Ky., and is doing post-graduate work in Harvard. He is a fine preacher, possessing excellent social qualities, rare tact and judgment. At once he organized the small force at his command, inspired them with hope and set them to work. He brought unity out of chaos, victory out of defeat, succeeding in arousing the brethren to accomplish what they thought an impossibility—the payment of their entire debt. They are now free and rejoice in their liberty. They have the right to thank Brother Calhoun the greatest leader in New England, and with increased faith and larger zeal we have every reason to hope that Haverhill will now forge rapidly to the front.

Brethren J. H. Mohorter and J. H. Hardin, (New England evangelist) of Boston, S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, Wm. Pearn, of Lubec, and the writer have been appointed delegates by the New England Christian Missionary Society to attend the Detroit Convention.

Denver Letter.

In my report of the Denver charter vote in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST of Oct. 8, I said, "It is proposed to carry the matter to the courts. There is, however, but little expectation of justice from them."

Yesterday Judge Malone dismissed the grand jury that had been called to investigate election frauds. The reasons given were that there is too much feeling in the community to proceed with the investigation, and the jurors might have unpleasant things said about them! In other words, when the conduct of an election is so outrageous as to unite the better element in its condemnation, and when the feeling against the thieves is so intense as to cause law-abiding citizens to use strong language in their denunciation of the scoundrels, then there must be no effort to discover the guilty parties through the regular processes of the law; that deserved punishment may be visited upon the guilty! Such is the decision of Booth Malone! This is the present situation in Denver on the subject of honest elections.

The exercise feature of the new charter was especially offensive to the liquor element. "The minimum retail license fee for the sale of intoxicating or malt liquors shall be one thousand dollars per annum." The fee is now $600.

"Licenses shall be granted only to persons in actual and continuous possession and ownership of the business licensed." One brewer now runs 120 saloons in Denver. His clause would interfere with that kind of business.

"No license for the sale of liquor shall issue to any person who has been convicted of any criminal offense, nor to any person twice convicted of the violation of any law or ordinance concerning the liquor traffic." Of course this clause did not make the new charter popular with saloon-keepers.

"When a license is revoked for a violation of the provisions of this charter or any ordinances, there shall be no renewal thereof to the same person, nor shall any license issue within two years to conduct at the same place a business of the same class for which the license so revoked was issued." The bearing of this is plain.

How such clauses as the above affected the vote may be seen by a brief stroll through the section of the city in which the saloons are situated.

In ward four, precinct three, the vote was, for the charter, 10; against the charter, 216. In ward 4, precinct 2, the vote was, for the charter, 10; against the charter, 240. In ward 4, precinct 5, the vote was, for the charter, 23; against the charter, 242. In ward 5, precinct 8, the vote was, for the charter, 14; against the charter, 299. In ward 4, precinct 6, the vote was, for the charter, 7; against the charter, 236. In ward 4, precinct 4, the vote was, for the charter, 4; against the charter, 406. In ward 3, precinct 8, the vote was, for the charter, 10, against the charter, 340. In ward 4, precinct 1, the vote was, for the charter, 12; against the charter, 194. In ward 3, precinct 8, the number of votes cast was 50. The vote turned in was, for the charter, 10; against the charter, 340.

situation, and the ruling yesterday of Booth Malone.

The Brotherhood of Saint Andrew, an organization of young men in the Protestant Episcopal Church, held its annual convention in Denver last week. The principal Episcopal Church in the city, the place in which the convention would have been held, was destroyed by fire a few months ago. The convention was, therefore, held in the Central Christian Church. The Episcopal brethren were careful to not refer to the place of meeting as a church. It was habitually spoken of and referred to as "convention hall." Of course such conduct as this helps on the cause of Christian union in which Episcopalians are especially interested!

"Forefathers day" was observed October 11, by the congregations of the Christian Church, by a mass meeting and union communion service in the Central Church. A large audience was present. Bayard Craig, pastor of the Central, occupied the chair. An address was delivered on "The Disciples of Christ: their origin, purpose, program and attainments."

Western Pennsylvania.

The annual convention of the Western Pennsylvania Christian Missionary Society met in First Church, Pittsburg, Hazelwood Ave., September 29, 30, and October 1, E. W. Thornton, pastor. Every one was delighted with the reception and entertainment by the church. The reports for the year were all encouraging, and show a deepening interest by the churches in all lines of co-operative work.

Wallace Tharp, A. P. Cobb, and W. J. Russell each gave an evening message to the convention—sermons that were profitable and helpful to all.

G. W. Muckley was present and represented Church Extension in a stirring address.

Laura V. Thompson of Illinois, made a strong appeal for the saving of the women of Pennsylvania and touched with many helpful suggestions, the general work of C. W. B. M.

The following officers were elected for the year. President, R. S. Latimer, Pittsburg; Vice-Presidents, O. H. Philips Braddock, T. W. Philips, New Castle; Earle Willy, New Castle; Wallace Tharp, Allegheny; W. R. Warren and W. J. Russell, Pittsburg; Corresponding and Financial Secretaries, J. A. Joyce, McKeesport; Treasurer, W. R. Errett, Carnegie; Recording Secretary, F. M. Gordon, Pittsburg; Trustees, Wm. H. Graham, Dr. C. Evans, W. R. Errett, M. M. Cochran, H. A. Spangler; Superintendent Bible Schools, E. A. Cole, Washington; Superintendent Christian Endeavor, R. J. Bamber, Turtle Creek.

Next convention will meet in New Castle in May, 1904.

Fred A. Bright, state evangelist, has just closed a fine meeting at McKees Rocks, with 38 added, and is now in a short meeting at Rowan Avenue, Pittsburg.

The convention voted to make the first Lord's day in November Western Pennsylvania Day.

The writer closed a three weeks' meeting at Wildwood, a mission point, Oct. 11, with 5 confessions and baptisms.

The outlook for enlargement was never better in this district. Nearly every pulpit is supplied, and the new ministers are getting a good start in their new fields.

Maryland, Delaware and D. C.

We closed our annual convention on Oct. 9. It was our 25th anniversary. It was in many ways a very satisfactory convention.

The attendance was good. Delegates were given lodging and breakfast in the homes. Tickets were sold them at 20 cents for lunch and 30 cents for dinner at a restaurant near the church. The plan worked very well.

The preachers' day program was good. At the evening session, F. D. Power gave an interesting historical address, giving a sketch of our 25 years' work and some of the history preceding the beginning of our missionary society, which told of other co-operative work. R. P. Sheppard followed with a bright talk on church extension.

The woman's session on Thursday gave much information in regard to their missions and other work. A special feature was an inspiring address by Miss Lura Thompson, the national organizer. At night there were three pointed, strong addresses by W. J. Wright for the A. C. M. S., Geo. L. Snively for the National Benevolent Association, W. P. Bently for the F. C. M. S. Each spoke about twenty minutes, and all were pleased with the addresses. The arrangement seemed good. The choir of Vermont Ave., 9th St. and Whitney Ave. furnished special music at night sessions.

Our Sunday-school sessions are always interesting. The one on Friday morning was no exception. Washington primary teachers have a Friday afternoon meeting. One of the teachers is Miss Lena Summy, primary teacher in H Street Christian Sunday-school. She delighted the audience with an illustration of their methods, using the blackboard. Chas. D. Wagaman, superintendent of Hagerstown Sunday-school, gave a fine address on Sunday-school work. He favors the McNeil contest for increasing the school. Ninth St., Washington, had the banner Sunday-school.

The business sessions were full of business.

The report of the board showed three new points opened for mission work. The treasurer reported all debts paid and $101 in the treasury. Last year we had a debt. Hard work and the help of the A. C. M. S. brought us out. We now feel enthused to do a greater work this year. Last year the churches raised over $1,200 for state work. The convention asks for $1,600 this year. It appropriated for missions in Baltimore: Fulton Ave., $100; 25th St., $150; Riverside Park, $370; to H St. Washington, $2.50; the E. Shore of Maryland, $1.50; Cumberland Valley, $2.50. Last year the A. C. M. S. helped us in all nearly $1,000. This is mission territory. We need $10,000. Our evangelists reported 242 additions.

The closing session of the Christian Endeavor on Friday night was the climax. Peter Ainslie made the address. W. L. Harris conducted the open parliament on "When I Go Home." Harry Welsh closed with the Quiet Hour. Joining hands, we sang "God be with You till We Meet Again." We ask the prayers of all who read this for our work this year.

DAVID AND ABSALOM.—2 Sam. 15:1-12.

Memory Verses: 4-6.

GOLDEN TEXT:—Honor thy father and thy mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee.—Ex. 20:12.

A Family Feud.

The greatest source of trouble to David was his children—and this was partly his own fault. He had many wives and many children. It was inevitable that jealousies should arise. The question of the succession to the throne was sure to be a most troublesome one. Amnon was the oldest son and the natural heir. In cases where there was any rivalry for the succession, it was not uncommon for the successful candidate to make his position secure by putting to death all who had been his rivals, as Solomon did to Adonijah immediately after his accession. Here was one reason why a spirited and ambitious prince like Absalom might be tempted to seize the throne himself, even while his father was yet alive, rather than wait for the accession of a rival who might put him to death. Moreover Absalom had a special hatred for his half brother Amnon, and for very good reason (see chapter 13). The whole situation was ripe for trouble, and Absalom, a man of brilliant abilities and fiery spirit, was the one to precipitate it.

Absalom's Vengeance and Flight.

For two years Absalom nursed his wrath against Amnon and devised a method by which he could be revenged. It was a very simple method after all—nothing less than murder. The occasion which he chose gives some indication of the pastoral character of the civilization of that time. The king's son is to have a sheep-shearing, and he invites the king and the whole royal family to come out and join him in the frolic. David did not go, but his sons went, and while the merriment was at its height, Absalom sent his servants to kill Amnon. The report which reached David, exaggerated as bad news is apt to be, was that all of his sons were killed. As soon as the crime was done, Absalom fled from the country. David, knowing, perhaps, the circumstances which rendered Absalom's crime less heinous than it seemed, was more concerned about his flight than about Amnon's death. Justice required that he should not condone the crime, and yet "the soul of king David longed to go forth unto Absalom." So Absalom remained in exile until Joab, by a clever trick, showed David that the people wanted Absalom back and that it was time to recall him.

Absalom's Popularity.

Absalom appears in history as the personification of filial ingratitude, yet he must have been a man with many admirable traits. Above all he had the charm of personality which drew men to him. After his return to Jerusalem, Absalom set to work deliberately to win the hearts of the people. Very likely there were some real defects in the administration which gave opportunity for him to profess sympathy with the people who had grievances and could not get justice. It would scarcely have been possible for him to gain popularity by wishing himself a judge and reminding persons who had suits that "there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee," if the judicial system had really been in satisfactory working order. Most insurrections, even when raised against the best of rulers, find their excuse in some real grievance or actual defect in the government. So Absalom now "stole the hearts of the men of Israel" by professing sympathy with their causes and by playing upon their dissatisfaction with existing conditions.

The Conspiracy.

When Absalom had thus ingratiated himself in the favor of the people, the time was ripe for the beginning of his rebellion. His wires had been carefully laid, his men were stationed all over the country ready at the signal to proclaim that Absalom is king. Under pretext of paying a vow to Jehovah, he went out to Hebron, and there, where David himself had first reigned over Judah, he established the capital of his conspiracy. It was a formidable rebellion. The historian says that "the conspiracy was strong; for the people increased continually with Absalom." Apparently there was no violence and no need of any.

David's Flight.

The attitude of David, when it became clear that Absalom had played him false, was that of a grief-stricken parent rather than a strong and capable ruler. There was no thought of resistance to the rebellion or of capturing and punishing the rebel, but only of escape from the difficulty and allowing his people to live in peace under the new rule. Gathering his household together, David left his capital and fled eastward toward the wilderness. And Absalom and his brother entered triumphantly into the capital and took possession of the palace. To all appearances the rebellion had been completely successful. But there were in it the seeds of failure. It was conceived in selfishness, realized through base ingratitude and disregard of a father's love, and, if Absalom's plan had succeeded, would have been consummated in the assassination of the king. But it was not for Absalom, who had disregarded that fifth commandment, to enjoy the blessing which was conditioned upon obedience to it. His days were not to be long in the land. Such base ingratitude as his prepares the way for its own punishment. If Joab had not slain Absalom, his own children, learning the lesson of ingratitude from him, would doubtless have risen up against him in time.

What needy creatures we are! We need the kindly ministry of all the elements. Cold or heat beyond a given temperature distresses us and endangers our lives. Let the earth's harvests fail for but one season, and the world would be famine-smitten. Wrathful winds may devastate our fields and homes; floods may submerge them; fires burn them. Without a beneficent nature, as some men call it, we were undone. But the Master teaches us that God is above all these elements and forces, and that God is our Father.

First he bids us to ask, to seek, to knock. And we do, whether we will or no. It is not from curiosity, but from the impulse of need. The hungry child asks for food, to satisfy its craving. And the hungry heart asks for that which alone can satisfy its craving. We go up and down seeking—many times the very things least likely to benefit. But the Savior says, "Seek on!" And there is scarcely a wall erected, but men grope blindly along, feeling for a door, and there they knock, importunately.

Jesus looked into men's hearts, and saw all this restlessness. He heard their cries; he listened to their clamorous appeal for light, for knowledge, for help, for bread. And in the midst of the tumult, he spoke encouragingly. Continue to ask, to seek, to knock; for you shall receive; you shall find; it shall be opened unto you. Everyone that asketh, receiveth. That is not the common experience, you say. Yes, it is. Continuous asking will secure an answer.

This is exceedingly comforting. If Jesus spoke thus encouragingly, then welcome, tumultuous desire! Welcome, yearnings for a higher life; welcome, thrice welcome, the eagerness that asks, the importunity that knocks, the patience that seeks. But what is his warrant for all this? Are the skies so kind, that we may hopefully beseech them? He knows: there is a God above the skies, and that God is—our Father! For immediately he turns to the commonest of all life's experiences, that of paternal love and care. You give your child food; when he asks bread, you would not give him a stone; you would not mock your child. Nor if he asks for a fish would you give him a serpent. You are not in any degree malevolent. You listen to the little innocent when he asks, and you know what is good for him, and answer accordingly. See in this, a mirror of the divine.

And yet, it is only a broken image. For you are evil; your discernment is shallow; your judgment is blind. Yet in your hearts, love conquers, and teaches you how to give good gifts unto your children. "How much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him." What a warrant is this for prayer! And what comfort here for all that go with tear-blinded eyes into shadowed valleys. When we see human fatherhood at its purest and best, when it glows large and noble in our vision, then it is but a poor image, a faint similitude of the Fatherhood of God. The life of Christ is our great gospel. He spared not His only begotten Son; how much more shall He with him freely give us all things!

As the father studies and plans and toils, so we may think of God studying and planning and constructing for his children. He is weaving the web of life and of history for us.

PRAYER.

Our Father in heaven, we hallow thy name. Thou hast given us life, thine own image, and a hunger for that heaven which is also our home, whither some of thy dear children have already gone. May we find sweet rest in the consciousness of thy love and care, and fear only to disobey thee, till at last we shall see thee, face to face. Amen

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE, IV. DAVID.—1 Sam. 16:11-13; Ps. 19; John 7:42.

There are few Bible characters whom we know more intimately than David. He is introduced to us as a boy, the herder of sheep. We see him passing through the stages of growth, a musician to King Saul, charming away the evil spirit with his music and soothing the troubled soul of the king by the peace of his presence; as a young ruler fighting the battles of his country and becoming the hero of the common people; a courtier and a general leading Saul's troops and going in and out before the people; son-in-law of the king and bosom friend of Prince Jonathan; an exile unjustly suspected and persistently pursued; king over Judah; king over all Israel.

But in addition to these external events, we know even more the heart of David as revealed to us in his psalms. We know him as penitent for his sins, as rejoicing in forgiveness, seeing the hand of God in all the beauties and blessings of the world, bowing submissively to misfortune, praising and worshiping Jehovah through all the changes of his long life.

The first lesson that we learn from David is from David, the boy. He was a tender of sheep and the Lord chose him to be the shepherd of a nation. Doubtless he kept his sheep faithfully and well. Probably there was not a better shepherd on all the hills of Judah than young David of Bethlehem. It is from the ranks of those who do well the thing that is given them to do, that God and men choose the ones whom they will honor with promotion.

When David returned from killing the Philistine giant, he was in greater danger than when he stood before that boastful champion. His danger now was that his head would be turned by the universal chorus of praise. Many a brave and strong man meets defeat at this point. David apparently kept humble even when the women sang

"Saul hath slain his thousands,

But David hath slain his tens of thousands."

Noticing that fact, one would have been quite safe in predicting that David would yet do much greater things than merely killing a giant.

We all have our troubles, and there are few who find success without treading the long, hard road of difficulty. David had more than most people, and the patience and fortitude with which he met them and the forbearance which he exhibited toward his enemies, form an example which will never cease to be worth imitating.

Reverence for law and respect for government are sentiments which need to be inculcated, especially in this country. Perhaps it is because we make our own laws here, and because every American has the right to call himself a sovereign, that there is a tendency on the part of a large percentage of our people to under-value the sanctity and authority of law. David's reverence for "the Lord's anointed" is an example here worth noting. We have made wonderful political advancement since that day and the monarchy of David's time would seem a harsh and tyrannical government to-day; but with our growing freedom we have grown away from a certain respect and restraint which marked the course of David when he withheld his hand from Saul, and which we must go back to before our civilization will be mature.

But all of David's moral and political virtues are of slight account compared with the faith in God, which was the ruling principle of his life. He was at times a sinful man, but his faith triumphed over his sin. He was beset by the temptations of adversity and again by the temptations of prosperity. From both alike his faith delivered him. In the chaos of conflicting interests, in all the difficulties which beset the establishment and enlargement of a kingdom, faith ruled his course. His faith was akin to sight, so vividly did it

NATURE'S GREATEST AID.

Dover, N. J., Nov. 12th, 1902.

I had both kidney and liver trouble for over three years. I tried the best physicians in Washington, D. C., Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago, and regret to say that I received very little benefit until I commenced taking the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. After taking the first bottle I noticed quite a change, which satisfied me that at last I had found the right medicine. I continued on until I had taken four bottles; by this time I noticed such a marked improvement in my health, in every way, that I felt satisfied I was cured. But, to be positive beyond a question or doubt, I was in Chicago during July, 1902, and went to the Columbus Medical Laboratory, No. 103 State St., and had them make a thorough and complete microscopical examination which showed my kidneys and liver to be perfectly well and healthy. I have their written report in my possession, signed by the doctors of the above Medical Laboratory, which is recognized as one of the best in the country.

Very truly yours,

Ex-Mayor of Dover, N. J.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

present to his mind the consciousness of God's presence and power. He not only believed in God, but he saw him in the beauties and wonders of the fruitful earth, the teeming waters and the starry sky. He knew him as the daily companion of his soul. Such faith, reflected in many of the psalms that are unquestionably Davidic, is essential to true religion and to all high and holy endeavor.

—Bro. W. A. Colver, of Melbourne, Mo., desires us to say in explanation of his inactivity in church work, that he has been an invalid for nearly fourteen years, and is at present unable to take an active part in the affairs of the church. Brethren who know Brother Colver will understand and sympathize with him.

—A formal opening of the Bradley Geological Field Station is announced to take place at Graydon Springs, Monday, Oct. 19, under the auspices of the Drury College Scientific Association. —W. W. Dowling, his daughter, Miss Metta Dowling and his son, Harold, have been on a visit of several days to their old home in Kendallville, Ind. The occasion was the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of that congregation. Brother Dowling was a former pastor of the church, as was his father before him. We hope to furnish some account from his pen of his visit.

—An admirable and interesting contribution to the literature of western history is Rev. Meade C. Williams' little volume on Early Mackinac, which is now in its fourth edition. Dr. Williams, who has spent his summers at Mackinac for many years, approaches his theme with both knowledge and enthusiasm. (Presbyterian Book Store, St. Louis; 85 cents.)

—T. N. Kincaid, of Hot Springs, Ark., writes us from Cincinnati that the American Christian Missionary Society will pay $800 a year for the support of the church in that great health resort, if the brethren there will pay that amount for the payment of their new lot which they have secured. This amount, with about $400 a year additional from the brethren for three years, will pay for the lot and put the cause there on a permanent basis. Brother Kincaid thinks he can secure this amount, and he ought. He is overjoyed at the prospect of realizing the desire of his heart touching that work. There are few places where a strong church would exert a wider influence. We rejoice with the brethren there at their brightening outlook.

—Bro. Fred H. Hawley, of West Rupert, Vt., requests us to make the following announcement: "Owing to the serious illness of his wife, D. C. Tremaine has been obliged to resign his work at West Rupert, Vt. The church there would like to secure the services of a good pastor: married man preferred. Salary about $600 and good parsonage. Address Fred H. Hawley."

—The Benevolent Association has received during the past week two gifts on the annuity plan. One is from Mrs. Martha J. Little, a long-time friend of the benevolent work, for $200, and the other is from Miss S. Elizabeth Caton for $2,000. Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, will send inquirers about the Association and the Annuity Plan of helping it, an answer by return mail. Write him.

—Charles Richard Vawter and wife, of Elizabethtown, Ky., will hold a meeting at Pattonsburg, Mo., beginning Wednesday night, October 28. The meeting will continue two weeks and at its conclusion Brother Vawter and his wife may be had for one more meeting, Mrs. Vawter to assist in the music. Any church desiring their services may address them there. Brother Vawter will probably locate in Missouri after January 1.

Churches that have not yet sent in their offerings should be sure to do so during October. Remit to G. W. Muckley, corresponding secretary, 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—The First Christian Church in this city had a delightful occasion one evening recently, the occasion being the completion of some recent improvements in their building by which their auditorium has been greatly enlarged. The church can now accommodate about 1,200 people. They had a "re-dedication" service on the Lord's day previous, raising about a thousand dollars toward expenses of improvement. On Friday evening following they invited the old members in other churches to come home, together with the ministers of the city. A great audience gathered. The editor of this paper presided, and brief addresses were made by Brothers Tyrrell, Pittman and the pastor, J. L. Brandt, and W. H. McClain read letters from former pastors. An offering was made to help the church in its great work. Refreshments were served afterwards in the parlors of the church.

—On Lord's day, Oct. 18, the Kensington Christian Church, Philadelphia, Pa., observed the ninth anniversary of its beginning as a mission with Caspar C. Garrigues as pastor. Mr. Garrigues served five years in this capacity, and was followed by Calvin Ogborne, during whose short ministry the mission was constituted as a church. R. A. Smith, of Vincennes, Ind., was called to serve the new church and served over three years, during which time the commodious church now occupied was secured. Mr. Garrigues was called back to this work upon the resignation of Mr. Smith and began his second term July 5, 1903. The forces of this young church are gradually increasing and strengthening. The outlook is one that challenges all to make their best efforts.

—Our readers will be glad to have a word of greeting from our beloved Bro. J. Z. Tyler, whose long and serious affliction has prevented him from enjoying the pleasure of meeting his brethren in convention as he so much delighted to do. Under date of Oct. 10, he writes, through the hand of another, from his home at 798 Republic St., Cleveland, O., as follows: "I had hoped to attend the Detroit convention, but find I cannot. I am sure it will be a great convention, great in numbers, great in enthusiasm, great in its far-reaching and abiding effects. Please remember me to the brethren as you have opportunity. While I am unable to work, my interest in the work increases. My physical condition remains about the same as when you last saw me. I am unable to write or even to dress or undress myself, but my mind keeps clear and active, and my heart keeps warm and grateful. Give my sincerest love to all the brethren." We are glad to convey this greeting of Brother Tyler to his brethren, many of whom will read it in our national convention. We are sure they will remember him most lovingly and sympathetically, and pray God to grant him and his the choicest of His blessings.

—"The steamship 'China,' with her precious burden of human souls, is now well out upon the bosom of the great deep. Never before, I suppose, were so many Disciples assembled on the wharf at one time. Never before have the hearts of our people been so warmed, tendered and touched as within the past few days. The reception last evening was a great success. A blessing has come to our churches, the influence of which will never be lost. Dr. Shelton, at his own request, was ordained to the Christian ministry by Bro. E. W. Darst, J. Durham and myself. Dr. R. L. Rigdon, deacon of the West Side Church, took Drs. Rijnhart and Shelton to a supply house yesterday and bade them help themselves, irrespective of cost, to anything they felt the need of. The missionary enthusiasm in our people is something wonderful. Yet I know that that which we are experiencing is but the general experiences of our churches wherever these Christlike spirits have gone. We are all happy, hopeful, praising God. The missionaries, Dr. Rijnhart, Dr. and Mrs. A. L. Shelton, M. B. Madden and family, were all well when we bade them good-bye, and the happiest little band of people I ever beheld. —W. M. WHITE, San Francisco, Cal."

Resignation of J. W. Larimore.

On Sunday, Oct. 4, much to the surprise of the church, our most worthy pastor, Bro. J. W. Larimore, tendered his resignation, to become effective in the near future. It is with regret that the church and people of the community give up this noble Christian and citizen, for his life with us has ever been an example of Christian citizenship.

At the home of Sister Gatchell's, Friday evening, the 9th, a farewell reception was given in honor of this brother and his estimable wife, with an overcrowded house to greet them; a good time for all present. At a late hour all departed, expressing their regrets at having to lose these worthy people, and wished them God-speed in their future work.

The Kendallville, Ind., Church.

The following brief sketch of the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of the organized efforts of the Disciples at Kendallville, Ind., is copied from the Daily Sun of that city:

"The fiftieth anniversary of the Church of Christ of Kendallville was celebrated Sunday with beautiful and appropriate services. Large audiences were present morning and afternoon, and in the evening the church was filled to its utmost capacity and many were turned away for lack of room. At the morning service Rev. W. W. Dowling, of St. Louis, gave the address, the theme being 'The Family of God,' and was most fitting to the glad occasion.

"In the afternoon came the Jubilee services, with reminiscences by former pastors, and messages and greeting from absent pastors and members. Rev. Dowling spoke of the beginning years' history of the church, having been intimately associated with its organization in pioneer days. Rev. O. Q. Oviatt gave a brief resume of several years following. Rev. J. A. Roberts spoke of the building of the present house of worship and dedication. Rev. J. O. Rose followed, with the five years' period of his loyal service. Rev. C. H. Bass concluded the series with a brief message and the happy announcement of the lifting of the debt. The congregation joined in singing 'Praise God from whom all blessings flow,' and with prayer by Rev. Roberts the church was re-dedicated, free from incumbrance, to the service of God. A short address was also given by Rev. Noah Walker, of Fort Wayne, who was identified with the church's early years as an evangelist. Among those absent from whom messages were received were Rev. E. S. Conner and wife, Mrs. D. H. Geedy, Marshall Poppy, Pomona, Cal., Mr. and Mrs. A. T. Ross and son Emory, Eureka, Ill.; Miss Blanche Blackman, New York city; Miss Dorothy Poppy, Grafton, N. D.; Mrs. Pattee, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Mrs. Sadie Sniff Richards, Merrill, Iowa; Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Smith, Kansas City; Mrs. Cartwright and H. E. Cartwright, Elkhart.

"The evening service was occupied with an oratorio-cantata, 'King of Israel,' finely rendered by a large chorus, with Mrs. Zern, pianist, and Mrs. John Baughman, organist. It was a fitting climax to the day's joyous services. Prof. B. F. Peters was present and rendered the solo, 'Forever with the Lord,' at the afternoon service and 'The Lord is My Light,' in the evening in a superb manner.

"The day was a memorable one and marks an epoch in the church's history. The thanks of the membership are due all who helped in any way to make the anniversary so successful and enjoyable."

Missouri Bible-School Notes.

The Year Book is now in your hands and the county superintendents will note how we are depending upon them, and our friends will help us much in the future by referring to the Year Book when ordering or inquiring of any kind enough to advertise with us this year. We have sought to have only reliable parties use the space, and feel secure in those doing so. Try them.

The rally at West Line was great, for the interest was good, the attendance all day was fine and the work appreciated. Cleveland school, under G. D. Edwards, came down in a body and helped us much every way, but in the training work it is marvelous to me what good work these two schools do—both country schools, with all the disadvantages, yet the good work is clearly manifest in the result. Henry Vanmeter superintends at West Line, putting that devotion into his work, coming the distance he does, making the preparation he does that tells, while G. D. Edwards does likewise at Cleveland. These are patterns that others would do well to imitate, while the giving of both schools is very helpful to our work.

W. A. Moore closing at South Joplin with 117 additions, all departments in fine shape; J. W. Baker, the business man, called for all time, the community thoroughly canvassed for new pupils, show what can be done by the evangelist who goes into his work to help all departments of the church, furthering the kingdom of God.

The Bates county meeting under E. H. Williamson was a great success, and the churches from all over the county were well represented. The Endeavor, Bible-school, C. W. B. M. and benevolence were not overlooked. Each had its part and representative on the program, while the attendance and attention were fine. This is what tells in influence in the corners where the brethren are disheartened and discouraged so many times, and one present at all sessions testifies to the heart-quickenings that came to so many, and of which they were so free to speak.

C. C. Hill would not long abide satisfied without helping his brethren; and seeing the great need of a common bond of sympathy and fellowship in Ray, he did his best for a county meeting though the only other effort had failed before he came. But the one at Orrick was no failure in any sense. Ministers present: J. W. Monser, C. C. Taylor, W. H. Embry, Jesse Gresham, C. C. Hill, W. Roscoe Taylor and writer. Nearly every church in the county represented and all those present favoring a county co-operation. W. H. Embry and Orrick entertained so hospitably that some suggested staying with them, while the addresses were such as quickened all the workers in all their work, and the meeting gave me a fine offering to our work. The C. W. B. M. session, under Mrs. J. E. Dunn, was pronounced one of the very best, and you will hear from the Ray County Co-operation again and for great good.

Hamilton Avenue, St. Louis, is one of the growing schools and congregations, and only for its indebtedness would step out into a great work. John A. Gardiner is putting his heart into the school work, being so helpfully assisted by F. J. Nichols and the corps of teachers, while J. F. Merryman is helping greatly with a Friday night study of the lesson. No more cordial reception is given your secretary anywhere than at Hamilton, and no heartier co-operation is accorded him.

The New England Convention.

One hundred delegates from sixteen different Churches of Christ in New England assembled in Springfield, Mass., from Oct. 1-4, to hold what, by common consent, was pronounced the best convention in the history of our work in New England.

The sessions of the convention began Thursday evening at 7:30 in the auditorium of the Springfield Church of Christ, located on South Main Street. Bro. Chas. Forster, of West Pawlet, Vt., preached the opening sermon on "Positivism, the Need of Modern Christianity." This was followed by short addresses by representatives of almost all the Churches of Christ in New England.

On Friday the sessions were transferred to the Carew Street Baptist Church. Our surroundings here were spacious and convenient. The address of President Jas. H. Mohorter, of the St. James Street Church, Boston, on "Some Hindrances of our Work in New England," was excellent, and raised the enthusiasm of the delegates to a high point. This was followed by a most excellent address by Roland A. Nichols, of the Highland Street Church, Worcester, Mass., on "How to do the Work of the Church."

Friday afternoon was devoted to the C. W. B. M. work. To say that our sisters maintained the highly edifying character of the convention is stating it very mildly. Especially enjoyable were addresses by Mrs. E. F. Willis and Mrs. R. A. Nichols of the Highland Street Church, Worcester, and Mrs. Robinson, of the Main Street Church, Worcester. Bro. J. H. Hardin, our New England evangelist, filled the place of G. W. Snively, of St. Louis, delivering a strong address on "Christian Benevolence." The night session was especially enjoyable. R. F. Whiston, minister of the Everett Church, on "New England for Christ," and M. E. Harlan, of Brooklyn, New York, on "Church Extension," were listened to with much pleasure.

Saturday morning was devoted to Sunday-school work, led by F. H. Bailey, of Danbury, Conn., and following this came two of the convention's best papers, the first by E. F. Randall, minister of the Swampscott Church, on "The Place of the Holy Spirit in Christian Unity;" the second by R. H. Bolton, of the St. James Street Church of Christ, Boston, on "Christian Union, the Problem as it Confronts the Disciples To-day."

Saturday afternoon was devoted to routine business and to what many considered the best thing during the entire convention—Bro. F. M. Rain's great speech on "Foreign Missions." Saturday evening D. C. Tremaine, of West Rupert, Vt., spoke on "Truth—Doctrinal or Practical," and H. L. Calhoun on "Constructive Christianity."

The sunrise prayermeeting, conducted by Brother Remington, of Manton, R. I., was attended by a large number Sunday morning. At 10:30 A. M. all our visiting preachers who would do so, occupied the different pulpits of the city, thus offering our brethren an opportunity to become better known in Springfield. The sermon Sunday afternoon on the "Lord's Supper," by Brother Randall, of Swampscott, followed by the communion service, made one of the most enjoyable sessions of the entire convention. The Christian Endeavor and the general rally following, in which almost all the delegates took part, closing by joining hands and singing "Blest be the Tie that Binds," brought to an end this most excellent gathering.

Too much cannot be said in praise of the royal hospitality offered to all the visitors by the Church of Christ in Springfield, and by Brother Reinl, the efficient minister of the Springfield Church, and Bro. S. M. Hunt, the former New England secretary, whose home is in Springfield.

The convention was saddened by the announcement on Saturday afternoon that Brother Mohorter had to resign his work in

New England and go to Pueblo, Colo., on account of the ill health of his most excellent wife. All who know of Brother Mohorter's most efficient work in New England regret this step on his part, but no one could think that he is doing anything else than his duty by going. The convention presented to Brother Mohorter a beautiful bouquet of flowers as a testimonial of their appreciation of him and his work. MRS. H. L. CALHOUN, Cambridge.

A Visit to Southern California.

For a number of years it has been the earnest desire of the writer and his better-half to visit the Golden State. By the generosity of the Phoenix Church it was made possible for us to gratify this desire and we spent the month of August in this land of flowers and fruits and—fleas.

He who would go to California from the east or the south, must cross the desert. And this is anything but a pleasant thing to do, particularly in midsummer, when heat and dust conspire to make very existence almost intolerable. But even a journey across the desert is not without its compensations. For miles and miles in the early morning hours, we skirted the shores of a beautiful lake whose cool, sparkling waters laved the feet of the barren hills of burning sand—a lake to all seeming as real as its sandy shores, but having no more existence in fact than the baseless fabric of a dream of the night, for it was that phantom of the plains, the mysterious mirage.

The first ten days of our stay in California were spent in attendance upon the sessions of the Southern California Convention, which, this year, as usual, was held at Long Beach. It was a good convention. How could it have been otherwise with the presence and participation of such men as McLean, Van Kirk, McAnney, Utter, Dowling, Calvin, Lewis and others too numerous to mention, to say nothing about "those women" who were not one whit behind their brothers in zeal and ability. McLean led us up to the top of "an exceeding high mountain" and showed us "all the kingdoms of the earth" and caused us to see that "the field is the world." It was a thrilling vision. The genial, cultured, progressive, and, to my thinking, thoroughly sound and loyal Van Kirk, in his most lucid and pleasing way, pointed out the tributary streams that united to form the majestic river of the Current Restoration. One vital truth we learned, and that was that our movement was born of an effort of the human intellect to free itself from the shackles that a narrow, bigoted, dogmatic, literalistic, pharisaical spirit would bind upon it in the name of Him who came to earth to set men free. The cry of "Unsound" is at home only in the mouth of the Pharisee. It has a strange sound in the mouth of the "Current Reformation." It has not now, and never can have, a rightful place in our vocabulary when it is in conflict with the liberty for which our fathers struggled so long and so heroically and against such fearful odds.

Among the chief pleasures of our visit to California were the meeting of old friends and the forming of new friendships. From Missouri, Texas, Colorado and Utah we met many whom we had known and loved in years gone by. It was a joy to meet and greet them again after years of separation. Meeting so many old friends, and from such remote parts, suggested the thought that God, after trying in vain for nearly two thousand years to enlarge our hearts sufficiently to take in the whole world, is trying the other method of contracting the earth. By the aid of steam and electricity he is forcing men to exclaim, "Well, the world is but a small place after all!" After awhile we shall be able to realize that it is not too large to be won for Christ. More and more we shall come to realize that it is not too great a task to "go into all the world and preach the gospel to the whole creation." As by modern means of transportation and communication the nations are brought closer and closer together, we shall realize more and more the possibility and the duty of making Disciples of them all. With the most pleasant memories of our trip, two names will ever remain associated—the names of two new-made friends, Mr. and Mrs. Jabez Hall. Thrown together by some fortuitous circumstance and held together by the invisible but strong tie of affinity, nearly all of our waking hours were spent together from the close of the convention till we parted in Los Angeles. Brother Hall proved to be a mine of information on the subject of sea-shells and all forms of marine life. Accordingly we worked him, with the result that

We feel that our good brother from our capital city, George Darsie, has not exactly "toted fair" with us. In his splendid account of our state convention he not only told the "tales" of the convention, but also the "de-tales" as well, leaving very little for your correspondent to say that has not already been said by him.

Firstly (a la Darsie). The convention was a great success in every way. The attendance was very large, the annual reports were all encouraging and gratifying, and the enthusiasm of those present was at "high tide." Nearly every section of the state was represented, and also visitors were in attendance from ten other states.

A grand total of $71,376.10 was reported as raised during the past year for organized missionary work. This means that our Kentucky churches are giving heed to the last command of our blessed Lord.

Over 2,000 additions were reported during the year from the labors of the evangelists sustained by our state board. Special attention was called in the report to the splendid work done during the summer months in our mountain districts by our "Bible College boys."

A larger number of preachers were present perhaps than at any previous convention. Many new faces were seen among them.

Twenty-two new C. W. B. M. auxiliaries were organized during the past year and nearly $14,000 raised for missionary purposes. The growing interest in this important work is indeed gratifying. All the state officers were re-elected.

General regret was expressed on all sides at the absence of the beloved pastor of the Paris church, Carey E. Morgan, who was kept from the convention because of sickness. At last reports he was much better.

The convention will meet next year, Sept. 19-22, at Winchester.

A special appeal was made on Wednesday night by Jno. T. Brown for our Orphans' Home, Louisville, after which an offering of over $100 was made to the Home. We would suggest to our Kentucky churches that monthly offerings be made to this worthy and needy institution during the ensuing year. Even a little from each congregation each month would mean much in the course of the year.

One delegate from Boone county was like the fellow who said he was going to "Pike's Peak or bust." He left home on his bicycle, but upon reaching Falmouth, his wheel "busted." Although 40 miles from Paris, he footed the entire distance in order to be present at the convention.

Paris is certainly an ideal place in which to hold a convention. Hospitality there reigns supreme.

One of the busiest men at the convention was Bro. W. O. Hinton, a valued officer in the Paris Church, who was "here, there and everywhere," seeing to the comfort of delegates and visitors.

The irresistible R. B. Neal was on hand with a fresh supply of mountain jokes and experiences, and, as usual, was the happiest man on the ground. He had just come out of a successful temperance fight in Eastern Kentucky.

It was a great treat to listen to such men as J. W. McGarvey, who gave very helpful half-hour talks every morning on Job; J. B. Briney, who delivered a masterly address at Cane Ridge on Friday; and J. J. Haley, who gave a scholarly address on Wednesday.

H. W. Elliott was re-elected general evangelist for the ensuing year, and Robt. M. Hopkins state Sunday-school evangelist.

Milo Atkinson, of Petersburg, and Jno. M. Alexander, of Croppers, were the "tall men" of the convention. All the delegates looked up to them.

It was estimated that there were between 3,000 and 5,000 present at the Cane Ridge Centennial. One good sister sent a spring wagon load of dinner for that day, one item being 27 fried chicken!

In 1841, sixty-two years ago, Bro. Robt. Tarr rode on horseback to Cane Ridge to hear Alexander Campbell, and on Friday he rode over the same road to attend the centennial meeting.

It was conceded on all sides that the new church building at Paris is the handsomest and most complete in its arrangement of any in the south. The Paris people have a right to be proud of it.

Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville, represented the South Kentucky brethren at the convention, making a splendid address on Wednesday afternoon.

H. J. Derthick has been employed to raise funds for the erection of a girl's dormitory at Hazel Green Academy. The attendance at both Hazel Green and Morehead is very large this year.

All of our Kentucky schools and colleges were represented, and reported increased attendance this session. GEO. W. KEMPER.

Kentucky Notes.

I have no time for sermonizing now, or visiting the sick. Let me explain why, then I will make a request and give some news. A few days ago it became noised abroad that I had resigned here and would leave the state. Since this startling piece of news was told to the Disciples and the preachers, about fifty of the latter class have written me applications for the place, and would you believe it, out of this whole list of preachers asking a favor, but one has sent a stamp for reply. All will expect answers, though. So I have been busy buying stamps and answering these letters of inquiry. This church at Elizabethtown is not able to support them all, so I have tried to point these men to other fields. I have received, perhaps, a dozen letters from churches needing preachers. I will herewith give a list of some Kentucky churches which, I understand want preachers. Morehead, Ky., after Jan. 1, Clintonville, Grayson, Vanceburg, Middlesboro, Sulphur. I now make this request to preachers, when you write to me please send stamp.

The meeting at Hodgenville, conducted by J. E. Payne, assisted by J. M. Vawter goes on with fine interest.

The "Holiness Band" people are filling this country with their voices, if not with their doctrine. They say some pretty good things sometimes. Among other things they said here the other night, that for the sake of the dollars some churches would keep men on their rolls who were so mean the lodges wouldn't have them. Sad, but true.

May God bless the work of Rally Day. We'll work for it here and pray the good Lord to crown our efforts with success.

CHARLES RICHARD VAWTER.

California's Farewell to the Missionaries.

No more important event has ever occurred in the history of the churches of California, nor of the churches of America, than that which took place in the First Church in San Francisco on the evening of Sept. 28. The churches about the Bay were well represented and several from the more interior part of the state. The reception given by the city churches to our missionaries, Dr. Rijnhart, Dr. Shelton and wife who go to bear the gospel message to the brigands and marauders of the Thibet land. Brother Dr. Madden, wife and boys to bear it to wide-awake Japan, and our young Sister Alma Favor, who goes to the flowery kingdom to help the "heathen Chinese."

But the most important feature of the occasion was the ordination of Dr. Shelton to the work of missionary evangelist to that Thibet land. The early part of the evening was spent in acquaintance making and Christian greetings with the appearance of the missionaries on the platform and talks by them. The setting apart of Dr. Shelton was a most impressive and touching scene, the writer reading the Scriptures, Brother Darst giving the charge, and Brother White the prayer.

DEAFNESS CURED

By No Means Until "ACTINA" Was Discovered.

Ninety-five per cent of all cases of deafness brought to our attention is the result of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The inner ear cannot be reached by probing or spraying, hence the inability of aurists or physicians to cure. That there is a scientific cure for deafness and catarrh is demonstrated every day by the use of Actina. Actina also cures asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headache; all of which are directly or indirectly due to catarrh. Actina is sent on trial, postpaid. Call or write us about your case. We give advice free and positive proof of cures. A valuable book—Prof. Wilson's 100-page Dictionary of Disease, Free. Address New York & London Electric Association, Dept. 203, 929 Walnut Street, Kansas City, Mo.

Young Brother Ogawa, a Japanese member of the West Side Church, made an address in English, to our delight. Dr. Madden made a happy response in the Japanese language. It was very evident, by the sparkle of their black eyes, that they were delighted.

Dr. Rigdon, of the old time Sidney Rigdon stock, a fine physician and a member of the West Side Church, called Drs. Shelton and Rijnhart into a supply house and instructed them to lay in such a supply of instruments as they would need and he would see that they were paid for.

At the close of the reception, the sisters of the First Church called every one to partake of the fine lunch they had prepared.

Among the many representatives of the various churches were Brothers White, Vankirk, Darst, McAneny, Macfarlane, Tennyson, McReynolds, Filer, Evans, Nesbit, Greenwell, Durham and Allen Wilson, the evangelist. Brother Ford had not yet returned from the mountains.

The next day we went on board that great mistress of the sea, Steamer China, to look at the quarters of these dear ones. Then stepped aside to see her weigh anchor amid many sad good-byes and turn her head for the "Golden Gate" and the great Orient. J. DURHAM.

MISSISSIPPI VALLEY TRUST CO.

FOURTH & PINE STS. ST. LOUIS

Charleston, S. C.

The cause in this "City by the Sea" is, after years of uncertainty, taking on a degree of stability. Under the leadership of E. J. Fenstermacher, who came from Lexington, Mo., last November, the cause has been greatly strengthened. The members are now rallied, united, encouraged; have secured a desirably located lot and are erecting a church-house thereon. For six years the congregation worked against many difficulties with a membership now numbering seventy-five; forty-six are contributing ones, most of the others being too poor. These have worshiped in a rough-board, uncouth tabernacle, built for a six weeks' meeting only, hot in summer, cold and damp in winter, its sawdust floor wet from high tides and heavy rains, a continued menace to the health of all who gathered there. No hold could be gained through such conditions. For four out of the six years of the organization, we have supported a preacher without outside aid. Our condition has, at times, seemed almost hopeless. Yet we have struggled on and on, praying without ceasing until now we see a great day coming in which Disciple thought and principle shall have permanency and power. Until now, when but a little more means are necessary to insure this, we have held back from a public appeal. With the new conditions now before us, we believe the cause and its future justifies us in a first and last public appeal. We have available $1,600 of the $2,000 necessary to complete and furnish the modest church being built to seat, with lecture room, 400; we have given in this effort to maintain the honor of a great brotherhood, our very life's blood, as it were, to erect a house but little better than the mission chapels of others. All has been done that love, sacrifice and perseverance can do. We have no other congregation in this city of 60,000. Some assistance has been rendered through individual appeals, but now we appeal to the brotherhood of every section. Here is a city where a memorial building, such as the Centennial Committee recommended at the Omaha convention, would serve as a great text for the cause for which we plead. Five hundred dollars will make it possible. Is there not some one in the brotherhood that will erect here, by this gift, a speaking monument to some loved one rather than a cold, unexpressive marble shaft? The appeal is for such a small amount to make many hearts rejoice; and to found, beyond all power of storms to remove, primitive Christianity in this city, that we send this forth, in the faith of prayer, to the brotherhood. A little here and a little there, and Charleston, the pearl by the ocean's wave, will have a fitting memorial with which to celebrate the centennial of the greatest religious movement since the days of Luther.

Contributions can be made to the "Dime Savings Bank" account of the Christian Church; to E. J. Fenstermacher, pastor; or to E. T. Withington, Treasurer Building Fund, First Christian Church, No. 3 Bennett St., Charleston, S. C. E. T. WITHINGTON.

From the South.

Claude E. Hill is laying large plans in Mobile. By the aid of the home board, Mobile is enabled to have her first regular minister, and the church is as proud of the fact as a boy is with his first red-topped boots!

B. B. Sanders, the veteran soldier of Texas, is to hold a meeting at Jennings, La., next month. Several of us want to hear him while this close to us. He was once a resident of New Orleans, and we think he should visit us while near.

Dr. A. C. Henry, one of our strongest southern preachers, died at his home in Woodlawn, Ala., Sept. 24, with heart failure. He had been in feeble health all summer. Twenty years ago he baptized the writer. He was a man of power.

The new church in Birmingham is now nearly ready to roof, and it is a thing of beauty. It will not be a large church, but one of the completest and most beautiful in the country. A. R. Moore is leading the forces wisely.

What the south needs is a conservative, simple, aggressive, gospel preached in the spirit of Christ. The people here will hear. If the power is in the word or works through the word, we have fine opportunities here for doing a great work. Great throngs crowd round the right kind of a preacher, and request him to preach on his doctrine, which, if the doctrine of God's book, will usually be somewhat new to the masses. We need more men and money to support them. We are hoping some of our abler churches will look southward with their "living links."

S. P. Spiegel, State Evangelist of Alabama, singer, Mrs. O. P. Spiegel, organist, and the writer, held a meeting at Falkville, Ala., our old home, Sept. 13-25. We had immense audiences, 14 baptisms, 27 additions from the denominations and by letter and statement. Isolated Disciples, bought a beautiful central lot 235x250 feet, and raised about $400 toward the building of a new church. The lot was all donated but $100. W. J. King, the writer's uncle, donated the framing for the church. D. R. Piper, of Hartselle, was employed to preach monthly. The best people of the town, in fact all the people, think kindly of us and our doctrine. They are anxious to hear more of it, which they shall do from month to month, and when the house is finished we shall have a great meeting. This one was held in the large college chapel. A Bible-school of 57 scholars was organized. The outlook is hopeful.

I close these lines to start to the great Detroit convention. After that I shall return and take up, with renewed energy, the work in this great city. O. P. SPIEGEL.

Virginia Missions.

The Virginia Christian Missionary Society began its work in the year 1875. From that day unto the present time it has been having an annual convention, and doing more or less mission work in the state every year. From 1850 to 1875 there was held what was called a state meeting, and Bro. G. W. Abel was for about 25 years state evangelist. Hence Virginia has really been trying to do organized mission work 53 years.

The Virginia work has one feature which I do not believe any other state has. It is that a number of individuals pay the salary of the secretary, so that all the offerings that come from the churches are used in the real work of preaching the gospel. So far this plan has worked exceedingly well. Since this plan was inaugurated, our offerings have been much larger, and the amount of work done has been greatly increased.

We have also a trust fund. This fund now amounts to $7,000. The fund is being increased every year by ten per cent of the income from the churches for that year.

There are thirty counties in the state where we have no organization, and 25 towns of more than 1,000 people each where we are unknown. The largest places where we are unrepresented by organization, are Staunton and Winchester with between 6,000 and 8,000 people each, and Alexandria with 14,000 people. In all of these places and in every county we have scattered members.

There are 40,000 houses in Virginia without a Bible. In one section where we have planted a mission church this year were found, by actual count, 100 children in reach of the mission who had never been to Sunday-school.

The Virginia Christian Missionary Society has helped every city church in the state, except one. We have had this year eleven regular employees, and have organized five new churches, and helped a great number of others. Calls come pouring in on every side. The field in Virginia is ripe for our work. Our great need is competent laborers.

Our state board is composed entirely of business men. Virginia has thought that mission work was business and a business man can manage such better than a preacher; our record of eight churches last year with 1,200 accessions is abundant evidence as to the wisdom of the plan.

The outlook in Virginia was never brighter. One of our difficulties is to find preachers for the work already organized.

Several meetings are in progress, and everything points to a great ingathering this year.

Gallahorn and Carroll are now in a meeting at College City.

R. L. McHaiton is in a meeting at Santa Rosa, with 12 added the first ten days. Good crowds. From there he goes to Healdsburg.

Bro. A. C. McKeever, our state president, is in a meeting at Modesto. Pretty good when the pastor of a church of 600 members can find time to go to the relief of a neighbor pastor for a meeting.

F. Hey Lemon, the six years' pastor of Lake City, Iowa, is to begin a meeting to-morrow at Vacaville. Good. Wish some more eastern preachers of the wide-awake type would come and do likewise. Brother Lemon was in a school which the writer taught in Iowa 25 years ago.

Bro. J. A. Brown has the confidence and good will of the people at Wheatland. They respect him in and out of the church.

When our various pastors say that they will raise from two to five times as much this year for state work as last year, it means much.

We all rejoice that the General Home Board and the Foreign Board have each reached and passed their goals for the year.

The Richmond house of worship is rapidly nearing completion.

Some of our 26 empty pulpits are beginning to fill up.

Several men who are worth $800 to $1,000, and who would come here and take a weak church at $300 or $400 and do a good work in it, could find an $800 position within a year. It is the man on the ground who gets such places, though.

Tennessee Missions.

The fourteenth annual convention of the Disciples of Christ in Tennessee has just closed. It was the best. Constant progress has marked the history of this work. Our people have come to see that the future of the cause in Tennessee depends very largely upon the efficiency of state missions. In fourteen years there have been over one hundred churches established, more than ten thousand members added, three hundred thousand dollars secured for church work, all missionary offerings increased about two hundred per cent, a permanent fund of nearly twelve thousand dollars secured and now interest bearing, for state missions. These are some of the results of this work. The quickening spiritual life and growing liberality of the older churches are results which cannot be measured. Nor can the educational value, especially to the young people, be written. The last has been a prosperous year. More than fifty protracted meetings were held. But most of our money is appropriated to support ministers in important and growing places. This yields permanent results, but not a large number of additions. A Sunday school evangelist will be put into the field, supported by the Sunday-schools. The permanent fund will be enlarged. New missions will be established in several important towns. We begin the new year with bright outlook for missions in Tennessee. The offerings to all organized mission work were over eight thousand dollars the past year. We regard this as commendable growth, when it is remembered that in 1889, before the state work was begun, one thousand dollars was not given to all our missionary enterprises through regular channels by the Disciples in Tennessee. Then seven or eight churches supported ministers for the whole time; now there are in our state nearly forty such churches. The ministers are in full accord with our work, except, of course, those who never attend our conventions and do not understand the spirit and value of organization in the Master's service.

But the missionary spirit is growing among us. An aged brother remarked recently: "I have been a partisan in the past. I am now a free man. I shall give my money in the future where I please." He is a type of many of our brethren in Tennessee. The state convention is not in debt. About $4,000 were raised last year for the work, and there will be a small balance in the treasury when all bills are paid. Hopefulness, perseverance, prayer, unity, work are our watchword. The Lord will take care of the remainder. We ask the help of all Disciples in Tennessee who love him and the cause entrusted to his friends.

Dexter District, Mo.

In accordance with plans laid at the College Board of Trustee's meeting held at Dexter last May, the tenth or Dexter District of the Christian Churches of southeast Missouri, assembled in the Christian Church at Malden, Mo., Oct. 6 at 7:30 P. M.

The program was carried out as nearly as possible. A number of those on the printed program were absent, but their places were filled and much interest was taken in the work. The hearts of the delegates go out in gratefulness to the hospitable people of Malden for their kind entertainment.

Many thanks are due and are extended to Brother Graves, pastor of the Baptist Church, for his presence and the interest he manifested in our work. The editor of the Dunklin County News showed respect to our convention, which was duly appreciated. The organists and choir have our thanks for their services, and Brother Bennett, the highly esteemed pastor, was in great favor with those present, always making sure every one had a home—and dinner.

Bro. T. J. Head, the Bible-school evangelist for southeast Missouri, was appointed president pro tem and ably presided, making the meetings pleasant. This convention had a "Head"

Sister J. L. Moore, of Palmyra, Mo., state organizer of C. W. B. M. work, was present on invitation of the district manager and due thanks are given her for the interesting and instructive addresses she made and the organization of an auxiliary in the church.

The next meeting of the convention will be held at Dexter, Mo., Oct. 57, 1904. The newly elected officers are: Dr. Albert Buxton, Dexter, president; Elder J. C. Bennett, Malden, vice-president; Mrs. Dr. J. W. Mott, Poplar Bluff, secretary, and Elder J. H. Tiller, Bloomfield, treasurer.

Ohio, Third District.

The annual convention of the Third District Ohio Missionary Society was held at Ada, Ohio, Sept. 29, 30. This was the best attended convention in several years. Twelve churches out of a total of twenty-two were represented. W. A. Brundige, in the president's address, made an earnest appeal for activity in the missionary cause. On Tuesday evening S. H. Bartlett gave us facts concerning Ohio missions, and Miss Mary Lyon spoke in the interests of the C. W. B. M. work. The Sunday-school session on Wednesday morning was one of the most interesting sessions of the convention. The C. W. B. M. session in the afternoon was inspiring to all. P. H. Welshimer gave an address full of practical points for pastors on C. W. B. M. work. C. C. Rowlinson spoke in the evening on "The Young Man's Vision."

J. W. Underwood has left Leipsic Church to attend school at Bethany, W. Va.

A. B. Vertner has gone to Michigan, leaving Garfield Chapel and Unionapolis preacherless.

W. S. Myers has left Mt. Victory mission pastorless.

Beaver Dam, O., is needing a good preacher.

E. B. Cross has located at Leipsic.

Q. A. Randall has begun work with the Bethel church.

It is reported that Judson H. Ladd will probably come to Mt. Victory mission.

Bluffton brought the banner delegation of sixteen on Wednesday. A. F. Reiter is their minister.

The Ways and Means Committee called attention to the fact that the state board expended more than twice the amount received from the churches in this district. The churches must realize their opportunity to do a great work on Nov. 1, Ohio day. Let us have a representative offering from each church. Our churches are nearly all free from debt and well able to possess the land.

Next year's convention will be held in Kenton.

The following were elected officers for the ensuing year: C. C. Rowlinson, Kenton, Pres.; E. B. Cross, Leipsic, V. Pres.; E. J. P. Kempher, Dunkirk, O., Sec.

Dedication [at] Minden Mines, Mo.

On Sunday, Oct. 4, one of the most beautiful and convenient little churches (seating capacity 300) I have ever seen was dedicated at Minden Mines, Mo. Thus, the fond dreams of a little band of twenty-five disciples was realized. The church cost $1,625. Of this amount $825 had been provided for, leaving a debt of $800 before us. Amid threatening clouds and rain, with burdened hearts and great faith we faced our mountain. Being our first experience in this kind of work, we had sent pleading letters to the pastors of neighboring congregations "to come over and help us" at the morning service. All begged to be excused. So with my husband as helper we set about the task, and in an hour had $630 in pledges. A few of us assumed the remainder of the debt, and after communion service in the afternoon the house was formally dedicated to the Lord. And ere the close of the year we hope to have the congregation free from debt.

Harrison, O., Oct. 15, 1903.

ARKANSAS.—Arkadelphia, Oct. 12.—I preached at this place yesterday. I ministered to this congregation for a number of years. There were three added by statement.—E. S. ALLHANDS.

Springdale, Oct. 12.—Fourteen additions in a week's meeting with home forces. Bro. N. M. Ragland, of Fayetteville, was with us one evening, preaching a very inspiring sermon. Our hearts are lighted by hope. Perfect harmony and good will prevails in the congregation.—DANIEL TRUNDLE.

FLORIDA.—Jacksonville, Oct. 12.—Two additions yesterday.—J. T. BOONE.

ILLINOIS.—Clinton, Oct. 16.—Closed a four weeks' meeting last night, 56 added; 34 by baptism.—E. A. GILLILAND, pastor; R. A. OMER, evangelist.

Walnut, Oct. 14.—We are in the midst of a fine meeting. Have had 20 additions in the 10 days: 18 of them confessions; 14 in two nights. The pastor is doing the preaching and doing it well. The interest is fine. I go from here to La Belle, Mo., to assist J. H. Jones, Oct. 25.—CLARENCE E. WAGNER, singer.

Mt. Sterling, Oct. 6.—I began my fourth year here last Sunday. We raised last year for all purposes, $1,900. Of that, $250 was for missionary work to our various boards. We had during the year, 43 additions, and in three years, 190 additions. We have 395 members. In our last court a young man was sentenced to the State Prison at Chester, Ill., for forgery. He sent for me. I went to the jail and talked and prayed with him. He desired to be baptized. We took him to the church, took his confession and baptized him in the presence of the officers and a number of brethren. I raised money and presented him with a fine teachers' Bible. How sad and yet how good to see his penitence and obedience! Our work here is prosperous. We thank God and take courage.—N. E. CORY.

INDIANA.—Gas City, Oct. 12.—Bro. A. M. Hootman, of Logansport, spent one week with the Church of Christ here. During his stay he raised $1,200, which seemed impossible to us, dedicated the church building, which has been remodeled at a cost of about $2,600, and greatly strengthened the church by his masterful sermons of clear, logical truths. Two were added to the church by letter. Brother Hootman made a wonderful impression on our people for the short time he was with us; and we greatly appreciate his labors. Brother Hootman is a man of unusual personality and is well skilled in presenting the great truths of the Bible. Our friends say we have the prettiest church in town, and we don't dispute their word.—SHELLEY D. WATTS, Pastor.

New Washington, Oct. 13.—Just closed a fine meeting at Holton, Ind., which resulted in 13 additions to the church: 9 by confession and baptism, 4 from Baptists. Of the 9 confessions, 3 were Catholic men, 1 Episcopalian. The church was reorganized and the brethren are going to thoroughly repair the house, as they are quite able to do so now. I began here the 11th. Go to northern Indiana for November and December.—J. J. TAYLOR.

Indianapolis, Oct. 12.—Three added at North Park Church yesterday: one confession, two by letter and statement.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

Irvington, Oct. 13.—Everything starts off nicely in my work here.—ROY L. HANDLEY.

IOWA.—Montezuma, Oct. 14.—Three recent accessions; two by confession. Work in fine shape. Beautiful parsonage nearly done.—J. H. STARK.

Oskaloosa, Oct. 12.—The following is the report of the work here for the past few months: Added by letter, 12; by statement, 5; from other churches, 1; by confession and baptism; 8; total, 26. Our work is in good condition.—J. P. MCKNIGHT.

KANSAS.—Moline, Oct. 11.—I have taken the pastorate of the church here, and all departments are moving along nicely. Five additions the 11th: four by letter and one by commendation. Correspondents will please address me at Moline, Kan.—E. L. POSTON.

Butler, Oct. 12.—Seven added yesterday and two at mid-week prayer-meeting. This makes 105 since Jan. 11. Fifty-five have been by conversion and fifty by statement and letter. We have raised over $200 for missionary purposes. Our present membership is 25. It was 166 Jan. 11.—E. H. WILLIAMSON.

Joplin, Oct. 10.—W. A. Moore, one of our State Bible-school evangelists, has just concluded a great meeting in South Joplin. It was great in the number added, in the interest shown and in the results that will surely follow. It began on the first Lord's day in September, and lasted twenty-nine days. At the final service there were 117 added; 46 were by statement, four from the Baptists, six from the Methodists and 61 from the world. Many were heads of families. The interest was intense, the attendance large and the enthusiasm high. This has resulted in the organization of a new congregation of 150 members, with an Endeavor Society of 40, a good Sunday-school, prayer-meeting, etc. This new church is situated one mile south of the first church, in the midst of ten thousand people, and has a great field in which to work. Miss Bertha Dew, of Neosho, daughter of our pastor there, assisted with the singing for two weeks in a very acceptable manner. The success of the meeting was largely assured by the preliminary preparation that had been made by Bro. Baker who had given the house and two months of his time in getting every thing ready for this special campaign. Brother Moore did a fine work. His preaching was plain and yet powerful. His tender pleading and his personal work during the day was irresistible. The interest was greatest at the close and the services were only closed on account of the meetings beginning at the First Church. It is our judgment that Bro. Moore will make one of our safest and strongest evangelists should the Lord call him to that work. The numerous calls he is getting from other places shows that others share this opinion with us. It is not strange that the new church rose up as one man and demanded that Bro. Baker become their new pastor. It was a great sacrifice for the First Church to make, but after a board meeting it was decided that it was best for our cause in this city for him to take this work and so this was done. J. W. Baker, one of God's men, is the pastor of the new church in South Joplin.—W. F. TURNER.

OHIO.—North Eaton.—Robert B. Chapman has received a call to remain a third year here. During the past twelve months 35 have been added to the membership, missionary collections increased, the C. W. B. M. reorganized, the Sunday-school revived and current expenses met. Besides this, the money is pledged to put down a private gas well to supply the church and parsonage. The church gives the pastor time and means to attend the Detroit Convention. Five others from this church will also attend the convention.

OKLAHOMA.—Ashley, Oct. 12.—We arrived here Sept. 28. Leave to-day. Have preached 16 sermons, raised $550 for a house. We go to mutual Woodward next.—R. S. & M. A. SMEDLEY, evangelists.

Norman, Oct. 12.—Bro. W. A. Wherry is with us in a short meeting. Brother Wherry is a former pastor of this church and universally loved by the people here. We have had one confession and one added by letter to date. Many were turned away last night for want of room. Sunday was our second anniversary with this church. During this time we have had 87 baptisms and 89 added by letter, or a total of 176 additions. Our record shows that we have had additions to the church every month, except one, during the past two years. We have only lost two members by death. Our offerings this year will be about $450 to $500 larger than last year.—J. G. CREASON.

OREGON.—Coquille, Oct. 6.—State Evangelist J. B. Holmes is in a four weeks' meeting here. There have been 14 additions; 8 by baptism, 5 by letter, 1 from the Baptists. John J. Handsaker will locate as pastor.

Corvallis, Oct. 10.—Twelve added here since last report: 1 by letter, 3 by statement and 8 by confession. Eleven are young men, all but one of them being students in the Agricultural College.—T. S. HANDSAKER.

Portland.—A. D. Skaggs and W. B. Rose just closed a meeting (Oct. 5) at Brush Prairie, Wash., with over 50 additions; 46 baptisms.—BRUCE WOLVERTON.

Four years ago the Society contemplated entering Tibet. Dr. Rijnhart's publications and addresses awakened an unprecedented interest in that country. Several organizations sought the honor of paying her salary. Others wished to contribute to her outfit and traveling expenses. There was nothing for the committee to do but to make the necessary arrangements. The first group consists of three.

The workers in the Philippines asked for a dispensary in Laoag. There is no American physician in or near that place. Dr. and Mrs. C. L. Pickett, of Nebraska, have gone to open this dispensary. It is believed that it will be almost self-supporting from the beginning.

The first church has been established on African soil. Week after week those who have confessed their faith in Christ have been baptized. There is a large number of inquirers. These are under instruction. The establishment of this church is an event of capital importance. It marks a new epoch in the history of our work. England reports the best year in the history of that mission. In Japan there has been a great evangelistic campaign in connection with the Osaka exposition. H. H. Guy, C. S. Weaver, P. A. Davey and others, have taken part in it. Thousands have signified their intention to inquire further. In other parts of Japan the work of the Lord is flourishing. China is open, as never before, to the gospel. The Boxer movement advertised Christianity as nothing else could have done. There are open doors on all sides.

The chief need is that of thoroughly equipped evangelists. There is no lack of young ladies. It is not difficult to get medical missionaries, but it is difficult to get men in sufficient numbers to preach. The coming year a score of evangelists, at the very least, should be sent out. A hundred could be used to advantage. The churches should pray the Lord of the harvest to send forth laborers into his harvest. Two teachers are needed for the work in Cuba. The children of Havana and Matanzas must be reached.

As in other years, the churches in Australia, in England and in Canada have contributed generously to the treasury of the Society. The brethren in Australia support P. A. Davey in Japan and Miss Tonkin in China, Miss Mary Thompson, F. E. Stubbin and wife and M. J. Shah in India. The women in England support Dr. Mary T. McGavran and Miss M. L. Clark. This is only part of what is being done in England for the work. The women in Ontario and in the Maritime Provinces of Canada support Miss Mary Riach in Japan. The Endeavorers propose to give on a large scale for the Tibetan Mission. The churches and schools contribute to the general fund. This fellowship in the Lord's work is most delightful.

One of the most significant and cheering facts of our time is that the colleges are making provision for the education of the entire student body in missions. In Hiram, Professor Paul has the largest mission class in the world. Mrs. Bourne has taught a class in Kentucky University. The Bible College has placed missions in the curriculum. Classes have been taught in Eureka, in the Missouri Bible College, in Drake University, in Athens University, in Bethany, in Butler, in Cotner, in Texas Christian University, and in other institutions.

It is the will of God that the gospel of his grace shall be preached in the whole world for a testimony to all nations. In order that this may be done, qualified men in sufficient numbers must be willing to go out into the whitened fields. It was said of old time: "Thy people offer themselves willingly in the day of thy power." This is that glorious day the Psalmist saw from afar. Those who remain at home must send and support those who are called to this high service. We are to do this by our prayers and sympathies and by our means. If the whole body of believers will undertake this task in earnest, it will not be long until the prophecy will be fulfilled: "All the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it."

The detailed reports will be found in the Missionary Intelligencer.

The One Woman. By Thomas Dixon, Jr. (Doubleday, Page & Co. $1 50.)

If Mr. Dixon's reputation as a sensationalist needed confirmation, it would find it in this lurid tale of the unselfish enthusiasm, the magnetic eloquence and the ignominious fall of a socialistic preacher. Most people will remember that about two years ago a professor of "applied Christianity" in an Iowa college, a man who had won a national reputation as a proclaimer of the gospel of brotherhood, deserted his wife and children and married a rich young woman to whom he declared that his soul was knit by the inevitable bond of natural affinity. He justified the desertion of his wife by asserting that marriage is a mockery after love on either side has ceased, and argued for liberty of divorce as an essential to the emancipation of the race from its thralldom to tradition and conventionality. This story, which actually happened in Iowa, has been transplanted by the novelist to New York, embellished, elaborated, perfected and provided with a melodramatic climax, and the result is the novel, "The One Woman." The hero-villain of the novel is pastor of a church in New York. He is pouring out his life in service to the unfortunate and oppressed. He preaches to vast throngs, who are drawn by the spell of his eloquence and by admiration for his work. He wages war against the forces of stupid conventionality, selfish indifference and self-righteous greed represented by the bankers and brokers on his own official board. Face to face with the awful suffering which seemed to be an inevitable product of our present social and industrial order, he decided that the whole system must go, that a new era must be inaugurated where there would be no struggle for existence, no senseless conventionalities, no bonds to hinder the free development of each soul according to its enlightened impulses. Freedom! freedom! was to be the watchword of the new order. The reformer's wife was not hospitable to these new ideas. She feared the unforeseen consequences of this sweeping reconstruction. Meanwhile he found a new helper in a young woman, possessed of great wealth and of every physical charm, who threw all her energy into his work for the betterment of humanity, became his assistant and presently gave half of her fortune for the building of the great Temple of Humanity, which was to be the home of the new movement. Their relations became too intimate to be harmless. The reformer decided that marriage was one of those conventionalities which needed to be reconstructed on a basis of perfect freedom and equality. So he left his wife and family and married the rich young woman by a new ceremony in which he proclaimed the end of slave-marriage and the dawn of perfect love." The basis of this new marriage was the understanding that it might be terminated at any time by the will of either party. There was to be no bond but love. It worked well—for a while. The crisis came when the wife tired of the husband and left him as he had left his former wife. Then he saw the matter differently. His beautiful dream about solidarity and brotherhood dropped from him like a mantle, and he stood forth as a warlike individual ready to do battle with any other individual for possession of his own. The fight came, quick and cruel. The other man was killed. The social reformer, now a criminal and a convicted murderer, has no friend except his first wife, who has been true to him through the years of his aberration, and she finally saves him from the electric chair (this is in New York) and re-marries him, a thoroughly repentant man.

That is the story, a savage, brutal story, but who shall say an improbable story? The least convincing phase of it—the transition from that noble enthusiasm for humanity to the attack upon the family as an antiquated institution—is paralleled exactly by the Iowa case, which is history and not fiction. Whether the author meant it for a sweeping denunciation of socialism, one cannot say—for novelists do not have to explain—but it looks so. The virtue of the book is its exaltation of the idea of the family and its revelation of the folly and stupidity and ultimate devilishness of any scheme of social reform which sacrifices it. Its vice is its implication that sympathy with the oppressed, and dissatisfaction with present industrial conditions, naturally lead to lawlessness, anarchy and free-love. The story presents an awful antithesis between the socialist who sinned through good intentions and the deacon and the banker who sinned through selfishness. If one asks what are the possible attitudes which a man may take toward the iniquities of the modern social and business world, this book answers: There are three to choose from: the cynical indifference of the banker, the selfish conventionality of the "shorthorn deacon," and the wild iconoclasm of the socialist preacher which aims at brotherhood and ends in "a stampede back to the animal herd." Does that exhaust the possibilities? If so, and if this book proves it, then it is the grimmest tragedy since the Antigone.

However that may be, it is a book well worth reading. There is a rugged strength and a burning eloquence in it which put it in a class apart from the mass of contemporary fiction.

Unseen Forces and How to Use Them. By S. R. Maxwell. Printed at Atlanta, Ga., by the Franklin Printing and Publishing Company. 1903.

The author of this volume is a Christian preacher who has held pastorates at Rockville, Ind., Richmond, Va., Macon and Valdosta, Ga., and who at present is in Baltimore, Md. The volume which he has written deals with modern psychological studies and seems especially to be an exposition of what has come to be known as the "New Thought Philosophy." The author holds to the theory of the conscious and subconscious brain as set forth in Hudson's "Law of Psychical Phenomena," and, like that author, finds the explanation of the healing power exercised by Christian Scientists, magnetic healers, faith cures, hypnotism, etc., in a common law which underlies all of them, and which all of them use to a greater or less degree. The book points out that Christian Science is a reproduction of Berkeleianism, and in his own language he "pulverizes" it. It is not a difficult thing to pulverize the philosophy of Mrs. Eddy, and the author does this effectually. He recognizes, however, the truth which Christian Science has gotten hold of which accounts for whatever cures it has wrought.

Mr. Maxwell has shown himself to be a vigorous thinker and writer, and the thoughtful reader of his volume will find very much in it to stir up thought and much that he can approve. Here and there he will put a question mark where the author seems to claim more for the law of suggestion than seems credible. He rightly charges Christian Science with claiming many things as its own which belong to Christianity. The reader will sometimes feel the same way concerning certain things which are claimed for the New Thought, which, if not a part of Christianity, are a part of the truth concerning human nature which he has held for some time without knowing what the New Thought claims to be.

Unlike some other authors who have written upon these modern phases of psychology, the author holds staunchly to his faith in Christ, and attempts to show that the gospel, as held and taught by himself and his brethren, is in entire harmony with the best psychology. We have read the book with interest, and our readers will find it stimulating and helpful, even though they may not approve of all its utterances.

There is a good deal of repetition in the book which, though a fault from a literary point of view, may serve the purpose of fastening its positions in the mind. Some parts show evidence of hasty or careless construction, as on page 299, in a formula given for use in routing bodily ailments. "I am spirit; therefore I am well. The body is not me; therefore I am well, since I am not any body." The objective case after the verb to be does not

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

perhaps add to the effectiveness of the formula. Every one knows, of course, that disease inheres in the body, and not in the spirit; but the formula does not explain how the affirmation of this fact relieves the body of any real pain. But as a matter of fact we do know that the mind does exert a controlling influence over many forms of disease. It is perhaps too much to say that it controls all disease, but there is enough truth in the theory to make it wise to think thoughts of health and purity, rather than of sickness and of evil.

Aids to the Study of Dante. By Charles Allen Dinsmore. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co. pp. 435. Illustrated. $1 50 net.)

About Dante and his wonderful poem there have been written perhaps more books than had ever been written in all the world on all subjects up to the time of Dante. A mere catalogue of the books about Dante fills three portly volumes. How thankful the student should be that he need not read it all! Much of it is wholly superfluous, the product of the same impulse that moved the scribes to encumber and obscure the law with a wilderness of comments and precepts. But much of it is helpful to the understanding of the subtleties and intricacies of the poem, and sheds needed light on the political and religious situation out of which it arose. And some of it—how the bulk diminishes as we pass from one to another of these classes—is so apt and adequate, so instructive and illuminating, that it is almost as classic and as indispensable as the poem itself. There is not a vast deal of this last sort, and some of it, like Boccaccio's Life of Dante, and the other almost contemporary records, are not easily accessible to all readers. In this volume, Mr. Dinsmore has collected and topically arranged some of the most important original sources of information about Dante, and some of the choicest pieces of modern exposition and comment, to which he has added some contributions of his own. Some of the recent writers represented are Dean Church, by a forty-page essay on "Florentine Political Feuds and Their Influence on Dante;" Charles Eliot Norton by no less than five essays—but it would be impossible to get too much of his ripe scholarship and flowing diction; Scartazzini and Lowell. It must have required some temerity on the part of the author to put his own name and contributions beside those of the men mentioned, yet he is not an intruder in that goodly company. He is of those who have written things about Dante which the student, or even the reader, cannot afford to neglect. This volume will be found one of the most helpful and satisfying books one can have to set beside his Divina Comedia.

Typical Elders and Deacons. By James M. Campbell, D. D. Author of "Clerical Types," "After Pentecost—What?" "Bible Questions," etc. Funk & Wagnalls Co. New York and London. 1903. Price $1.

Those who have read "Clerical Types" will be glad to learn of this volume by the same author on "Elders and Deacons." Dr. Campbell has a fine talent for delineating character as shown in these two volumes. Every reader of this volume as he scans the chapters of "An Ideal Deacon," "A Deacon not Ideal," "A Loquacious Deacon," "A Silent Deacon," "A Jovial Elder," "A Chronic Grumbler," "The No-talent Man," "A Manly Elder," "A Critical Elder," "An Elder of Good Report," "A Modern Diotrephes," "A Watchman on Zion's Walls," etc., will recognize familiar characters with whom he has come in contact. If the weak places are pointed out in these officials, their good points also receive due emphasis, and there is a delightful flavor of humor running through the sketches that makes the book most readable. We are sure the general reading of this book by church officials would have a wholesome effect. There are twenty pictures describing as many typical deacons and elders, and nearly everyone will find something in it that applies to himself. Dr. Campbell's English is clear and limpid, and is easy reading.

Brief Mention.

The Keys of the Kingdom, is the title of a volume containing seven sermons by Rev. R. J. Campbell, who recently succeeded Dr. Joseph Parker. (Revell, 50 cts. net.)—A large number of homiletical illustrations are collected and topically arranged in Topical Illustrations by J. E. Denton. (Standard Pub. Co. $1.)—Christian workers will find inspiration and practical help in Howard Agnew Johnston's Studies for Personal Workers (International Committee Y. M. C. A. 66 cts. net.)—Sundays and Weekdays with Children, by Mrs. Virginia J. Kent, is made up of poetical and prose selections and hymns chiefly of a religious character. (Revell.)—Dr. Johns D. Parker in The Sabbath Transferred (second edition) undertakes to prove that the Sabbath was a movable institution, and that it was transferred at the resurrection from the seventh to the first day of the week. The argument hangs largely upon an original and unique translation of Matt. 28:1. His theory, we believe, is thoroughly erroneous. Its exposition is marked by a high degree of that "subjectivity" which is said to characterize modern criticism. Nevertheless he says some good words for the practical observance of the Lord's day. The Quiet Hour

"My soul cleaveth unto the dust; Quicken thou me according to thy word."
—Psalm 119:25.

The psalmist here utters a universal human experience. No matter how pure and high our aspirations may be, there are times when we are made painfully conscious that our "soul cleaveth unto the dust." Temptations assail us in a weak spot. We are surprised by a sudden recurrence of temper or passion or appetite which we had imagined were quite vanquished. Such must have been the experience of the psalmist who penned these lines.

The fact which we have mentioned, however, should teach us humility. Spiritual pride is but the prelude to a fall. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." This cleaving to the dust is not a tendency that is soon overcome. We are in the flesh, but we are not to walk after the flesh but after the Spirit. Am I sowing to the flesh or to the Spirit? Am I led by the Spirit of God or by my fleshly desires and earthly ambitions? Let each one examine his own heart.

It may seem a difficult task, this keeping of the body under, but it is not to be done in our own name or strength, but in His name "who is able to guard us from stumbling and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy." And then we are to seek for strength one day at a time.

"Let me be strong in word and deed,
Just for to-day!
Lord, for to-morrow and its need
I must not pray."

Two dangers confront every soul. One is the danger of being satisfied with our bondage or semi-bondage to the flesh, in which no effort is made to escape into real soul-liberty, and the other is the danger of becoming impatient with ourselves and discouraged when, after repeated efforts, we find our souls cleaving unto the dust. We must seek to avoid both these errors. We should be satisfied with nothing short of the best, but if we do not attain our ideal to-day, let us still cherish the ideal for to-morrow.

"Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise,
From the lowly earth to the vaulted skies,
And we climb to its summit round by round."

Speak, Lord, our souls are hushed to hear what Thou hast to say to us. Great is the stake, overwhelming may be the risks—most glorious are the opportunities. Speak, Lord, and show us what our duty is—how high, how difficult, yet how happy, how blessed—show us what our duty is, and, O great God and Father, give us strength to do it.

—Dean Stanley.

Take your duty and be strong in it, as God will make you strong. The harder it is, the stronger in fact you will be. Understand also, that the great question here is, not what you will get, but what you will become. The greatest wealth you can ever get will be in yourself. Take your burdens and troubles and losses and wrongs, if come they must and will, as your opportunity, knowing that God has girded you for greater things than these.

—Horace Bushnell.

Father, we thank Thee that though we are clothed in dust, yet we are not dust, but are made in Thy image. Grant us strength to overcome all the solicitations to evil which come through our house of clay, until through Thy grace we attain the image of Thy Son.

Family Circle

A Prophetic Poem.

As I stand by the cross on the lone mountain's crest,
Looking over the ultimate sea,
In the gloom of the mountain a ship lies at rest,
And one sails away from the lea;
One spreads its white wings on a far-reaching track,
With pennant and sheet flowing free;
One hides in the shadow with sails laid aback—
The ship that is waiting for me!

But lo! in the distance the clouds break away,
The Gate's glowing portals I see;
And I hear from the outgoing ship in the bay
The song of the sailors in glee.
So I think of the luminous footprints that bore
The comfort o'er dark Galilee,
And wait for the signal to go to the shore,
To the ship that is waiting for me.

—Bret Harle.

The Minister's Resignation.

By F. E. C. R. Robbins.

"Let me see," said Miss Eleanor Banks, on the first afternoon of her visit to her aunt at Farmington village, "didn't you write to me last winter that your minister had resigned?"

"I guess perhaps I did," was the reply, in a somewhat absent-minded tone.

"It seems to me that I got the impression from your letter that the resignation did not cause universal regret," suggested the niece, after waiting a moment for her aunt to enlarge upon the theme.

"Maybe you did," said the old lady, who was apparently absorbed in learning how hard it may be for a thread to pass through the eye of a needle.

Presently she added, with the manner of one who, after all, is not quite willing to let the subject drop, "There were some of the people who thought that Mr. Pease had kind of lost his usefulness."

"He had been here a long time, hadn't he?" asked her niece.

"Yes, that was just it. Mr. Pease had been here going on thirty years; and as you might say, we'd got him learned by heart. We always knew what he was going to say next, and its no use denying that he was getting to be rather dry in the pulpit. I didn't mind it so much myself, but your Uncle Andrew did, and that was worse. The preaching I could stand, but what with that of a Sunday, and Andrew's taking on about it all the rest of the week, I was beginning to get about beat out myself.

"Every now and then somebody would come around and want him to speak to the minister about resigning. Of course, if anything of consequence is to be done in the parish, it is always your Uncle Andrew that has to go ahead with it. They would argue that Mr. Pease was comfortably off, and his wife had property besides, and so it would be no hardship for him to step aside.

"But Andrew couldn't make up his mind to do it, so things went along, with the society fast running to seed, when all of a sudden, and without any help from anybody, the minister did resign.

"Well, I presume there were a good many felt to rejoice, but I guess nobody was quite so tickled as Andrew. For a few days it seemed as if he could not do enough to show how kind of grateful he was.

"He did the papering and painting that I had been at him about for two years, and he bought a new parlor carpet that I hadn't so much as asked for. Then he took it into his head that we must get up a farewell reception to the minister.

"Well, all the folks seemed to fall in with that idea, and if you'll believe me, they raised a hundred dollars in gold for a parting gift.

"Of course, there was a general invitation to the reception, and we had to hold it in the town hall. Well, after we had all shaken hands with the minister and his wife, Andrew came up front and made the presentation speech.

"I do wish you could have heard him! Of course your uncle is gifted in speech, but I guess he surprised himself that night. Yet he didn't say anything but the truth. Mr. Pease had been a faithful minister—one that had visited the widow and fatherless in their affliction, and been helpful in sickness, and stood by us all in trouble, and tried to comfort us when we buried our dead.

"But it was wonderful the way your Uncle Andrew worked all those good things Mr. Pease had done into his speech. It took hold of us more and more as he went along, until by the time he got through, and handed over the hundred dollars in gold to the minister, about everybody in the hall was having a good, hard cry.

"As for Mr. Pease, he could hardly speak at first. But when he found his voice I guess what he said made full as much impression as Andrew's talk.

"He said that he had been simply amazed at the feeling that had been manifested, and it lead him to think that perhaps he had been hasty in the step he had taken. Perhaps it was his duty, after all, to spend the rest of his days as the pastor of his dear flock. He went on in that way for a while, and finally he asked all those who desired him to withdraw his resignation to rise.

"Well, there were some queer looks went over a good many faces, but in a minute all those that hadn't been standing before got up from their seats.

"There was to have been other exercises after the presentation. Adelaide Tinkham had written a poem appropriate to the occasion as she had expected it to be, but she slipped around to Andrew and told him not to call on her.

"And the choir had been rehearsing a very handsome song for a week, but it was all about parting, and they wouldn't sing it. When they were called on they whispered together for a while, and then announced that they would sing 'Blest be the tie that binds,' and they requested all present to join.

"Then we partook of our refreshments, and the reception broke up."

"So you still have the same minister," said Eleanor, with a smile.

"Why, yes, in one sense we do. But, really, Mr. Pease has seemed like a new man ever since. It's wonderful how that reception seemed to freshen him up. He preaches a new sermon almost every Sunday, and the whole parish seems to be alive again. As for your Uncle Andrew, you'd think to hear him talk there was nobody like Mr. Pease. You see, he's bound to stand by that presentation speech. So in one sense, I suppose, we've got our change, after all."—The Youth's Companion.

"But, Marion, there is another who would cry her eyes out if anything befell Lewis," said Molly, in tones full of meaning.

"Who?" asked Marion, curiously.

"And you have not noticed?"

"Not Molly, not my little sister?" cried the young man, surprised.

"Pay John Williams."

At a prayer-meeting "down East" a man noted for his intentional failures to meet business obligations, arose to speak. The subject was: "What shall I do to be saved?"

He commenced slowly to quote the words, "What shall I do to be saved?" He paused, looked around, and said again, "What shall I do to be saved?"

Again, with more solemn tone, he repeated the question of questions, when a voice from the assembly in clear and distant tones, replied:

"Go and pay John Williams for that yoke of oxen."

The incident stirs up solemn thought. A great many people before they can be saved, or guide others to the Savior, will have to "go and pay John Williams" the money they honestly owe him.

Shrewd tricksters in the marts of the world are not shrewd enough to be dishonest at heart and retain the favor of God, who "loves purity in the inward parts." Neither can a hope of the world to come be like a sheet-anchor in the soul of any one who robs God by being dishonest to his fellow-man.

Thousands read no other Bible than the lives of those who profess to be following its precepts in daily lives.

The greatest need of the church is true, pure, upright living—"living epistles, known and read of all men." The square man is the best shape. The tree is known by its fruit.

Editorial Regrets.

A country editor, who evidently has troubles of his own, is having heart-to-heart-talks with his delinquent subscribers. The following is one of the latest:

"Good morning, Have you paid your subscription this year? Perhaps you owe for last year, or several years.

Now, you understand we don't need money; we have millions—to get. But it is really an imposition to let people go on carrying our money when we are strong and healthy and so abundantly able to bear the burden ourselves. For this reason we ask anybody who has any of our money in his possession to leave it at the office or send it by post, freight-train, express, or any other way, just so it gets here. Silver and gold are heavy, and it would be a matter of life-long regret if anybody should get bow-legged carrying it about for us."—Tit-Bits.

A College Class Creed.

According to the Literary Digest, President Hyde, of Bowdoin College, asked a class of sixty students, most of them seniors, to write out their individual creeds. Each man was asked to state exactly his belief and his unbelief, and just in what sense, too, he believed or rejected the things. These statements President Hyde then reduced to a composite creed, putting into it everything that the students had affirmed, excepting those things which one or the other of them denied. This creed was then gone over by the entire class, modifying and amending it, until it was adopted by a unanimous vote. Here is the creed:

"I believe in one God, present in nature as law, in science as truth, in art as beauty, in history as justice, in society as sympathy, in conscience as duty, and supremely in Christ as our highest ideal.

"I believe in the Bible as the expression of God's will through man, in prayer as the devotion of man's will to God, and in the church as the fellowship of those who try to do God's will in the world.

"I believe in worship as the highest inspiration to work, in sacrifice as the price we must pay to make right what is wrong, in salvation as growth out of selfishness into service, in eternal life as the survival of what loves and is lovable in each individual, and in judgment as the obvious fact that the condition of the gentle, the generous, the modest, the pure and the true is always and everywhere preferable to that of the cruel, the sensual, the mean, the proud and the false."

All's Well.

The day is ended. Ere I sink to sleep
My weary spirit seeks repose in thine;
Father! forgive my little trespasses and keep
This little life of mine.

With loving-kindness curtain thou my bed,
And cool in rest my burning pilgrim feet:
Thy pardon be the pillow for my head,
So shall my sleep be sweet.

At peace with all the world, dear Lord, and thee,
No fears my soul's unwavering faith can shake;

All's well! whichever side the grave for me
The morning light may break.

How to Have a Good Time.

"Well, twinses, did you have a good time?" asked Mrs. Grey, when her little girls came back from the beach to take a bath and a midday nap.

"Yes'm," said Lacy, and "No'm," said Lula, in the same breath.

"Why didn't you have a good time, little sister?" mother asked Lula then.

"I don't know," said Lula; "maybe I didn't feel good."

"Did Lacy let you play with the bucket?"

"Yes, I played wif it all the time."

"All the time? And how about the shovel?"

"I played wif it all the time, too."

"Ah," said mother, looking very wise, "and who played with the flag, little sister?"

Lula hung her head.

"I played wif it all the time, too," she said, presently.

"And what did my other little girl play with?" mother asked Lacy.

"I des played wif myself," said number two, with a merry laugh, "but I had a dood time."

"Now I see what was the matter with Lula," said mother; "the sun may be shining, but it never looks bright to a little girl who keeps everything herself."

Lula did not say anything, but she understood just what mother meant, and when I saw them on the beach the next day, Lacy had the bucket, and Lula had the flag, and they were using the shovel turn about.—Ariana Harmon.

A Boy Scored.

A Philadelphia paper relates this story which is credited to a prominent lawyer of Pottsville, who was once a high-school principal. The former pedagogue said:

"One day at school I gave a very bright boy a sum in algebra, and, although the problem was comparatively easy, he couldn't do it. I remarked:

"You should be ashamed of yourself. At your age George Washington was a surveyor."

"The boy looked me straight in the eyes and replied:

"Yes, sir, and at your age he was President of the United States."

"What is your rule of business—your maxim?" the Wall Street baron was asked. "Very simple," he answered; "I pay for something that I can't get, with money that I haven't got, and then sell what I never had for more than it ever cost."

On a tour of President McKinley in the South, Mr. Andrew Carnegie was a member of the party. On one occasion he accompanied the president and some others to service in a colored church in Thomasville, Ga.

When the deacons passed the contribution boxes, Mr. Carnegie dropped in a fifty-dollar bill.

The old preacher counted their contents. When he had finished, he placed a handful of small change on one side and a crisp greenback on the other. Clearing his throat, he said:

"Breddern, we has been greatly blessed by dis yer contebution. We has heah fo' dollahs an' fo'ty cents; dat is good; and if de fifty-dollah bill put in by the white gemman wid de gray whiskers is also good, we is blessed a whole lot moah," and he looked suspiciously at the giver of libraries and campaign funds.

Read It Because You Need It.

It has been said frequently that whatever book is worth reading once is worth reading twice. Some one gives the reason why he read the "Marble Faun" eight times, about as follows: As a matter of course; because he was interested in it; because he was going to Rome for a few months; because he had been in Rome because he wanted to refresh himself in the art-life of Rome; because he wished to study over the philosophy of the book; because he wanted to. Superintendent Maxwell, of Brooklyn, advises that the poem "Evangeline" be read at least three times: First, for the sake of becoming acquainted with the narrative; second, to obtain clearer conceptions of the characters, etc., and for the purpose of dividing the poem into parts for closer study; and third, for a careful analysis of the poem and a study of the words contained in it. All whose counsel is worth taking, advise that the Bible be read over and over through the life, for many reasons, but especially because it is the Word of God, which each soul needs for daily life and growth.—Selected.

Odd Legislation.

Every one knows that the Arkansas legislature enacted some years ago that the proper pronunciation of the name of the state was "Arkansaw." It is not so well known that there is a unique law on the statute book of Nevada, the object of which was to clear from stain the name of an Indian chief, who, although a strong temperance advocate and an abstainer, took a "pick-me-up" one day in a local saloon. In his extremity he appealed to his white friends, with the result that the state legislature was persuaded to declare itself thus: "Resolved, by the legislature of the state of Nevada, the governor concurring, that the drink of whisky taken by Johnson Sides in the Magnolia saloon, July 11, 1887, be and is hereby annulled."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Last week I asked the Advance Society if they wished to take some orphan under their care and give it a home and an education. At the time I write this, I have not had a chance to hear from that question. You know the Advance Society has done its best, so far, to improve the members—to make them bright and good and happy. But now we think of helping somebody else. We don't mean a great big orphan in long pants, or with hair done up, or an orphan who is getting along pretty well without assistance. We mean a little child who is helpless—who hasn't anything—and who can never become anybody unless people come to the rescue. How proud I will be if the Av. S. takes up this work! And how proud you will be,—I mean if you are one of those who contribute to our enterprise—when people talk about the Advance Society Orphan! They will mean our orphan. And whereas some women devote their love and training to pet dogs, and men spend their money on horses, we will be training and supporting a human being, who in mature years may be a blessing to the world. And it will be we who help in that blessing! You want to do something for the world, don't you? You've had a pretty good time in it. Well, how can you help the world in a surer way, than by taking a child who is homeless and unloved, and having it brought up to love God and to live right, and to exert a good influence on others? Let every member who feels like it, send me something for this work, if it's only five cents: and let every one who reads these words, though not a member of the Av. S., send me something, if he feels like it—and I hope it'll be a whole lot more than five cents, or we'll have a mighty hard time! I don't say, "Send this if you can afford it," because every American can afford a nickel. I say, if you feel like it, because we don't want a cent given with reluctance. Giving money is just like any other Christian act. If you don't love your enemy, I can't make you do so by pulling your ear, or scolding. And if you don't want to give for our cause, it won't do you any good if you do give.

Mary Haymaker, Wichita, Kan.: "In my first report I forgot to say what history I read. You asked me to write and tell, so you could put my name on the Honor List. My letter that told the history came out, but not the name on the Honor List." (I'll have it come out in just a few minutes).

Helen Ross, Independence, Mo.: "Oh! you don't know how glad I am that old gold and blue won as our Av. S. colors, because that is my favorite combination. I started to school a month ago. I am in the first year high school and study algebra, English, ancient history and Latin." (Tuba, tubae, tubae, tubam?) "We have had the Av. S. letters long enough, now, so why don't you write a story? I am getting awfully hungry for one of your good ones, and I believe most of the rest of us members are, too. I am going to put plenty of stamps on my report so won't have to pay anything at the other end of the line." (Hurrah!)

Ruth Sampsel, Warrensburg, Mo.: "I started on my 6th quarter several days ago and would have written but have been sick several weeks. I would like to know who received the prize for the 10 most popular books—our paper stopped before April." (It was Maude Kelley, Saskatoon, Sask., Canada.) "I am not going to school; I study at home." (Oh, how pleasant!) "I make them nice and long." (Yes, I know you do!) "I have two pet mice, Bimboo and Anne; I had one named Mabel, but it died. Bimboo is a field mouse, but Anne and Mabel are house mice. I keep them in a wire mouse-trap." (I hope Mabel is nicely dried.) "I break the handles off small gourds and place them in the trap; they use them for a bed. After Mabel died, I had only Bimboo." (you wouldn't have had him, if Felix had been there,) "till one morning when I went to feed it, I found another mouse in the trap." (Baby?) "It is fun to watch them wash their faces. I have a long wire to move things with, for I don't often risk my fingers in there—mice will bite. I cleaned the cage the other day, and Anne crawled into the waterjar. I had to pour water on her to get her out. Whenever I try to play with them, Anne will get under the trapdoor, and Bimboo in the gourd, and then they think they are safe. I have two kittens which I call Pretty Cat and Rascal. I tried to start a branch Advance Society, but could not get anyone to join; so I thought I would be my own society with mamma for President." (That always makes a first-class society.) "This week I read 130 pages of history." (Once I caught some mice that way, and tacked wire screen over a box, and put them in it. Then I made a hole in the side of the box with a red-hot poker, and put another box over that hole, and so on, till I had a house of four stories with an attic, and you could see everything going on through the wire screen. When I played on my violin the mice would all dance, but they did not keep step. And did you ever hear a mouse sing? Well, they do; mine did—late at night, one would stand on his hind legs and chirp up and make some really sweet notes, while the others huddled in a corner and watched out of little shining eyes. One night they all got out through a hole the head mouse had gnawed unbeknown to me—but you could smell'em a week after they were gone.)

Flossie Davis, Des Moines, Ia.: "Well, I'm sorry to say I've failed again. I had six weeks on my new quarter, and forgot to read my Bible yesterday. I don't know whether to try again or not." (Again.) "I've been laid up since last Friday." (Do try to get down!) "I started to Drake University, but played out the first thing, so don't know when I'll get to start again." (If you had had your umbrella it wouldn't have rained on you.) "Did any of the Av. S. members read about the Queen Esther Sunday-school Class of University Place Church? It's a large class of girls—I mean young ladies, and I'm one of 'em." (Must we call you Miss Flossie?) "We lost our teacher Sunday and I very nearly cried when papa came home and told me." (I'd go out and hunt for him.) "He is a student-preacher, and won't be here on Sundays any more. I rather expect to come to the St. Louis Fair, and hope I can afford an Av. S. pin by that time. What shade of blue are we to get to go with old gold?" (The shade you think best goes with it.) "I haven't found out yet how old Maude Kelley is. I imagine her about my age (18). I'm sure they had fun camping out!" (Maude, how old are you?)

New Honor List: Mary Haymaker, Wichita; Helen Ross, Independence, (5th quarter); Ruth Sampsel, Warrensburg (5th quarter); Evelyn Hord, Grayson, Mo.; Lulu Taylor (7th) and Ruth Taylor (5th), Manton, Calif; May Speece, Bucklin, Mo. (4th); Olive Leavitt, Frankfort, S. D. (7th); M. J. O'Dell, Lebanon, Mo. (4th).

Remember, if enough money is not sent me to support the orphan at least one a year, all your money will be returned to you, except what it takes to buy your money-order, which is only three or five cents, somewhere along there; and if you don't send now, and get the thing settled at once, we'll have to drop the subject and give up the idea. I'll give you two more weeks to decide it; it will be decided by your sending your contribution, or by keeping it in your pocket or chatelaine, or wherever you keep it. Every cent you send will go to the orphan, as far as I am concerned, for I want no pay in work like this. Now members of the Av. S., and older ones who read this—consider that the fate of some helpless and homeless little stranger depends upon what you are willing to do; and that religion is like money in this respect: it will do you no good to talk about how nice it is, unless you have some of it yourself.

China," with a foreword by W. P. Bentley, M. A. This is a handsome cloth bound volume with seventeen illustrations, and contains 167 pages. The price is 75 cents.

"This is an interior view of China and of Chinese life. It breathes the spirit of orientalism. It is a thrilling story of a heroic life. Evangelist Shi Kwei Piao, the Chinese story-teller, is a most interesting character, a genius in his way, an orator of native ability, and a shining illustration of the power of the gospel to redeem and purify human life. Mr. Shi was a Chinese story-teller, wandering from village to village, and a victim of the opium habit, who had experienced all the misery and wretchedness of that worst form of slavery. The gospel story touched his heart, aroused his better nature and led to a death-grapple with the opium habit in which, through prayer and struggle and conflict and defeats, he came at last to complete victory and to freedom, and is now a wise, able and consecrated preacher, laboring successfully in connection with our other missionaries in China. His picture, which is the frontispiece of the book, indicates a strong character. Incidental to the story of this remarkable life, there is much of Chinese history, customs and characteristics. The book is illustrated with pen drawings, is handsomely bound in yellow, and is one of the most valuable contributions to our foreign missionary literature. It is the latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and deserves a wide reading from the brethren in this country who wish to know how their brethren in China live and labor, and what is the outlook for their work. The author dedicates his work to 'Dr. W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., from whom I first learned to interpret the story of the Christ.'"

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

"Helps to Faith."

I have read it with pleasure and profit. There are 245 pages, written in the best style of the author, J. H. Garrison, printed in the best art of the Christian Publishing Company. In every way the work is well done. The literary style is very pleasant, and the substance and thought very good. The subject could not be improved upon at the present time. In these days of scientific doubt, when a young man is made to believe that he will never have any credit for intellectuality unless he shall be something more than half an infidel, we need to have our faith strengthened. Without faith no man can please God, or accomplish much good in the world as a director of ethics; and he can do nothing in religious effort without that faith in God and Christ and the Bible which the Scriptures warrant. Only the men of conviction are accomplishing anything for the world. The world has not time to listen to men's doubts. Men who speak in the subjunctive are not needed now. I am glad the writer has written on this subject and written so well.

It is not reasonable that God would leave his creatures in ignorance of their origin, duty and destiny. Man came into the world with instincts which demand a revelation from God. And the manner of revelation found in the Scriptures, all things considered, is the best possible, and just such as we have a right to expect. The substance of the book is what we need: is in every way worthy of God. He would have furnished this to all men, but only a single people were prepared to receive and retain it and give it to the world. Even to that people God had to give it by lessons, which would lead up to the full revelation of God in the Christ. I am pleased with the book and hope it shall have a wide reading. For the world to-day hath need of it. To increase the circulation of the book will be to do much good.

In the Morning.

When you rise in the morning form a resolution to make the day a happy one to a fellow-creature. It is easily done; a left-off garment to the man who needs it, a kind word to the sorrowful, an encouraging expression to the striving, trifles in themselves light as air, will do it, at least for the twenty-four hours; and if you are young, depend upon it, it will tell when you are old; and if you are old, it will send you gently and happily down the stream of human time to eternity. By the most simple arithmetical sum look at the result: You send one person, only one, happily through the day—that is three hundred and sixty-five during the course of a year, and suppose you live only forty years after you commence that kind of medicine, you have made fourteen thousand six hundred human beings happy, at all events for a time. Now, is not this simple? It is too short for a sermon, too homely for ethics, too easily accomplished for you to say, "I would if I could."—Sidney Smith,

Six Important Points.

Six things a boy ought to know:

First—That a quiet voice, courtesy and kind acts are as essential to the part in the world of a gentlemen as of a gentlewoman.

Second—That roughness, blustering and even foolhardiness are not manliness. The most firm and courageous men have usually been the most gentle.

Third—That muscular strength is not health.

Fourth—That a brain crammed only with facts is not necessarily a wise one.

Fifth—That the labor impossible to the boy of fourteen, will be easy to the man of twenty.

Sixth—That the best capital for a boy is not money, but the love of work, simple tastes and a heart loyal to his friends and his God.—Texas Christian Advocate.

The arbitration of the Alaskan boundary dispute has resulted in an almost complete victory for the American contention. The chief point in dispute was the question as to whether a line "ten marine leagues from the sea-coast and parallel with it" shall mean a line ten leagues back from the coast of the main land, or ten leagues from the outer edge of the fringe of islands which border the coast. The former view is that held by the United States and embodied in all of the maps, even the British official maps, until a few years ago. The latter interpretation was invented to give Great Britain a claim upon the Lynn Canal, which is the only approach to Skagway, Dyea and the Klondike region. The arbitration commission, to which the question was submitted, was composed of three American and three British members, two of the latter being Canadians. It was agreed that a verdict signed by four members of the commission should be binding upon both parties. Thus neither party would be called upon to abandon its claim unless one of its own representatives should be convinced of the justice of the other party's contention. The two Canadians held firmly to the theory which would have given Canada a valuable new territory, but Lord Alverstone saw the justice of the American claim. The only qualification of this which appeared in the final verdict was that the Portland canal, at the extreme southern end of the Alaskan panhandle, should belong to Great Britain. The Canadians are said to be greatly wrought up over this decision, which they regard as an indication that the imperial authorities are less concerned than they should be about the protection of Canada's interests. The outcome of the arbitration is a notable triumph for this method of settling disputes. Wars have been fought over less important matters. From our point of view, there was absolutely no shadow of doubt of the justice of our claim, and this, instead of being a reason why we should decline to arbitrate, was the best of all reasons for being willing to submit the matter to the judgment of able and honorable jurists.

In a speech at St. Joseph, Mo., last Saturday night, Joseph W. Folk made his first public statement regarding his attitude toward the Democratic nomination for governor. He is willing to accept it if the party cares to nominate him, or he is willing to support any other good man whom the party may prefer. "The governorship offers tremendous opportunities for the accomplishment of public good," says Mr. Folk. Some of these opportunities have been so long unutilized in this state that they may have grown rusty and dust-covered, but a man like Mr. Folk in the governor's chair would soon have them in good working order. It is gratifying to notice that, in his public address before the representative assembly of his party, he showed not the slightest tendency to cater to the worst element of the party or to bid for the support of any but honorable men who propose to use honorable methods. This sentence from his speech is a guarantee that if he is nominated there will be no compromise campaign: "I do not expect and do not want any boodler's support. As long as God gives me life, whether in public or private station, I propose to fight them and do all in my power to drive them from Missouri. I have no favors to ask of them and no quarter to give; it is unrelenting warfare. I am proud of the fact that they are all my bitter enemies."

A new representative of Colombia, Mr. Arciniegas, has arrived in Washington to assist Dr. Herran (or practically to supercede him) in the negotiation of a new canal treaty. Dr. Herran's fellow-countrymen have conceived the idea that he is too friendly to American interests, and not sufficiently solicitous for the interests of Colombia. The new man proves his loyalty—though perhaps not his discretion—by stating clearly at the outset that Colombia will not consider a proposition which involves the payment of less than $25,000,000 by the United States to that government. If these terms are adhered to, the deal is off unquestionably. There is good reason to believe that Colombia is trying to interest some European power in the canal proposition. The senate committee which recommended the rejection of the recent treaty hinted that, if the United States would not make satisfactory terms, probably some European government could be found which would be glad to do so. Whether or not the United States would permit this, is a question which Colombia, perhaps, has not considered very fully. During the past five years, the Monroe Doctrine has been given a degree of acceptance which it never had before, and it is not likely, in view of this fact, that the United States would permit an alien government to occupy so strategic a position on this continent as the Isthmus of Panama, even though its control might be disguised under the form of a lease.

Some slight disposition has been shown to criticise our state department for not formally protesting against Russia's breach of faith regarding the evacuation of Manchuria. The position of the administration, however, is that, so long as our treaty rights there are respected, whether under Chinese or Russian auspices, we have no ground for formal complaint. As a matter of fact, the United States is not prepared to back up with force any protest against the Russian occupation of Manchuria. Public opinion in this country would not approve of a war on such grounds, and Secretary Hay does not care to risk an empty bluff against a power that is so little likely to be moved by anything else than a display of force. We can use diplomacy for all that it is worth to prevent encroachment by the strong powers upon the territory of the weaker nations. But we cannot extend the Monroe doctrine to Asia or draw the line at which Russian expansion must stop. And yet it is evident that the situation will become more serious if Russia takes definite steps toward the control of Korea. It may not be generally remembered that a treaty was signed twenty-one years ago between the United States and Korea which provided for perpetual peace and friendship between the two governments, and agreed that "if other powers deal unjustly or oppressively with either government, the other will exert its good offices to bring about an amicable arrangement." Under this treaty we could be expected to make a strong diplomatic protest, though we could not be called upon to fight for Korea's independence. As an indication that the Russian policy on the Pacific Coast has not yet been entirely worked out, the Czar has recently appointed a Far East Commission composed of cabinet ministers, whose special duty it shall be to devise plans for the increase of Russian power and prestige in the Orient.

Because the Bulgarians have gained their freedom from Turkey and have been active in stirring up insurrection in Macedonia, there is a natural tendency to regard them as heroic and unselfish allies of their Macedonian neighbors in the cause of liberty. Some of the recent atrocities committed by Bulgarians against not only the Mohammedan but also the Greek Christian inhabitants of Macedonia, make it difficult to hold that view with any degree of conviction. In reality, the population of Macedonia, while containing some elements that are closely akin to the Bulgarians, is still more Greek and Turkish, and the enmity between the Greeks and the Bulgarians, is scarcely less than the hatred which each of these feel toward the Turks. The Greeks in Macedonia look upon the Bulgarian activities as an effort to extend Bulgarian dominion over them. Their resistance to this program explains the massacres which the Bulgarians have been perpetrating among their fellow Christians. "Atlantis," an able paper published in New York in the modern Greek language, is making telling attacks upon the Bulgarians who are, according to its word, "a people notoriously cunning, mendacious and cowardly." The work of the Macedonian Committee, in its insurrectionary campaign for the ostensible purpose of helping Macedonia to throw off the Turkish yoke, is merely "the wily and treacherous Bulgarian masquerading as a philanthropist." There is a religious difference represented by the allegiance of the Greeks to the Orthodox Greek Church and of the Bulgarians to the patriarch whom the Greeks call "the schismatic exarch." In their looting and massacring, the Bulgarians have taken pains to molest no Christians except those of the Orthodox faith. Whether or not the Greeks of Macedonia and of the kingdom of Greece are really of the old Hellenic stock, is a vexed question. Very likely not. But the vehemence of their claim to this honor is only enhanced by the dubiety of the evidence. No people in Europe have a keener race-consciousness and race-pride, and for the Greeks of Macedonia to be told off as Bulgars and Slavs is to their mind the keenest of insults. No solution of the Macedonian problem can be satisfactory to all parties which does not take account of the element of Hellenism in Macedonia.

The inhabitants of New York are not unaccustomed to sensations, but the announcement some months ago that John Alexander Dowie, alias Elijah, had rented Madison Square Garden and would bring on a "restoration host" of three thousand of his devoted followers to spend two weeks in converting New York, aroused a flicker of interest even among the blasé Gothamites. Last week the crusade began. The "restoration host" arrived in full force and have been thoroughly canvassing the city according to a pre-arranged plan, while twice a day Dowie himself has been addressing all comers in Madison Square Garden. Those who were at all familiar with Dowie's peculiar style of oratory were prepared to expect epithet and denunciation, but according to all reports he has been outdoing himself in New York, as if he would drive people into Zion by sheer force of invective and abuse. Usually his vocabulary of vituperation is not only copious but somewhat picturesque and distinctive. But on this occasion he has sacrificed everything to violence. So far it is not apparent that he has succeeded in converting many New Yorkers by insult, and it seems that this much-heralded mission to the metropolis is turning out an even greater failure than his critics expected.

Brevities.

The King and Queen of Italy have just returned from a visit to President Loubet, of France. They were given a warm welcome by the French people.

President Roosevelt has called an extra session of Congress to meet Nov. 9, to consider the Cuban reciprocity question. The Republican leaders confidently assert that no other important matters will be seriously taken up during the extra session. It is hard to see how a general re-opening of the tariff question can be longer postponed, and it might be good politics on the part of the Republicans to take the initiative and to precipitate the discussion at once so that it might be gotten through before the close of the regular session.

Our National Convention.

We use the singular number because the three are one. It is the same people acting in three different organizations, for the accomplishment of one end. It is a trinity of agencies with a unity of personnel, spirit and purpose. The work is one. The three phases of the work are so vitally related that the success of one is the success of all, and the failure of one would be the loss of all. They stand or fall together.

It was a great convention. It was not so large a convention as some we have held, and yet it would have ranked with the very largest of our conventions prior to the Jubilee Convention. The enrollment reached something over three thousand from outside the city. How many failed to enroll is not known. This was a large convention even in numbers—quite large enough for the auditoriums at our disposal. But it was a great convention in other and more vital respects. It was a religious convention, though the time given to purely devotional service was perhaps too limited. Its representative addresses struck high key-notes. If there were an occasional harsh or discordant note it was lost in the chorus. If we should attempt to embody the dominant notes of the convention in a single sentence, we should say, they were: Loyalty to Christ; liberty in Christ; union upon Christ; service for Christ. This statement, made at the closing session of the convention, received the hearty approval of the audience, and may well be taken as our motto for the year to come. These are the very principles which we exist to emphasize.

The convention was great in its enthusiasm and hopefulness. The good reports made by all the missionary secretaries, showing increased receipts in every department of the work, not only created enthusiasm, but great hopefulness for the future. It illustrated what wonderful developments we are justified in expecting in the future. Some large gifts made during the convention helped to swell the tide of enthusiastic hopefulness. Gen. Drake telegraphed a gift of $5,000 for a Bible College in India. F. H. Main, of Detroit, took a $5,000 Named Loan Fund in Church Extension, and a brother, of Detroit, gave $25,000 to the Benevolent Association for an orphan home to be erected at Detroit.

These are more than straws, they are whole bales of hay, showing not only which way the wind is blowing, but something of the strength of the gale. We have come to the day of larger things in giving. This will do more to commend our work to the favorable consideration of this age than many tomes of theology. "What do ye more than others?" the Master is still asking of those who claim to be his disciples.

As evidence of a growing life among us, some new agencies were devised for giving expression to this life. A board of evangelization, consisting of nine members, was appointed, with headquarters at Des Moines to organize a more systematic campaign of evangelization. It is to have a secretary to present its claims, and it is expected that liberal sums will be contributed by men of means to send evangelists to hold meetings in needy places and to enter new fields with the old gospel. Tracts and other cheap forms of literature will also be provided by this board for use in evangelistic work. With the generalship of Brother Breeden to manage this campaign, we may confidently expect large results in the way of additions and new churches. Another forward step was the organization by the Sunday-school workers from the various states present, of a Sunday-school board to employ a national Sunday-school superintendent, and to do whatever else it can to promote greater efficiency in Sunday-school work. The Sunday-school organizations of the different states will provide whatever funds may be required by this forward movement.

The American Christian Education Society, which held its annual meeting at Des Moines during our last congress, reported action, outlined its policy, announced its new corresponding secretary, Harry G. Hill, of Omaha, who has agreed to undertake the important work of representing our general educational interests before the brotherhood. The Education Society has fixed upon the third Lord's day in January as interfering least with our other established days, and promising the best results for our colleges. The new secretary and the new day will do much to bring the churches into closer touch with our institutions of learning and thereby quicken every general interest among us, which, in the last analysis, root themselves in an educated and trained ministry. Every organization among us that does not lend what help it can to our colleges is standing in its own light.

A most encouraging report of progress was made by the centennial committee, showing that churches, colleges, missionary societies and our benevolences had made important strides towards carrying out the recommendations adopted a year ago, looking to definite enlargement by the year 1909. The report of the committee on our World's Fair exhibit, recommended that since no building has been provided for a religious exhibit by the World's Fair authorities, and no room has been arranged for in any of the other buildings for such purpose, we undertake to erect a suitable building of our own, reproducing some one of our historic structures, in enlarged form, as Alexander Campbell's study at Bethany, or the old Cane Ridge Church at Cane Ridge, Ky., to serve as a sort of rallying center for our brethren visiting the Fair, and in which there may be exhibited pictures of historic buildings, places and men, connected with our movement, as also pictures of our colleges, leading churches, etc., together with such tracts, pamphlets, charts, papers, books, etc., as will set forth the purposes, principles and achievements of the reformation of the nineteenth century. This met with enthusiastic approval, and nearly $1,500 was subscribed in about fifteen minutes. This is a splendid beginning. The sum should be swelled to at least $5,000 to cover cost of building and exhibit.

The alumni of the various colleges held reunions, and gave banquets, and renewed the old ties. The state secretaries had a banquet and talked over their mutual problems, and rejoiced together over the signs, everywhere apparent, of increased interest in state missions. These men are pillars in our temple of missions, and their work is better appreciated now than it has been in the past. The Anti-Mormon Society held a meeting and had addresses from various speakers. But we can not enumerate all the special meetings held between regular sessions of the convention.

One of the pleasantest of these was a dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Meier to the officers and some of the friends of the Benevolent Association.

The spirit of harmony prevailed throughout all the sessions of the convention. Better still, the spirit of consecration to Christ's work seemed to dominate both speakers and hearers. There were great inspirational addresses that made us feel deeply the greatness of life and its possibilities. There were strong, convincing addresses that informed the reason and convinced the judgment. There were addresses that were specially adapted to special subjects, that shed light upon them. The closing address by Mark Collis, was a fitting theme, "Our High Calling in Christ Jesus," fittingly treated, humbling us, and making us feel that what we have done is only a tithe of what we ought to do.

When "God be with you till we meet again," was sung by the great audience which remained to the close, and the benediction had been pronounced, we all turned our steps away feeling that this convention had marked and had helped to make an era of larger things wrought by God through us for the triumph of his kingdom.

National Bible-School Organization.

Among the important movements inaugurated at the Detroit Convention was the organization of a national Bible-school Association. For many years this has been in the minds of some of our foremost Bible-school workers. It has recently been the subject of approving comment in our religious papers. A mass meeting was held at Detroit to effect an organization and the attendance was evidence of the general interest in the project.

Special emphasis was laid upon the educational possibilities of our Bible-schools and upon the need of the wisest counsel and leadership to realize these possibilities. It was believed that the office of national Bible-school superintendent is too important to be filled without the most mature deliberation, and that the man chosen for this important work should be pre-eminently a Bible teacher and one qualified, by his scholarly and executive abilities, to take the lead in such activities as the training of teachers and the arrangement of courses of study.

After careful consideration the following resolutions were adopted to serve as a basis for the organization:

1. A Board of Managers consisting of twenty-one well-known Bible-school workers of the various states and territories of the United States and the Dominion of Canada shall be selected by this conference and shall have power:

To elect from its own number its president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer;

To recommend to a general meeting of the Bible-school workers of this land to be held at the time of our next general convention in the city of St. Louis in 1904, any change or modification of plans for the advancement of Bible-school work that may be deemed wise and expedient;

To select and employ one or more of the foremost Bible-school workers of our country, and to devise ways and means for their support.

2. An Executive Committee is hereby created to be composed of the representatives selected from the central states as follows: Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Iowa. Officers of the Board of Managers chosen from the states above named shall represent their respective states on the Executive Committee.

Officers elected who are not residents of the central states shall be members of the Executive Committee ex-officio.

3. Meetings of the Executive Committee shall be held quarterly for the transaction of business at such central points as may be selected, but no action shall be binding unless approved either by personal vote or in writing by a majority of the Board of Managers.

4. The secretary of this meeting is hereby authorized to secure the votes of the various members of the Board of Managers for the first officers of this co-operation, and is instructed to cast the ballot for those having a majority vote for the officers of the committee.

5. The Board of Managers shall have power to fill all vacancies in the board occasioned by resignation or otherwise.

The following twenty-one brethren were chosen as the first Board of Managers: W. H. McClain, T. J. Legg, A. C. Roach, R. M. Hopkins, H. F. Davis, H. C. Rash, L. A. Hussing, G. P. Coler, J. H. Douthitt, D. N. Wetzell, B. A. Jenkins, J. H. Bryan, J. H. Hardin, W. E. Garrison, P. Y. Pendleton, E. J. Teagarden, E. B. Scofield, C. A. Kleeberger, B. H. Hayden, J. P. Lichtenberger, Chas. M. Fillmore.

A Forward Step for Education.

The announcement of the day agreed upon for observance by all our churches as Education Day and the introduction of the man who has been selected for Educational Secretary, were the important features of the period occupied by the American Christian Education Society, at the Detroit convention. The day is the third Lord's Day in January. The man is Harry G. Hill, of Omaha.

It has long been felt that education is the neglected interest among the Disciples of Christ and it has been realized that the brotherhood at large could not be made to feel its responsibility for the support of our colleges until the educational appeal is unified and systematized. To do this is the purpose of the Education Society. At the last meeting of the society, which was held in Des Moines, in connection with the congress, the directors were authorized to select a day which all of our churches should be asked to observe as Education Day, and to put into the field a secretary who should be charged with the care of our common educational interests. In consultation with the executives of all of our colleges, this has been done. The colleges are in hearty agreement regarding both the day and the man. The introduction of Brother Harry G. Hill to the convention at Detroit as the newly appointed secretary, was received with enthusiasm. He is already widely and favorably known, and we bespeak for him a cordial reception wherever he may come in the prosecution of his work. He will enter upon his duties at once and will endeavor to enlist as many churches as possible for the observance of Education Day, the third Lord's day in January.

In asking the churches to make offerings for education on this day, they are to be asked also to specify to what institution they wish their offerings to go. If no preference is expressed contributions will go into the general fund of the Education Society. The presidents of Drake, Hiram, Canton and Kentucky Universities addressed the convention briefly in hearty approval of this plan, and others would have done so but for lack of time. It is hoped that the day will be used as an occasion not only for taking an offering but for pointing out to young men and women the desirability of going to college, setting forth the advantages of our own schools and laying upon properly qualified young men the duty of studying for the ministry. More than one hundred pastors have already promised to observe the day.

Editor's Easy Chair.

With all the joy of Christian fellowship in our great national gatherings there is a dash of bitterness and disappointment. In the first place there are the absent ones, whose faces we were wont to see in these annual assemblies. Some have joined the general assembly and church of the first born in heaven, and others are hindered by sickness or other causes from meeting with their brethren. And then how little time we have to sit down and talk with those whom we do meet, even with those whose fellowship is very precious to us! A handshake, a word of greeting, and we pass on to greet others, and we promise ourselves a few leisure moments later on, but they never come. We see just enough of our friends to whet our appetite for more communion with them, but the imperative demand on one's time, if he be conscientious about attendance on the sessions of the convention, compels him to forego the pleasure of much social enjoyment aside from what he gets in the few brief hours of interval between sessions, and this is often taken up with committee work, or other duty connected with the convention. The future life, we have no doubt, will be one of activity, but we are sure there will be time for getting acquainted with each other, and for old friends to sit down together somewhere on the banks of the river of life, and talk to their heart's content.

Another occasion, if not of dissatisfaction at least of the lack of the fullest satisfaction, in our conventions, is the brief time allotted to the purely devotional part of the services. It seems much more difficult in a large body than in a small one to secure the requisite time and quietness so essential to a really devotional service. There is the constant temptation, in all our great undertakings, to rely too much on the outward conditions of success, such as organization, money, great speeches, etc., and too little upon the right condition of our hearts and minds, so that God's power may work through us for the accomplishment of his purposes. It was said by some one at the convention that "The way to get money is to go after it." This, in a sense, of course, is true. But to go after it directly is often the worst way to get money. To get both men and means for the kingdom of God, the best way is to get hold of the hearts of the people and fill them with the great motives of the gospel. When people become religious they will give liberally for religious ends, but not otherwise. In spiritual success the supreme condition is to work with God, and to have the consciousness of his presence and co-operation. If we could have an hour in the midst of the business sessions of our conventions, in which all the people could be as still and reverent as during the communion hour, in which all hearts could be humbled in God's presence and earnest petitions be made for his power and guidance, there would be no more profitable hour in the whole convention in its bearing on all our interests and enterprises. How hard it is to learn the lesson so clearly seen by one of old: "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." It is as true to-day as it was in the olden time, and must ever remain true in relation to the things of the kingdom of God.

But whoever attends one of our conventions, whether state or national, cannot fail to perceive, if his experience enables him to compare the present with the past, that there has been great growth during the past quarter of a century in the spiritual and devotional life of our people. One of the most delightful hours we spent during the Detroit convention was with a company of our younger preachers, numbering perhaps a score or more, in a season of prayer and religious meditation. It was on Sunday night, after all the services of the day were ended, in one of the hotels, in a room set apart for the purpose, that we met with these young ministers, at their request, to lead them in a meditation concerning the deeper things of the spiritual life. We have no right nor desire to disclose the sacred intimacies of that hour, in which heart spoke to heart of deep yearnings for a larger knowledge of God and a larger measure of his Spirit, to fit them for the best service to their fellowmen. No fact has been more gratifying to us than this tendency on the part of a great number of our educated young men in the ministry and in our colleges, to seek after and obtain new and deeper experiences of the soul with the divine. That this hungering and thirsting after righteousness shall receive the fulfillment of Christ's promise cannot be doubted, and it is the prophecy of greater things and of a more triumphant day for the cause we love. This is no fanaticism or mysticism, but a quiet, rational and scriptural reaching out of the mind and the heart after a truer realization of the rich promises of God to those who seek his counsel and his power in order to do his will. Our holy cause will be safe under the leadership of men who seek to be led of God, to be filled with his Spirit, and to have closer fellowship with Christ in carrying out his divine program for the regeneration of the world. God bless our young men in the ministry, and fit them for the great duties and responsibilities of their sacred calling in the years that are before them!

One comes away from one of these great national gatherings with a deepened impression of the wonderful possibilities of the youngest of the great Protestant reformations which have successively sought to restore more fully the religion of Jesus Christ. The religious position, when stated in the terms of its wisest promoters, would seem impregnable, and having as special adaptation to the needs of the age in which we live. With an uplifted Christ, filled with all the fullness of God, and possessing all authority in heaven and on earth, as our only Leader, an inspired book, filled with the religious experiences, sacred revelations and marvelous history of God's people in ages past, as our only rule of faith and practice, pleading for the unity of Christ's followers, as he himself pleaded in that great intercessory prayer, free, and unshackled by the creeds and traditions of the past, and ready to receive all God's truth as it may be revealed to us in our enlarging knowledge and experience, fired with an evangelistic zeal to win a lost world to Christ, with boundless energy, enthusiasm, and hopefulness, what may not such a people accomplish for God and humanity, if all this knowledge, advantage of position, past achievement, present power, be consecrated to God, and if we, in humility and modesty, with courage and with faith, seek only to carry out the high purposes of God on earth? We have not yet dreamed of the wonderful things which God can and will work through us if we will only work with him, laying aside all unbelief or distrust, all our opinionativeness, all self-seeking, all undue emphasis of things non-essential and give ourselves, unitedly and wholly, to carrying forward the great work to which, in God's providence, we have been called. Such conventions as that held at Detroit help us on to the realization of this high ideal.

Convention Notes.

It was no small undertaking for a single church in a large city to invite one of our national conventions to be its guest and undertake to provide entertainment for them. And yet the Central Christian Church, of Detroit, did this successfully, with the assistance of several individual members of the Plum Street Christian Church, which, as an organization, declined to share in this hospitality to their brethren. It is generally believed by the brethren in Detroit that the convention will result in strengthening our cause locally and in removing some false impressions concerning the religious movement which it represents. Judging from the reports in the local press there were several of these that needed removing.

Among the venerable members of the convention were several octogenarians. Among these whom we now recall were Eld. Lathrop Cooley, of Cleveland, Brother Teachout, of the same city, Sister Burns, of St. Louis, with her husband, John Burns, who, if he has not passed four score, is nearing the line. There was also Prof. C. L. Loos, who has quit growing old, and many other men with hoary heads who added dignity to the assembly.

One of the features which always adds to the interest of our conventions is the presence of foreign missionaries, who, fresh from their distant fields of labor, speak out of their personal experience, and always bring us words of cheer. We are sure we voice the sentiment of those who attend these conventions in saying that we hope that in future programs these missionaries may be given more time in which to speak of the wonderful works of God as they have seen them in the foreign fields. The same thing might be said of the representatives of the Home Missionary Society. Some of the best short speeches made in the convention were the two, three and four-minute talks of these earnest men who represent the brotherhood out on "the firing line."

The Sunday services were, as usual, a great feature of the convention. It is an opportunity which a great many people enjoy of hearing some distinguished brother, whom they have never had the privilege of hearing before, and it is an opportunity for the preachers who are assigned pulpits to present the gospel in a way that will not only commend it to a large public who know little of us, but to commend the people with whom they are connected, as well, by the character of their message. And then it furnishes the opportunity for the great communion service which is always highly appreciated. It was necessary this year to occupy three buildings, all of which we understand were well filled. The service at the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church, where the regular sessions of the convention were held, was literally packed full on Sunday afternoon at three, and we have never witnessed a more fitting and tender observance of the Lord's Supper. The brief address by President B. A. Jenkins was exceedingly appropriate, preparing all hearts for the tender memorial institution. The order and arrangement for serving the large multitude under the management of the pastor of the Central Church, C. J. Tanner, were perfect, and were carried out without the slightest hitch or confusion. The remarks of the venerable Lathrop Cooley, relating how he sat at the communion table with Thomas and Alexander Campbell, Walter Scott, John Smith, the Haydens and other historic men of the past, and how this would perhaps be the last time he would enjoy such privileges with his brethren, touched and tendered all hearts. He was assisted by Brothers T. B. Knowles, J. H. Smart and W. S. Dickinson in the administration of the ordinance. At the close of this service when Mrs. J. M. Philputt had lifted all our hearts heavenward by one of her sweet solos, "The Man of Galilee," an offering was called for, as has been the custom, for many years, for the benefit of our aged and needy ministers through the Ministerial Relief Fund, to which there was a generous response amounting to nearly $500, which was swelled by contributions from the other meetings to about $650.

One of the features of the closing session of the convention was the introduction of the pastor of the church that entertained us and the chairman of the various local committees, several of whom spoke a few words in response, saying how glad they had been to serve the convention. Some of the most faithful of these committee-men were members of the Plum Street Church, and none seemed to enjoy the convention more than they. Bro. Philip Gray, who served on the music committee, made his response in a solo.

The foreign society has raised the motto, a quarter of a million dollars for foreign missions next year, that is, by the time of the St. Louis conventions. Rains says we will raise it, and he says his strong point is prophecy. If it is not realized, he and McLean will not be to blame for it. As we are not a prophet of prediction, we only guess the amount will be realized. Following are the officers elected for that society for the coming year: President, A. McLean, Cincinnati; vice-presidents, W. S. Dickinson, Cincinnati; B. C. Deweese, Lexington, Ky.; I. J. Spencer, Lexington; J. N. Green, Cincinnati; George A. Miller, Lexington; recording secretary, S. M. Jefferson, Covington, Ky.; treasurer, S. M. Cooper, Cincinnati; corresponding secretary, F. M. Rains, Cincinnati; auditor, Russell Errett, Cincinnati; medical examiner, Dr. P. T. Kilgour, Cincinnati.

W. F. Richardson, of Missouri, convulsed the convention with his description of the chain letter and autograph quilt devices for extracting money for church building purposes, in his splendid address on Church Extension, which came as a substitute for all

The Church and the Modern Spirit

Address of the President of the American Christian Missionary Society delivered at Detroit before the General Convention.

By Allan B. Philputt

Four score years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a religious movement which has come to considerable acceptance in a large portion of the United States and after nearly three generations is still full of vigor. It has found some slight lodgment in Great Britain, Norway and Denmark, while missionaries have planted it here and there among non-Christian peoples. Those enrolled under our banner are said to number a million and a quarter. Through our Sunday-schools, colleges and universities, Bible chairs at other seats of secular learning, hospitals, religious papers, books and tracts, we are in influential touch with thousands more.

While it is true that large areas of territory, including most of the great cities and centers of culture, are still untouched or scantily influenced by us, it is also true that our growth has been unparalleled in modern religious history. When we consider the general preoccupation of people with other than religious things, their notable indifference to what seem to them the refinements of ecclesiastical dispute, this record is indeed significant. A yet more remarkable thing is that the greatest progress has been made in the last few decades when modern science and the general trend of thought has, to say the least, not been helpful to faith—decades which have been marked in other religious bodies by very slight growth, if not by actual decline.

This paper would attempt no analysis of the religious situation as to the comparative progress of different bodies, however, nor draw hasty conclusions as to the future. Any jubilation over, or craving for, mere denominational victory is in bad taste and is here and now disavowed.

We cannot long survive any general catastrophe to faith, or maintain our advance when all others are failing. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, literal or ecclesiastical, but against principalities and powers, against spiritual wickedness in high places. We all have so much in common that one cannot be taken and another left.

'Tis true we come to our brethren of other folds with a message, as we believe, from God. We come with a protest against accepting the present divided condition of the church as final, with a protest against unscriptural teachings and practices, which have from of old been subversive of the unity of the church, with a protest against denominational pride and self-content while the world lies in darkness and the Son of man sees not of the travail of his soul. We plead for unity upon the New Testament foundation, for the restoration of the primitive apostolic church in its teachings, its ordinances and its life. We believe that a right knowledge of the word of God will bring all to such a basis of fellowship as would immensely curtail the waste of money, energy and effectiveness, all too apparent in the present condition of Protestant Christianity. Our dream is not of one great organic body, full of wealth and power, perhaps tyranny, giving dignity and eclat to its potentates, bishops and ministry, but of a church of simple faith and form united on the essentials of the gospel and every man free in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made him free. We look for a people not held in mechanical oneness by the same opinions or even forms of worship, but who know the Lord and who feel that all are one in him—a great, united Christendom wearing no name but that which is above every other, and carrying no message but that Jesus hath died for our sins, that he was buried, and that he rose again the third day, according to the Scriptures, and that he ever liveth to make intercession for us, that God hath given him to be head over all things to the church, which is his body, the fullness that filleth all in all.

This is our point of view and to some extent it does challenge the position and spirit of our religious neighbors, for it is an indictment against a divided Christendom and a perverted teaching of Christian doctrine. But in this we should not be accused of presumption, or of taking to ourselves superior wisdom. The evils to which we call attention are obvious, and are generally acknowledged. The so-called "peculiarities" of our teaching are generally conceded to be scriptural, but by many are deemed of secondary importance as against traditional beliefs and well established customs.

The remedy which we propose for existing evils, by reason of its very simplicity, seems, to not a few, insufficient and impractical. To say that all should return to the New Testament as the only rule and guide is easy enough; to get the world to do it, is quite another thing. Still we feel that this is right, it is an ideal to work for, a norm to govern us in our action. We appreciate the difficulties in the way and are looking for no sudden change in historic creeds. The change that is now going on is perhaps rapid enough, and the direction of the current is of more importance to us than the rate at which it is going.

Before attempting to outline what we call 'the Modern Spirit, let us glance briefly at the spirit and genius of our own movement. Those who feel that they possess some great truth important to the world are ever in a hurry. Out of this fact often comes partialness of vision, and impatience of heart. To be the bearer of light to one's generation, to exercise, meanwhile, forbearance and sweet reasonableness, and just keep on bearing that testimony, is a difficult and high task. We must not be surprised at some symptoms of crystallization, some tendency of great principles to get fashioned and hardened in the smaller moulds of sectarian doctrine.

If we have shown a disposition at times to reverse the formula of the prophet, by beating our plowshares into swords and our pruning hooks into spears, thus exchanging the nurture and patience of husbandry for the haste and decisiveness of war, it has been but the outcropping of natural and perhaps salutary forces.

All movements need conservative and definitive influences. If any have been distressed at what is called the narrowness of the church on questions which for the time became acute, let me say to you, that others have had the same feeling, but have lived to see good come out of conflict and a truer view obtained because of obstructive influences. Time and growth tend to correct all things. Opposition to what is right finally melts away. Radical and conservative tendencies belong to all forces and in their resultant, we get what is best.

Narrowness has not been an unmixed evil. What it has lost in largeness of view, it has gained in definiteness of statement. It has knit up the edges of our fellowship and held tens of thousands in the ranks who would not have grasped with enthusiasm, nor contended with zest for those broader generalizations so precious to the sons of light.

The main thing is to recognize, above the intermittent conflicts of opinion, the essential oneness of our brotherhood. We have grown too large and too generous to be other than brethren. And I would speak, if I might, to all those dissatisfied fellow-Christians who have misgivings because of the progressive tendencies of our day. It is not safe to question the motives or disparage the faith of those who may challenge accepted teaching. Our fathers challenged it and shall we forget the pit whence we were digged? The interrogation point will always be used by a people who think for themselves. Let all things be tested by argument and the word of truth. Our movement should never lose the generous, open-mindedness with which it started, nor that Christ-centered faith which amid all the shifting discussions of doctrine and criticism will hold us true to the heart of the gospel.

After eighty years of history we are still a united people. Other great re-religious orbs have thrown off lesser bodies until we have I know not how many Methodist sects, Presbyterian and Baptist communicants, Reformed Episcopalians and Episcopalians that disavow any such qualification, Lutheran Synods not a few, while strange mystic sects fairly swarm in certain parts of our country coming from, the Lord knows where, but the Disciples are one. Some wandering stars, mayhap, have now and then shot forth to darkle in a trackless void, and some congregations, under a misapprehension as to the motives and tendencies of their brethren, have withheld sympathy and co-operation in the organized benevolence of the church, but in the fundamentals of teaching they are one with us. The clouds are passing away and the day of great unity and power and giving has almost come.

Where will you find such resiliency, such rapid recovery from doctrinal aberrations, such getting together after a storm of fratricidal strife, such moving up to advanced ground when duty and the light of truth have shown the way? All the while our zeal for souls has kept us in the forefront of progress, for the more we argue the more we grow and the more we give. If two brethren have a theological dispute or a tilt as to methods and policies, each tries to outdo the other by holding a bigger protracted meeting or raising a great missionary collection. We make the welfare and progress of the church the test of all our opinions. What hurts the church is heretical, what advances it is orthodox. Our religious journals—the most vigorous, by the way, to be found anywhere—not to be outdone in good works, see to it that editorial combats shall not synchronize with any falling off in the subscription lists, thus insuring an ever increasing distribution of religious literature, and at the same time clinching the interest of their readers by that most certain of all methods—the appeal to the innate universal and eternal love of debate. Where in fact will you find such loyalty to the cause, such testing of all theories by their effect upon the church as among our people.

It is safe, I think, to predict, after all these years of history, that no question which is likely to arise and no discussion of differences ensuing therefrom, will do other than keep the stream of our progress fresh and wholesome.

Thus we stand as nearly united in opinion and method as is compatible with safety, facing the modern spirit.

We are free from creedal bondage and the traditions of a mediæval theology. Lacking in many things enjoyed by our religious neighbors, lacking in historic dignity and renown, in well wrought out and impressive forms of worship, in magnificent temples, in a strong influence at the great centers of wealth, and with a ministry not uniformly trained in the highest Biblical scholarship and cognate disciplines, we yet have more than they all in our religious position and point of view, and in the devotion with which we uphold it.

We have a clear perception of Christ and his church of the unity of believers in Him, of the plan of salvation, of the openness and naturalness of Christian character. These things stand out more clearly, it seems to me as one listens to the champions of that fading, though very assertive type of evangelism so much in evidence at summer assemblies, and inter-denominational conventions.

Though times have changed and the issues have shifted somewhat, we stand to-day for what our fathers stood, and like them we await always any new light that may break from God's word. New occasions teach new duties, but loyalty to Jesus Christ and His gospel can never be uncouth.

We have a ministry the most eager in its work and the least abashed by its limitations of any on the face of the earth. Few of them are place-seekers; they are soul seekers, going forth oft with little of this world's reward, but with hearts of gold to do battle for the right. They are men who speak the truth and seldom court alliance with the show and pretense of passing fads. They love the best things and lead clean lives. They stand firm and true in the liberty of Jesus Christ.

And now what shall we say of that tolerant, elusive, virile something denominated the Modern Spirit. What is it and where withal shall it be described?

Is it true as Tolstoy said the other day that America has lost her youth, that her teeth are falling out and that senility has set in? That we have become materialists, are governed by the maxims of a low prudence and in general are going to the bad?

It may seem so to one looking on from afar. The revulsion of feeling against the negro, the prevalence of mobs, and the defense of lynching by some governors, preachers and others who ought to know better, our apparent worship of Mammon and indifference to the culture of the spirit, constitute unfavorable symptoms of national life. But a truer vision reveals much beside, and the eye of faith discerns, even in these reactionary conditions, those negative forces which will help us to see the need of a deeper, stronger moral life.

In these modern times the church has had a foe of no mean parts, and yet but for undue suspicions and hasty conclusions this foe would have been a friend. I refer to the scientific temper of the age. It is an old story now, but a regrettable haste to defend the Bible on the one hand and to break down religious dogma on the other by men who understand neither science or Christianity in their full import, has greatly confused the people. The warfare has been uncalled for. We should all be lovers of truth. Ignorance and error never solved anything or warded off any calamity. Truth is equally precious to every one. Science has accused the church of placing an embargo on free investigation. The church has accused science of proclaiming unproved hypothesis with all the assurance of demonstration, and of vaunting an agnostic spirit. There is some truth in both. The church of a former day made the mistake of challenging the method of science, a thing which cannot be challenged. A conclusion may be right or wrong, but investigation and deduction are as natural to the human mind as breathing to the lungs or movement to the blood. It is the limitations of science and even of the scientific method that theologians should have insisted upon, and that science should have acknowledged.

Some decades ago it was claimed that evolution would thoroughly furnish us unto all good works. It was to be not only a working hypothesis for science, but was to be a satisfactory religious philosophy and a complete answer to all questions and longings springing out of the soul of man. In this, evolution has not made good. It promised much, it performed little. A great blank is left. Christianity fills that blank. The subsidence of opposition to the church with its heavenly mandates is noticeable. The church will derive no little advantage from the scientific temper if she prove wise enough to use it. The disposition to rely upon tradition and superstition through the centuries has been all too palpable. From these leading strings the modern spirit is gradually compelling a severance. The church ought to be in the forefront of those influences which make for the guidance and culture of the race. Skepticism, whether of the untaught people or of the learned scholars, is marked by black despair. It suggests no substitute for the religion it discredits and seeks to destroy. It rejects not this or that doctrine, but the whole body of Christian faith. It leaves man's religious nature unprovided for and hungry, thus tending always to defeat itself. The church has a strong ally and perpetual advantage in human nature itself, for man is incurably religious. We should be lovers of truth. As another has said, "There should be no lines of orthodoxy inside the lines of truth—no foolish talk of holding the outworks as long as we can, and then retreating to the citadel." To try to make others believe what we ourselves question is not only untactful, it is dishonest. By no means should the church place herself in an attitude of hostility to the scientific temper; yea, rather let her be the patron of science and all learning. It is ever her duty, though, to point out the limitations of scientific knowledge and show how the fair throne of faith

Christian Woman's Board of Missions.

To one who was with the beginnings of our Christian Woman's Board of Missions twenty-nine years ago, and who contrasts the little meeting at Cincinnati with the great gathering at Detroit, the progress made is indeed wonderful, and the word of the Psalmist realized, "The Lord gave the word; great was the number of women that published it." In October, 1874, my wife and I attended our first general convention and were present at the birth of this organization. It was a day of small things among us in the missionary cause, but with the opening of the woman's work came a new era, and how blessed has been the growth! The Detroit Convention has been the climax.

Over two thousand delegates came up to this feast. It opened in the splendid First Baptist Church with an immense throng of loyal, enthusiastic spirits from all over the land. Mrs. N. E. Atkinson makes a splendid presiding officer, and her voice could be heard clearly in every part of the great auditorium. In fact convention goes must observe a marked improvement in all our women who address these large assemblies in the matter of making themselves heard, and this adds much every way to the interest of these meetings. The president's address was a very practical one. "We boast," she said, "of more than 600,000 women as members of the Christian Church, yet less than 4,000 have fellowship with our board." What are the 560,000 doing? Much every way, no doubt, but why should not every woman have part in this work of organizing the little for the bringing in of the kingdom in all lands?

Mrs. Fannie Richardson Thompson opened the convention. Miss Mattie Burgess read the secretary's report in place of Mrs. Moses, who, greatly to the regret of all, could not be present. The year has been the most successful in the history of the board. The total receipts have been $165,588.50; the expenditures, $149,247. Of this sum, according to the report of Miss Judson, the treasurer, $37,000 went for work in India, $7,696 for Mexico, $3,384 for Porto Rico, $7,325 for Jamaica, and $93,547 for the United States.

Miss Mattie Pounds, superintendent of young people's work, showed a decided advance in all departments. The receipts were $26,478.17. Virginia was the banner state in this work and Paris, Ky., the banner church. Miss Annie Lackey, of India, made an appropriate address on the work of the children for the children. W. M. Forrest, for three years instructor in the English Bible in Calcutta, gave an instructive and comprehensive review of our possessions in India. It was a ringing appeal to the church of God to meet the pressing need of India's millions.

One of the interesting features was the introduction of missionaries. It always thrills any people to see the regiment marching home after great battles and noble victories. Something of the same stirring emotion fills us to look into the faces of these workers that come in from "the firing line" of the church in its great conflict with idolatry and ignorance and sin. Ten of these missionaries of the woman's board were present and were received with enthusiasm, among them Prof. F. C. Button, whose work is in the mountains of Kentucky, and two of his "mountain girls," Miss Hoffman and Miss Daniel. G. D. Purdy and wife told of the great loss in Jamaica and the suffering brought by the storm of Aug. 9, 10. Other missionaries were Miss Lackey and Miss Clawson, Dr. Olivia Baldwin and Dr. Ada McNeil, of India.

Mrs. Jessie Brown Pounds was heard with deep interest. Her caustic treatment of the American society woman was especially enjoyed. "An example in compound fractions" she characterized her, living in "an atmosphere of vulgar display and competition of freak ideas for entertaining."

"Nerves seem to be the prevailing disease of the American woman of today. What she needs is less courses for dinner, less bric-a-brac to dust and a life of greater simplicity, which will lead our women to become home-makers. We are now plunged into a splendid barbarity which we call civilization."

"Man is not a thoroughly social being, but his wife is. She goes joyously into the social whirl, which becomes more and more a matter of vulgar display and ostentation until the world is now beginning to cry out against it. She is absorbed in this 'Simon-says-thumbs-up' game of society."

"This attitude has developed an artificial habit of living that has caused many women to become wage earners, that she and the family may 'keep up appearances.' It is far better to have the girls at home with less of this vulgar display than to have them enter into the cheap competition of business life. Let the women who go into business life as a temporary makeshift keep out of it, so the men may be better paid for their work."

"What we need is a readjustment of life at this point. More simplicity is what is needed, and a unity of purpose for our American women with the great purposes of Jesus Christ. Such an adjustment will settle all of the little things of life, and lead us on to greater and better things and a life that is worth the living."

The report from Mexico was one of the most cheering of the convention.

From twelve members at Monterey two years ago a church of 63 and a school of 450 is in itself an enduring monument to the lamented A. G. Alderman. The committee on this field, as on all other fields, urged enlargement. C. C. Smith made an effective appeal for the needy churches in Jamaica, and an offering of over $200 was realized. "Faithfulness, fruitfulness, fullness!" was given as the watchword for the coming year. The crowning exercise of this twenty-ninth annual meeting was Mrs. Louise Kelley's closing address. It was a fitting word in every way and a trumpet note of joy, admonition and prophecy that should be heard by all our elect women in every congregation of the saints. The great congregation was deeply impressed.

The woman's convention gave a magnificent momentum to the series of assemblies. No later sessions could go beyond it. It was beautifully planned, and the spirit and eloquence and vigorous good sense and elevated religious tone of it all prepared all hearts for the good things to follow on the Lord's day—the crowning day—and the Home and Foreign Society meetings. One specially attractive thing about it was the music. The parts taken by Mrs. Princess Long, Mrs. Powell and Mrs. Philpott and the Natt sisters deserve special mention.

The old officers were all re-elected. Another thing about this meeting was the excellent order. People came to hear and heard. My wife, who is an old convention goer, and was with this movement at the start—though quite a girl then—says it was the very best.

One could not fail to notice the women spoke well and knew how to quit when they were through. The best short speeches of any of the conventions were by the women. "What women these Christians have!" Libanus well said. F. D. POWER.

The Foreign Christian Missionary Society.

The sessions of the three missionary societies at Detroit were remarkable for their record of achievements. The Foreign Christian Missionary Society passed the $200,000 mark by a broad margin. The American Christian Missionary Society was well over the $100,000 which it set out to raise. The Christian Woman's Board of Missions reached the goal of its desires for the year as regards increased circulation for the Tidings, and showed receipts amounting to the splendid total of over $147,000. These figures, together with an even more remarkable showing of the Benevolent Association, which received over $70,000 during the past year and announced during the convention an additional gift of $25,000 just received from a member of the church in Detroit, indicate that however far short we may still fall from doing our whole duty toward these enterprises, we are at least growing in the grace of giving.

No one could attend the session of the Foreign Society and hear the reports of the missionaries concerning their own work without gaining an even larger conception of the achievements in the foreign field than would be conveyed by the mere amount of money expended. However eloquent may be the addresses about missions, and however impassioned and convincing may be the appeals of those charged with the care of these interests involved, they cannot equal, in point of effectiveness, the words of the missionaries themselves. The addresses of W. P. Bentley, of Shanghai, Miss Bertha Clawson, of Osaka, Japan, Miss Mary Kelly, of Nankin, and Frank Garrett, of Nankin, were all too short. It is to be hoped that at future conventions more time can be allowed for these addresses by the missionaries.

Miss Clawson said that it is sometimes urged as an objection to missions that the missionaries live in luxury and lead a life which is in all respects enviable. By way of reply she told of the old negro who, in slave days, ran away from his master. When one of his master's friends pointed out the unreasonableness of such conduct and asked if he did not have a good home and plenty to eat and wear, he replied, "Yessah, but de situation wid all its advantages am open to you."

Frank Garrett said he did not anticipate that the Disciples of Christ would kill themselves in giving to foreign missions; but if they did, for the one million that die here, four hundred million Chinese Christians would arise to declare that "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

Mrs. Garst, whom we are always glad to see presented among the missionaries, told of overhearing a conversation at one of the convention book-stands. Some one asked a preacher if he was interested in missions. He answered, "No," and then asked the clerk to show him a copy of "Reconstruction in Theology." He certainly needed reconstruction, but it will have to be more than theological to meet the requirements of his case.

The missionary addresses dealing with the general principles of missions were of a very high order, and G. L. Wharton's evening address on "My Return to India" made an impression which will not be forgotten by any one who heard it.

One splendid feature of the missionary growth of the year is the increased number of Living Link churches. There are now thirty-two congregations, each supporting its own missionary in the foreign field. The number has been increased by twelve during the past year. It is especially recommended that, not only among the churches which are in the habit of considering themselves rich churches, but among those of moderate size and strength, the question should be seriously considered whether they cannot and ought not to provide for the expenses of one missionary in the foreign field.

American Christian Missionary Society.

The program of the Home Missionary Society occupied Tuesday and Wednesday, with the exception of such time as was, by courtesy, given to the Benevolent Association and the Education Society. The first address was by R. P. Shepherd, of East Orange, N. J., on "The Will of God Concerning America." It was a stirring address and showed that the speaker holds a large and liberal view of the mission of the Disciples of Christ.

A conference on "How to Raise Money for Missions," led by A. M. Harvuot, developed some splendid suggestions. For example, "The first requisite for raising large amounts of money is to have a preacher who wants to do it." (Harvuot.) "The way to raise missionary money is to put your hand in your pocket, get a grip on the money—and lift. The first two are easy, the third is sometimes hard." (Meacham.) "To persuade the sinner to obey the gospel, to persuade the Christian to live the gospel, and to persuade the church to give the gospel to the world, is the three-fold aspect of the minister's duty. None of these can be done by clap-trap methods. It is a matter not of schemes, but of education." (H. C. Garrison.) "Find and use new missionary texts. The New Testament is full of them. Prick your body in any place and blood will flow. Stick a pin in any page of the New Testament and missionary blood will flow." (H. C. Garrison.) "Success depends upon knowing that what ought to be done can be done. If God wants the church to do a thing, the church can do it." (S. T. Martin.) The emphasis of all the speakers was upon education and the growth of the spiritual life as the prime requisite for the growth of missionary contributions. Simply increased assiduity on the part of the secretaries, or new, ingenious and sensational devices in the churches, will not meet the requirement. If the missionary offerings are to increase, it must be because the people are increasingly a missionary people. One suggestion was that when Christians are working, they should have it consciously in mind that they are making money to give. "We cannot serve God and mammon," but we must serve God with mammon.

The introduction of missionaries who made brief appeals for help in their respective regions was, as always, an interesting feature. Every one of them is firmly convinced that his own field is the neediest and the greatest in its possibilities. That is the reason they are so effective in their work. J. H. Hardin plead for an appropriation of $10,000 for New England for the coming year to "start something in New England large enough for New England to see." B. H. Lingenfelter, of Seattle, spoke of the glories and possibilities "of the New England of the west." T. W. Pinkerton, of Salt Lake City, Claude Jones, of Louisiana, O. P. Spiegel, of New Orleans, and G. T. Black, of Indian Territory, spoke instructively and enthusiastically of their work. E. M. Pardee, who is about to take charge of the work in Porto Rico, made an excellent impression in his brief speech. W. M. Taylor, who was forced to return from Porto Rico on account of ill health, and is now general evangelist in the south, also spoke of his former field of labor. W. J. Wright, general evangelist in the east, said that the Disciples of Christ have no church in thirty-three of the one hundred largest cities in the United States, and that all of these thirty-three are in the Atlantic coast states and north of the Potomac River.

The address by the president of the convention, Allan B. Philpott, on "The Church Face to Face With the Modern Spirit," was a most admirable and scholarly presentation of a great theme. We take pleasure in presenting it entire to our readers this week, and urge a careful reading of it.

The report of the Board of Ministerial Relief, which was presented Tuesday afternoon, shows a total of only $5,605.94 given for this work during the past year. Those in charge of this ministry have been diligent in pressing its claims, and the custodians of the funds have been careful in its disbursement, but the brotherhood has not yet begun to give any adequate response to the appeal. There is great need for increased liberality toward this cause.

The report of the statistical secretary, G. A. Hoffmann, exhibited the following facts with reference to our numerical growth during the past year and present status:

No. churches.....	10,857	10,983	126
" communicants . . .	1,187,377	1,220,841	33,464
" Bible schools....	8,171	8,355	184
" scholars, officers and teachers . . .	776,699	801,807	25,108
" ministers.....	6,427	6,503	130

As an exhibit of the development of our co-operative missionary work, the following table showing the amount contributed annually through our national missionary organizations at various periods in our history is highly instructive. It includes only the amounts contributed through the Foreign Christian Missionary Society, the American Christian Missionary Society and the C. W. B. M., and takes no account of contributions for benevolence or education:

Year	Amounts
1880	26,421
1885	84,629
1890	146,243
1895	208,616
1903.....	516,444

Including contributions for state and district missions and for benevolence and education, the amount raised for purposes other than local church work is $1,020,065. Adding to this the estimated amount contributed for the support of local congregations, and the total for all purposes for the year is $7,135,065, which is an increase of nearly a million dollars over the total of last year.

The report of the superintendent of Christian Endeavor, R. H. Waggener, showed the work of the young people to be in a prosperous condition. In the nature of the case, it is impossible to give any adequate statistical report of the work done by them since most of the work of the Endeavor societies is done through the local congregations and is so credited.

Tuesday evening was devoted to church extension and evangelization. As at the other evening sessions it was necessary to hold simultaneous meetings in different buildings to accommodate the audiences. At one place the speakers were W. F. Richardson and James Small, and at another George W. Muckley and S. M. Martin. The theme of evangelization is one which has been receiving needed attention in our convention of recent years. In one sense our conventions have always been entirely devoted to this theme, but only recently has there been adequate consideration of what is known as evangelistic work.

Two important interests occupied thirty minutes each in the Wednesday morning session. These were the National Benevolent Association and the American Christian Education Society. George L. Suively, general secretary of the Benevolent Association, spoke, briefly of the work of the association and hinted darkly at a sensational announcement which would presently be made. The announcement came at the close of an enthusiastic and characteristic speech by Mrs. H. M. Meier, who announced a gift of $25,000 to the Benevolent Association.

This was the largest hearing the Benevolent Association had ever had before one of our conventions and the brotherhood has been impressed as never before with the importance and wonderful possibilities of this arm of our service.

The Educational Society had a half hour in which to present its claims and its plan of work. The president of the Educational Society, W. E. Garrison, had charge of this part of the program and introduced a number of college men who made brief addresses. Further reference to this society and its work will be found elsewhere.

W. A. Harp conducted a very interesting round table at this point on "Advance Methods of Sunday-school Work," in which a large number of delegates replied briefly to a large number of pertinent questions relating to the work of the Sunday-school. Brother Harp managed this conference with admirable tact.

The closing address of the forenoon was by H. D. C. MacLachlan, of Kentucky, on "The Lion, the Lamb and the Child," being an earnest appeal in behalf of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day.

In the afternoon, after completing the unfinished business of the convention in the reports of committees, the Students' Volunteer Mission to the mountains of Kentucky was presented by different speakers, and a deep impression was made as to the value of this work. Under the title of "Pleading Voices," as it appeared on the program, a number of earnest, forceful speeches were made from representatives of various fields in our great country, pointing out the needs of these fields and the necessity for immediate action. One could not listen to the pleading tones of these speakers, who were fresh from these fields of labor, without being impressed with the whiteness of the harvest and the scarcity of the laborers.

A program which was to have been carried out in the evening at the Central Methodist Church was crowded into this afternoon session. "Our Duty to the Stranger," by B. Q. Denham, of New York City, was a strong appeal for the foreigners now crowding into this country at such a rapid rate, and a most interesting and instructive presentation of the statistics on this subject. The address which followed on "Walking in Harmony with the Purposes of God," by C. S. Medbury, of Indiana, was one of the great inspirational addresses of the convention. It was a grand theme grandly treated. Nothing, perhaps, in the whole convention, stirred the hearts of the people to profounder depths than this splendid address.

The evening session at the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church, which was the closing session of the convention, beside the song service and devotional exercise, consisted of two addresses, the first by A. M. Haggard, of Iowa, on "Tendencies Toward Christian Union," and the other by Mark Collis, of Kentucky, on "Our High Calling in Christ Jesus." Sandwiched in between these two addresses, a brief appeal was made by J. H. Garrison in behalf of the committee on exhibit at the World's Fair in St. Louis next year. The committee had recommended that a building be erected on the grounds for such exhibit, reproducing some historical building connected with our movement, and that this be made a sort of rallying center for the brethren visiting the Fair, and be supplied with tracts, leaflets, books, papers, charts, pictures of our colleges and college men, of some leading church buildings and of our leading men of the past, and perhaps of the present. Subscriptions were asked for the purpose of erecting such a building and making such exhibit, and something over $1,500 was subscribed on the spot with great enthusiasm. This warrants us in believing that a sum not less than $5,000 will be subscribed by the brotherhood for this purpose.

It was gratifying to notice that the large church auditorium, at this last session, was packed with an audience that filled it to the uttermost parts of the galleries to hear the two able speakers of the evening, and the people seemed as deeply interested and as enthusiastic as at the very first session of the convention. The universal comment among the delegates as they bade each other good-bye, after the tender prayer and benediction by W. F. Richardson, was, "We have had a great convention," or, "This has been one of the best of our conventions." With this feeling they parted to go back to their widely separated fields of labor, to work more faithfully than ever, if possible, until they should meet again at the great world-assembly of Disciples at St. Louis next fall, at which every one, so far as we heard, expects to be present.

A New Named Fund for Church Extension.

One of the announcements at the national convention that made us all happy was that on Tuesday night in the two addresses on Church Extension made by W. F. Richardson and G. W. Muckley. The reference is to the creation of another Named Loan Fund in our Church Extension work by Frank H. Main, of Detroit, Mich. Brother Main is the president of the American Standard Jewelry Company of that city. At his own invitation Brother Muckley called on him to give him more information on Church Extension work. After an explanation of the workings of the Named Loan Fund, Mr. Main decided to establish one at once, and handed the first $1,000 to Brother Muckley just before he got up to give his address at the Central Methodist Church. The word had been communicated to Brother Richardson, who was to speak at the Woodward Avenue Baptist Church. The announcements made by both speakers during their addresses caused great enthusiasm. This is the eleventh Named Loan Fund for Church Extension. The first Named Fund was established by Governor F. M. Drake, Feb. 1, 1889, early in the history of the work of Church Extension. Governor Drake gave $1,000 at once, and paid the remainder of the $5,000 during the next ten years.

A Named Loan Fund is established by giving $5,000 or more. The amount can be given at once or in annual payments of not less than $500. The Board of Church Extension keeps a separate account of each Named Fund. The interest is not spent for expenses, (Continued on page 573.)

The Two Pence and Whatsoever More.

By Cephas Shelburne.

The Good Samaritan showing compassion on the man who fell among thieves, binding up his wounds, pouring in oil and wine, setting him on his own beast and taking him out of danger, stands out in clear and beautiful outline before the dark and ugly background of the priest's and Levite's treatment—Jews on their way from a religious feast—who pass their brother Jew by on the other side. This act of bringing a fellow-man back to life and out of danger was most worthy and beautiful in one of a despised race; but it is not the pearl of greatest price in this parable. Common humanity, duty, conscience, might have demanded as much. Any ism or ethical code under the common law of benevolence would have brought this man out of danger and back to life. The humanity of any sect, Jew, Christian or heathen, would have condemned the treatment of this priest and Levite. But when this Samaritan, having brought this unfortunate brother-man to the inn, takes care of him, nurses him through the night, and on the morrow takes out two pence, pays his bill and says to the host, "Take care of him; and whatsoever thou spendest more, when I come again I will repay thee." This is what lifts the parable above the plane of common benevolence, rounds up the story, completes the picture, gives it the finishing touches, makes it a true gospel story, and entitles it to "The Good Samaritan."

It is this two pence, this little surplus, this whatsoever more, this unnecessary, lovely, finishing touch that makes the beautiful Christian character; that lend beauty, fragrance and that utter unselfishness that makes us complete in Him. In this "two pence" and "whatsoever thou spendest more" of the parable, we see the fragrance and beauty of the rose, the sparkle of the diamond, the grace and fashion of the lily, the music of a strung cord, the mellow light of October days, the expression of the divine image, the true spirit of Christianity, the great, loving heart of Jesus beating.

Conscience, duty, benevolence, philanthropy and such like are good things; but love, mercy, kindness, the altruistic spirit are a good deal better things, and far more Christian. This is a lesson that religious denominations, religious journals, religious homes, yea, that the great Church herself needs very much to learn and publish to the world by humbled deeds of kindness. Ella Wheeler Wilcox's little verse is to the point:

"So many gods, so many creeds,
So many paths that wind and wind,
While just the art of being kind,
Is all the sad world needs."

Christ came to teach something more than conscience and duty and benevolence; something more than ethics or the ten commandments of the decalogue. He came to add the eleventh commandment and the golden rule of do unto others; to teach us the great, simple lessons of love, kindness, mercy. One of our poets has said that God might have made a better berry than the strawberry, but he had not done so. And so God might have made a better spirit than this Samaritan, but the truth is he hasn't done so.

God might have made the flower without fragrance, the sunset without its beauty, the diamond without its sparkle and the star its twinkle, the bird's wing without rich plumage, and its little throat without sweet song. And so he might have made his human children without that sweet fragrance and beauty, sparkle and music of love, but he has not so made us.

"A loving heart," says Hillis, "exhales sweet odors like an alabaster box, it pours forth joy like a sweet harp, it flashes beauty like a casket of gems, it cheers like a winter's fire, it carries sweet stimulus like returning sunshine."

The progress of a Christian should be marked by gentleness, patience, forbearance, sweetness, compassionateness, overflowing love. The Christian ought to so conduct himself that he makes the world better, brighter, happier, diviner for his having lived in it. The true Christian is the unselfish, altruistic spirit. He gives the cup of water, speaks the comforting word, heals the wound, wipes away the tear, feeds the hungry and clothes the naked, helps every struggling cause, who recognizes the sublime precept of the religion that he professes that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and that it is more blessed to receive a wrong than to give a wrong. These higher and better things are the two pence, the something more, the true heart and spirit of Christianity, the Good Samaritan to the race. Then said Jesus unto him, "Go thou and do likewise."

A Sunday-School Review.

The Bible-school of the First Church, Akron, O., conducted the recent review in a manner, to them, entirely new. At the beginning of the quarter's work announcements were made from the platform to the effect that a written examination would be held on review day. It was stated that a prize would be awarded to the boy passing the best examination and likewise the girl, in the intermediate, also the young man and young woman in the junior department, and to the man and woman in the senior department. Thus six prizes in all were awarded. The primary department was not included in the examination. The pastor and superintendent prepared thirteen questions covering the quarter's work as completely as possible; these were printed in the church bulletin the day of the examination; paper was furnished and all were requested to make an honest effort to answer the questions. The management were greatly pleased with the interest taken. A larger number took part than was expected. Many splendid papers were turned in. The papers were placed in the hands of a thoroughly competent person for examination, and the six best were selected.

Such a review promotes study of the lessons during the quarter and regular attendance; two things very much to be desired. In a smaller school such a review could be conducted with comparative ease. This school is quite large, averaging about six hundred and seventy-five in attendance for the year. It is felt that by the experience gained, another effort will prove even more successful.

Sailing Song.

By G. S. Judd.

Out on the ocean, rocked by the billow,

Homeward our good ship tosses the spray,

Her sails are all set, her masts like a willow,

Bend to the breezes that bear her away.

CHORUS.

Then blow, breezes blow, 'tis the breath of the ocean

To waft us along to our harbor of joy,

The spray in the sunshine, yields to our motion,

From aloft comes the shout, "Oho, land Ahoy!"

The halyards are taut, and the tiller is steady,

We skim like a seagull the crest of the wave,

The crew is alert and the captain is ready

All perils to meet and all dangers to brave.

CHORUS.

Then sing we a song for the land we are nearing,

For home and the loved ones, our own native land,

A shout for the shore and the head-land appearing,

Our voyage is o'er and our friends on the strand.

CHORUS.

Our life, like the ocean, is rolling and foaming,

The church, like a good ship, bears steady away,

Till sighting the harbor, we end all our roaming,

And meet all our loved ones in heaven's own day.

CHORUS.

News From Many Fields

Kentucky.

Wm. Clark has accepted a call from the church at Owenton, and begins work November 1. He is one of our young men from New Zealand and is a fine man, as well as an excellent preacher. This is his senior year at Kentucky University, and he can complete the course by private examinations. Brother Clark has preached acceptably at Orangeburg and other places.

Chas. L. Garrison, who spent the past year at Chicago, has accepted a call from First Church, Newport, and begins work there in a very short time, according to latest reports. This is the church recently served by W. T. Donaldson. Brother Garrison delighted the Newport congregation by his preaching. It is about settled that the two congregations at Newport, First Church and Central, will unite and form one strong church. The property of First Church will be sold.

W. T. Donaldson, Eminence, Ky., enters upon his campaign for the College of the Bible in a most sanguine frame of mind. He thinks that he can see some very large things for the McGarvey Bible Chair.

One of the very finest senior students of the College of the Bible has under consideration the Jackson, Breathitt county, work. We hope to arrange in the next two weeks for this work, and trust that nothing may arise to prevent the accomplishment of our plans.

Thad. S. Tinsley will hold a meeting the first of November at Louisa, Lawrence county. He will be helped by the board in this meeting. This is one of the best county seats in the eastern part of the state. We have a small congregation but no house of worship. We have been supporting Bro. J. H. Stambaugh for the past two years at this important post.

The first of November is upon us. State Mission Day is at hand. The way in which our brethren have responded to the appeal for promises to take the offering in November is most gratifying. Nearly as many churches as contributed last year have now agreed to take the offering next month. This is full of encouragement. Many of our strong churches have not yet been heard from. Some of the preachers of these were at Detroit when the letters were sent out. Many of these will be heard from in a few days.

Let us, in Kentucky, make November a great month. Let there be such united action as that it will be like the step of an army. Let our preachers tell the people about what is being done, what has been done and what needs to be done. Let the people know and they will respond. "Facts are the fingers of God." Let us give them these and we will be able to make an advance over the good year that has just closed. H. W. ELLIOTT.

Sulphur, Ky.

J. M. Rash, of Winchester, recently closed a successful meeting with home forces at Peak's Mill, Franklin Co., with 19 additions.

J. J. Spencer and Mark Collis, of Lexington, expect to hold meetings with home forces at their respective churches, Central and Broadway, during November.

It has just been announced that J. B. Briney will, on Jan. 1, become associated with Jno. F. Brown as editor of the Christian Companion, Louisville. Brother Briney has a host of friends in Kentucky who will gladly welcome him back to our state again.

After a faithful ministry of four years, G. W. Nutter has resigned at Millersburg, his resignation to take effect the first of the year. J. W. Harding, of Winchester, has just closed a short meeting at Waterford, Spencer county, which resulted in 6 additions.

Quite a number of our Kentucky preachers were present at the Detroit Convention.

H. N. Reubelt, of Jeffersonton, held a meeting recently at Fairview, near Louisville, which resulted in 19 additions. He is at this writing in a meeting with the church at Lawrenceburg.

T. S. Buckingham and H. C. Bowen are in a meeting at Chatham.

The church at Shelbyville will enjoy the services of J. J. Haley in a meeting next month. H. D. C. MacLachlan is the regular preacher.

E. J. Willis, of Hopkinsville, is in a good meeting at Fulton.

W. B. Taylor has resigned at Versailles, his resignation to take effect the first of the year. He has served this congregation very faithfully for the past eight years and has done a splendid work. We hope he will not leave Kentucky.

F. M. Tinder, of Lancaster, recently assisted C. W. Dick in a meeting at North Middletown, with 29 additions.

Three were added in the twelve days' meeting held recently at Warsaw, in which the pastor, Milo Atkinson, was assisted by Harry D. Smith, of Hopkinsville.

"Kentucky Missions to the Front" is now the cry of our Kentucky churches. The month of November should be given to this important work.

M. G. Buckner, of Harrodsburg, has just assisted J. T. Hawkins in a meeting at Leesburg, which resulted in 13 additions.

W. G. Walker, of Lexington, and D. W. Case, of Corinth, closed a short meeting at Unity, Harrison Co., recently with 25 additions.

The meeting at Republican Church, in which the pastor, J. W. Rogers, was assisted by D. T. Buck, of New Liberty, closed with 31 additions.

J. L. Greenwell, of West Point, Miss., has just assisted Geo. C. Waggoner in a splendid meeting at Point Pleasant, Henry Co., which resulted in 15 additions.

Ohio missions now have the right of way. All eyes are looking to Nov. 1. The 83,000 Disciples of Ohio ought to give 50 cents each for Ohio missions. But they will not. Brother Bartlett is very modestly asking for $15,000. But what is that among so many? A little over 18 cents each. How wonderfully small our great things are in missionary work!

W. R. Moffett has folded his tent at Martin's Ferry and will steal away to Bucyrus and minister to the saints. T. A. Flemming will become pastor at Miles Avenue, Cleveland, Nov. 1. He has done valiant service at New Berlin and Sparta. W. J. Cadman, who leaves Miles Avenue, has gone back to England.

Geo. Fowler, of Lisbon, will also betake himself to England. We are sorry to lose him from Ohio, but England will gain a strong man.

Clarence Mitchel is in a meeting with S. A. Cook at Monterey in Clearmont county.

J. G. Slayter held a short meeting with the Phillips Church, where Casper Stanley ministers.

W. D. Van Voorhis has again come under the employ of the state board, taking the East End Church in Toledo recently vacated by W. G. Walters.

A new church has been organized at Green Ridge in Stark county by T. A. Flemming. There are 58 members. The new church will co-operate with Sparta, and New Berlin will employ a man all time.

Shelby will lose W. J. Oram, who goes to the Third Church in Brooklyn, New York. During Brother Oram's ministry a $1,900 house has been finished in Shelby.

D. O. Cunningham has accepted a call to Deerfield. Deerfield is a living link church, supporting O. J. Granger, a former pastor.

M. E. Chatley has resigned at Fourth Avenue Church in Columbus. He will close his work Dec. 31. His future is "in the air," says a postal card in my morning's mail.

The Fourth District Convention was held at Londonville, Oct. 12-14. The Ohio scribe preached the opening sermon to an appreciative audience. Londonville Church is making a splendid record under the leadership of J. L. Deming. The program was an extra good one, and we were sorry not to have heard all of it.

Percy Wilson has left Cuyhoga Falls to take up work under the state board. He will work under the McDonald fund a part of the time.

The Chicago Avenue Church in Columbus is making rapid progress under the inspiring leadership of Wesley Hatcher. The congregation recently voted to abandon all suppers and socials for commercial ends, and will learn the luxury of direct giving. There are accessions every week.

J. H. Dodds, of Monticello, Ind., has been called to Franklin Avenue, Columbus. We most heartily congratulate Brother D. He will find as true and heroic a band as any man ever led. We hear good words for Brother Dodds and shall pray the rich blessing of God upon him and the church in their united efforts.

Now that we have all been on the mountain top for a few days at Detroit, let us in Ohio stay there till after the November offering. The enthusiasm for Ohio missions was never so great. Remember, $15,000 Nov. 1!

Collinwood, O.

C. A. FREER.

Maryland, Delaware, and District of Columbia.

Since the close of our State Convention, Oct. 9, we have gotten out a circular letter to the churches earnestly asking them to observe Nov. 1, as rally day for state work. We hope the churches will observe it in all states for brethren, while all missions are as important as they can be. We must pull up state missions to the front. In our state work we ask each church for a certain apportionment. Last year, out of 29 apportioned, 23 were on the roll of honor for paying their full amount. We hope to excel that this year. Already one church has indicated their intention to exceed their apportionment by $50. Let this be contagious. The day has come to do greater things for God in state missions as well as all others. Our papers, we are glad, have come to realize that the next thing is "State Missions to the front." We commend the special issues of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST and others.

As your correspondent has been attending conventions and traveling most of the time for the last three weeks, he has little to write of work, but would like to submit a few observations of one man, at the great convention just closed at Detroit.

First, Is growth in the spirit of Christian unity. It was held in a Baptist, a Methodist, and a Congregational Church.

Second, How people of all classes enjoy simple gospel singing, both congregational and special.

Third, Increased liberality in all departments of our work but one, viz.: ministerial relief. If that were put under the direction of the National Benevolent Association, which made such marked progress, the pathetic appeals of their secretary for the needy would soon bring that up. The work of distributing to the necessity of saints in connection with our evangelistic zeal, is one of the best signs of our getting nearer apostolic and Christly ministration. The generous donations made at the convention marks an era in our growth in liberality.

Fourth, The social fellowship, the meeting of brethren from different sections and breaking of bread from restaurant to restaurant or hotel, and reunions of colleges and classes shows the spirit of sociability, which was so characteristic of the apostolic church.

Fifth, The joyous enthusiasm of returned missionaries, and their pathetic appeals for more workers in their various fields. Such opportunities to mold the literary, educational and religious future of China ought to call out dozens of our best young professors and preachers.

Sixth, The spirit of progress as revealed in the intended World's Fair exhibit and in the addresses of presidents and secretaries, and leading speakers, which show a disposition to ignore side issues, or discussion of different schools of thought on plans of federation, or theology, and go forward in work for Christ.

Seventh, The determination to destroy the enemies of the church and home and nation, and safeguard them all, as evidenced in the prohibition and good citizenship addresses, and in certain points in other addresses.

Eighth, The disposition to guide and use the young people as evidenced in discussion of Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor work. To sum up the convention in the words of the Editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST at the last session, "The key-note has been, loyalty to Christ, liberality in Christ, union upon Christ, and service for Christ."

Your State Mission Number is a fine illustration of enterprise and united effort.

After all, is not this the kind of Christian union that is most needed, that must come first?

How can we do more to strengthen the cause of union than to give a practical demonstration of it ourselves? Let us practice what we preach on this subject.

The Christian Courier gives us an illustrated Texas Mission Number. What a power is the church paper! How could we successfully conduct our church enterprises without the aid of the editor and publisher? Moral: Pray for and read our church papers.

Not many from Texas were able to attend our conventions at Detroit. Too busy; too close to State Mission Day; too great a distance from Texas. But we are saving ourselves for next year. Look out for Texas at the St. Louis Convention.

The Texas Board of Missions has employed a city evangelist. John A. Stevens is the man, Dallas the place of beginning. The Dallas churches join us in this much-needed work. The plan is to establish one or two more churches in Dallas and then move on to some other Texas city. And with this we are aiding more country missions than ever before. We are not employing quite so many evangelists, i. e. revivalists. We are aiming at substantial work more and more. We are working for and expecting the largest Texas Mission Day offering in the history of our Texas work. This will come as an evolution rather than a revolution, and is the legitimate result of years of patient toil by faithful workers.

What grand men and women have wrought in this field. It is an honor to any man to have fellowship with the workers of the past or those now doing the work of the Lord in Texas. We have a number of veterans closely allied to our Texas missions, of whom it is a delight to speak. At another time I want to write up our "vets." God bless and keep them.

East Side Church, Dallas, is now a fact. A well located lot has been bought and a tabernacle will at once be erected upon it. It is thought by those in position to know that the East Side Church will start with one hundred and fifty members.

Bro. M. M. Davis, pastor of the Central Church, said, making a public talk on the subject, "It will be a glad, sad day when we bid good-by to the members going out. Glad because a new center of Christian influence and work is established in this growing city. Sad because we shall miss the fellowship in this church of the faithful workers who have helped us to accomplish what we have done."

John W. Marshall has just closed a fine meeting at Paris, where G. Lyle Smith ministers. With such a team failure would be almost impossible.

The C. W. B. M. state secretary reports all debts paid to Oct. 1, with a small balance in the treasury; also that the work is growing steadily.

Evangelist J. B. Boen is building himself and "Josephine" a home in Oklahoma City.

Pains in the Back

Are symptoms of a weak, torpid or stagnant condition of the kidneys or liver, and are a warning it is extremely hazardous to neglect, so important is a healthy action of these organs.

They are commonly attended by loss of energy, lack of courage, and sometimes by gloomy foreboding and despondency.

"I had pains in my back, could not sleep and when I got up in the morning felt worse than the night before. I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla and now I can sleep and get up feeling rested and able to do my work. I attribute my cure entirely to Hood's Sarsaparilla." MRS. J. N. PERRY, care H. S. Copeland, Pike Road, Ala.

Hood's Sarsaparilla and Pills

Cure kidney and liver troubles, relieve the back, and build up the whole system.

Pray what use has an evangelist for a home?

Bro. T. J. Harris has moved to Martindale for regular work there. The church at Martindale paid the expense of his move. Go thou, churches, and do likewise.

Evangelist J. C. Eubank has just planted a church of 35 members at Patonville, Lamar county. Arrangements are being made for a church home which will be built soon.

C. MASON.

Northern California.

Before this reaches our readers, the great day in our history will have been here and passed by. Will we grasp the opportunity as it passes? The first Sunday in November is California day. Will we be loyal to it? I am sure it will be full of surprises. Last year Fresno gave $235. No other church gave over $85. This year Fresno will try to reach $600, or $1 per member. Woodland will give over $100. Red Bluff will try for $100. Sacramento will give $160, or $1 per member. Selma bids fair to carry off the banner, however, for with 130 members she will give over $200, or more than $1.50 per member. What will the other churches do?

We have not only prosperous finances to present at this time, but never since I have been in the state have we had so many meetings going on at one time.

R. L. McHatton at Santa Rosa, F. H. Lemon, from Iowa, at Vacaville, A. C. McKeever at Modesto, Gallahorn and Carroll at College City. F. L. Platt is to begin a meeting next Lord's day at Selma, and about Nov. 15 at Tulare. These things all point to an awakening from the Rip Van Winkle sleep of the past eight or ten years.

Prosperity is on every hand. Many a husbandman and vinedresser is harvesting $1,000 to $4,000 from a ten-acre farm this year. There is plenty of room for hundreds of thousands more families to come and do likewise.

Northern California comprises 51 counties, with 1,300,000 population, extending over an area equal to three such states as Missouri. One-third of this population is within the city limits of the city of San Francisco. One-half of it is within 20 miles of the Market Street Ferries building in San Francisco; 17 counties out of 51 have no Christian Church. One-third of the area of northern California will support in comfort and happiness an ordinary family for every 10 acres. We need system to the immigration of our people from the east. We ought to have them come and settle in colonies so they will not be scattered and lost to the cause we love. There is plenty of room for such efforts where the people could grow oranges, lemons, figs, prunes, peaches, almonds, walnuts, table and raisin grapes, alfalfa, berries, truck gardens, chicken ranches, etc., etc. Almond orchards six years old have paid this year $4 to the tree, and others ten years old, $7 to the tree—70 trees to the acre. You figure what that means.

I found one place where a family lived in town and had 4 acres of table grapes out of town. From this 4 acres they picked, packed and shipped to eastern markets 2,500 crates of grapes, which netted them 50 cents to $1 per crate. You figure what that means. This is the healthiest climate in the world for chicken raising. Hens are worth 75 cents to $1 each, and eggs sell for 20 to 60 cents per dozen; 1,000 hens will clear $1,000 a year, and yet California is sending $3,000,000 a year east for poultry and eggs. We need people out here to grow eggs and chickens to supply this demand. We need people out here to grow almonds, walnuts, oranges, figs, prunes, peaches, grapes, etc., to send east in exchange for money.

Why not form Christian colonies to do this and thus multiply our churches instead of segregating and losing our members? Let us be up-to-date in our business methods.

I write this in the office of an undertaker, and he is complaining of very dull times—no funerals—and yet it is a city of 10,000 people. Some people are hard to please.

The Jamaica Relief Fund.

There is cause for rejoicing in the amount received, up to date, for Jamaica relief: $750 was sent to C. E. Randall, Jamaica, in September. During the first thirteen days of October over $1,100 was sent in to C. W. B. M. headquarters, and we have heard of enough more which has already been raised, but not yet sent in—to bring the total amount raised to $2,000. This is a good beginning, but it must be only the beginning of the relief fund the churches of Christ in the United States shall raise for their stricken brethren in the island of Jamaica.

The only additional information I have, up to the present time, October 15, is concerning conditions in the Island, is found in the report of Commissioner Harris, sent out by the English government to investigate conditions produced by the storm in Jamaica. He states that he saw everywhere the evidences of hunger endured, in the wan faces of the children. Also that disease was becoming epidemic occasioned by the people subsisting so long on green fruit.

C. E. Randall also writes that some of our workers are breaking down under the strain produced by the suffering of the people surrounding them.

Let the contributions for Jamaica relief continue to pour in. Send the money raised to Helen E. Moses, Sec., 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Indiana.

A Word from Illinois.

At last we are about to do something in state missions worthy of the cause and in some fair proportion to our means. This rising tide of interest in missions at our doors is the result and reward of able and persistent advocacy and effort.

The state boards and state secretaries deserve great credit and should receive the hearty approval and support of us all, because they have kept right on in good heart and hope though always handicapped by the scant means at their command. A debt of gratitude is due our editors for the wonderfully liberal space they have given to the cause of missions in their great and peerless weeklies.

Three of these come to my desk every week and they are all heart and soul for missions. For this unity in the most Christ-like work committed to us—may the Lord be praised.

The first Lord's day of November is at hand. In Illinois we want to double any offering heretofore made. If we succeed in this, and I believe we will, we will blow the trumpet in Zion and have such a jubilee as will give joy from Dan to Beersheba.

DAVID'S GRIEF OVER ABSALOM.—
2 Sam. 18:24-33.

Read chapters 15-20.

Memory verses: 18:31-33.

GOLDEN TEXT: A foolish son is a grief to his father.—Prov. 17:25.

Absalom's Rebellion.

As narrated in the preceding lesson, Absalom's revolt was at first so far successful that David, with some of his faithful followers, abandoned the capitol without resistance, and the rebel forces occupied Jerusalem. Absalom established himself in the king's palace and administered to the pride and reputation of the fugitive David the last and grossest affront that was possible in that polygamous age—he took possession of his concubines, and that publicly in the sight of all Jerusalem. This was intended to be a last blow to David's prestige.

There is a peculiar appropriateness in the fact that, as David's great sin was in taking another man's wife, to whom was born the son who eventually succeeded him, so his great sorrow was occasioned by jealousy among his children. It is not minimizing Absalom's guilt to say that David brought upon himself the trouble which almost broke his heart in his declining years.

From Bad to Worse.

As we hinted before, Absalom's course may at first have had more color of excuse than appears on the surface of the record. It was an age in which succession to the throne was seldom settled without a fight, and to the princes who engaged in such a contest the alternatives were—win or die. Absalom, brilliant, spirited and popular, was not the man to yield meekly to one of his younger brothers, nor could a successful rival ever feel quite safe so long as Absalom was at large. Knowing this, Absalom knew that his only safety lay in a bold stroke for the throne. Such was the reasoning, perhaps, with which he began his revolt. Indeed, it is not improbable that when he begun he had no worse intention than to so intrench himself that on the death of his father he could be ready to seize the throne. From this to open revolt was but a short step; still he wished no personal harm to David. Then to influence public opinion in his favor he seized his father's concubines. At last he sees that he can never be safe upon the throne of Israel while David lives, and, waving aside the proposal of Ahithophel to lead an army against David, he adopts the bold plan of the treacherous Hushai and goes out in person to seek the life of his father.

Truly the path of iniquity is a slippery incline. It is not hard to find a plausible excuse for a little sin. But the only way to escape, for a time, the evil consequences of a sin is to commit a larger one. One may conceal profligacy by lying, lying by theft, theft by murder—but the end is tragedy and open shame.

The Battle.

Absalom accepted the advice of his false counsellor, Hushai, and went in person to lead his army against David. David, yielding to the advice of his friends, who were anxious above all things for his personal safety, remained in a safe place, while three of his trusted commanders led the army. His parting admonition to them was, "Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom."

The account of the battle is brief. Absalom's army, doubtless composed of the more restless and unstable elements of Israel, was no match for David's hardened veterans. The battle became a slaughter, and 20,000 of the rebels were slain. The survivors, among whom was Absalom, scattered through the forest of Ephraim to escape the hand of their pursuers. It was here that Absalom met his strange death. Riding through the dense forest, his long hair, which was his pride and beauty, became so entangled in the overhanging branches of a tree, that he could not free himself. Being found here by certain of David's men, he was killed in spite of David's command that he should be spared. Joab, himself, to whom this command had been given, was the first to drive his dart through the heart of the helpless Absalom.

Good and Evil Tidings.

The story of David's reception of the news of this day's battle is as pathetic a narrative as can be found in the whole Bible. The victory was good news but David would not stop to rejoice over this until he had learned whether Absalom was safe. In this hour when his throne and his son were both in danger, he was first the father and only secondarily the king. His love was greater than his pride, and it was unshaken even by the unfilial conduct of his son.

David's Grief.

In his sorrow, over the death of Absalom, David took no account of the injury which Absalom had tried to inflict upon him or the peril in which he had placed his throne. He thought only of the lost and ruined life. The brilliant and capable prince, not only dead, but dead in a wicked undertaking. The knowledge that Absalom's abilities had been wasted in such an evil enterprise and that he would have no opportunity to redeem his name or reform his character, added poignancy to David's grief.

If the king could so mourn over the death of a rebellious son, how great and how genuine must be God's sorrow for the sin of His erring children. In spite of His love their sin will work out its consequences in punishment and suffering, but these no more represent God's desire for man than the death of Absalom indicate hatred toward him on the part of David. After such an experience as this, and after pouring out his soul in passionate grief (18:33), the psalmist might sing with full understanding in his calmer moods when he reflected upon his experiences: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him."

GREAT MEN OF THE BIBLE, V. ELIJAH.—
2 Kings 2:12; Matt. 11:14; Jas. 5:17, 18.

None of the prophets of Israel made a stronger impression upon the nation than Elijah. There was something heroic in his personality, a certain largeness of mold and an evident nearness to God that caused Israel to remember him as the greatest of the prophets. His was the voice that summoned Israel back to the worship of Jehovah after one of her deepest plunges into idolatry. His was the hand that was raised against the worst of the kings. So strong and permanent was the impression made by this heroic figure that it was commonly reported centuries later that Elijah would come again to announce the appearance of the Messiah and to prepare for his coming. "How is it that the scribes say that Elijah must first come?" (Mark 9:11)

The earlier prophets, such as Elijah and Elisha, were men of action; the later prophets, like Amos and Isaiah, were also men of letters. The early prophets did not write; they spoke in words of iron and fire; they stood before kings and princes as the incarnation of the will of God and of the imperative demand for righteousness; they fought the battles of the Lord in times of the utmost peril.

The great lesson to be learned from such lives as that of Elijah is the lesson of moral and spiritual heroism—a lesson that can never be put on paper, but must always be embodied in deeds. That goodness does not mean weakness, but that, on the contrary, it calls for dauntless courage, for inflexible determination, for strenuous action, for all those stout and splendid qualities command the admiration of men—this is a lesson that needs repeated emphasis. All the best qualities of strenuous manhood and womanhood are needed in the service of God, and the heroism of Elijah in those days of darkness and peril is a perpetual reminder of this truth.

The power of prayer and faith is illustrated in Elijah's career. He deliberately drew upon himself the enmity of the wicked Ahab and the cruel Jezebel. He was fed by ravens, and the widow's jar of meal and vessel of oil were kept full. He challenged the prophets of Baal and stood ready to forfeit his life if his prayer should fail. And his faith was not disappointed. He did mighty deeds in the presence of all Israel, but his strength all came to him through prayer.

One lesson is to be learned from a mistake which Elijah made and a rebuke which was administered to him. He was not perfect, and once he became discouraged and ran away from duty and danger. He hid in the woods and wished to die, that he might have done with all the labors and perils which beset him. All but himself had gone over to Baal, he said, and he might as well die and let the struggle end. But no. The still small voice of God found him in his hiding place and reminded him that the case was not so desperate as it looked, that the right could never be permanently downed, and that there was still a remnant of the faithful who would rally around him. Get back to your work, said the voice. Trouble can never be avoided by running away. The forces of righteousness are indestructible and if you want to be on the winning side you must stay with them, even if you seem to be alone.

VIII. THE GOLDEN RULE AND ITS APPLICATIONS.

Matt. 7:12; Luke 6:31-35; 1 Sam. 26:7-12

Here is the grand summation of law and prophecy, this golden rule. It closes an argument: "All things therefore," the word "therefore" turns our minds back to what precedes. The study of last week, of divine and human fatherhood, of goodness and beneficence in action, of wise denial and kind indulgence, these are covered and focussed and included. "Therefore, whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, even so do ye also unto them; for this is the law and the prophets."

It is a great rule. Even in negative form, it represents a noble course. Do not unto others what you would not have them do unto you. But in that form, while it forbids all harshness and cruelty and deception, it enjoins nothing. It is entirely consistent with silence and indifference one toward another. The rule of action in which the Master sums up law and prophecy, lays an obligation upon us: it rings with a supreme imperative: "do unto others, what you'd have them do to you." "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek and ye shall find." Now if that assurance holds true for us, we must see that we make it true for others, as far as possible; that when they ask, we give; when they seek, we assist them to find.

The page from the life of David is a vivid illustration of the text. With Abner, his doughty warrior, he comes upon his sleeping enemy, king Saul, his huge spear at his head, his guard sleeping around him. Now, David, now is your opportunity! The Almighty has verily delivered Saul into your hands. "Let me smite him through with the spear," cries Abner, "and I will not smite him a second time!" Once would be enough. But against the specious argument of divine providence, David opposes his sanctified common sense, and his innate kingliness. David was the greater king, even then, although Saul wore the crown and held the revenues. "Who can put forth his hand against the Lord's anointed, and be guiltless?" Let God smite him!

David had been hunted and waylaid and assaulted by Saul; his life had been made a burden; but he never turned against the king. He illustrates in that age the golden rule, not once, but many times. He was merciful to one who cruelly pursued him; he spared one who, even then sought to smite him. His magnanimity looms up larger when we reflect on the aggravated offense he suffered. After a long train of evils and hardships, we should not be surprised to find him angry and revengeful. But he is forgiving.

Godlikeness is the ideal. The love of one's enemies, goodness and tenderness toward the evil and the unthankful, patience with the exasperating, despairing of none, even the apparently incorrigible and irredeemable, these are the qualities which show our birthright as children of God. And there is no day so bright and radiant that it is not clouded with some trial of our faith and courage. In all human intercourse, there are opportunities to put this rule into practice. We may begin in our own homes, before breakfast, and continue throughout the day with its interruptions and exactions and defeats, and find the evening triumphant with the smile of celestial peace.

Hunt out persons particularly obnoxious, and strive to do them good. Go through the divine arsenal, and select therefrom the choicest weapon wherewith to hew down your enemy. Coals of fire are effective. His words have wounded you; they rankle in your bosom; you unconsciously vent your spleen against him. You answer taunt with jibe, and malediction with innuendo, and so the breach widens and the furnace flames. No, no; do not so; you are wrong. If your enemy hungers, feed him; if he thirsts, give him drink.

DEAR SIR: "I had been suffering severely from kidney trouble. All symptoms were on hand; my former strength and power had left me; I could hardly drag myself along. Two of these "Good sheep, the kind of church member a preacher likes," and "The Under Shepherd" ought to prove specially helpful. He delivers them to churches between Sundays and sometimes on Sundays.

—This note is gratifying: "The money seems to be rolling in for Jamaica Relief. There has been received $3,617.73 to date. C. C. Smith, Cincinnati." That is good, but a great deal larger sum will have to be rolled in to prevent direst distress in the island. Keep it rolling. Let our abundance supply their necessities.

—"I have been called recently to Florence, Colo., to succeed Brother Radford, who has removed to Parachute, Colo. I was at Lexington, Ky., till June last, when I graduated with the A. M. degree. The work seems to start off hopefully. We expect to begin the erection of a new house of worship about Jan. 1 in a more central location than our present one. —WARD RUSSELL."

—"We can immediately locate three ministers in this state, all of the places most promising fields; two of them new churches. I would like to correspond at once with some of our brethren who will locate in this growing state.—DAVID N. WETZEL, Corresponding Secretary Wisconsin Christian Missionary Association, Footville, Wis."

—Edward L. Day, pastor First Christian Church, Brazil, Ind., writes: "Yesterday (Oct. 25) was one of the great days of the church. We raised $2,000 on church debt of more than $6,000. A large and enthusiastic audience ratified the raising of this. When the offering was announced, all stood and sang the Doxology with fervor. This greatly relieves us, and the remainder can be easily raised as it falls due."

—C. J. Tanner, although he had but recently entered upon his pastorate in the Central Church at Detroit, managed affairs with great wisdom and skill. We heard but one sentiment on the part of the local membership concerning him, and that was that they were fortunate in securing such a successor to the beloved Brother Newman, who, by the way, was prevented by ill health from attending the convention.

—The Detroit Convention heard, with great enthusiasm, that the Louisiana Purchase Exposition authorities at St. Louis had offered the Music Hall, on Olive Street, between 13th and 14th Streets, lighted, janitored, and if need be heated, free of cost to us for our national conventions in 1904, and also the Coliseum, under the same roof, for Sunday afternoon communion service. Of course the vote was unanimous to come to St. Louis next year, and to accept this generous offer of the World's Fair people. They also offer us a "day" in honor of the convention, which, in

IS YOUR STOMACH ON A STRIKE?

There is Nothing to Prevent You Employing a Substitute to Do its Work.

There is such a thing as forbearance, ceasing to be a virtue even in the case of one's stomach. There is no question but that some stomachs will stand a great deal more wear and tear and abuse than others, but they all have their limit and when that limit is reached, the stomach must be reckoned with as sure as fate. The best way and really the only effective way to treat your stomach when it rebels is to employ a substitute to do its work. This will give the weakened and worn-out organ an opportunity to rest and regain its strength and health.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets relieve the stomach of its work by taking up the work and doing it just as one set or shift of workmen relieves another. They actually digest the food in just the same manner and just the same time as the digestive fluids of a sound stomach do. In fact, when dissolved in the stomach, they are digestive fluids for they contain exactly the same constituents and elements as the gastric juice and other digestive fluids of the stomach. No matter what the condition of the stomach is, their work is just the same. They work in their own natural way without regard to surrounding conditions.

The stomach being thus relieved by Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, is restored and renewed by Nature and the rest of the human body does not suffer in the least by reason of its failure to perform its work.

A Wisconsin man says: "I suffered the pangs of dyspepsia for 10 years. I tried every known remedy with indifferent results until I was told of the remarkable cures of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. I bought a box, began taking them and forgot I had a stomach. Three boxes cured me completely. I have had no trouble whatever for a year and have an appetite like a harvest hand and can eat anything that is set before me without fear of bad results."

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50c. a box. The druggist never fails to have them in stock because the demand for them is so great and so pronounced that he cannot afford to be without them. People who could not get them of one druggist would go to another and would get in the habit of buying their other drugs there as well as their Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

itself, would be a great advertisement. Why not name Saturday, Oct. 15, which will be the Saturday included in our convention dates, Oct. 13-20.

—J. B. Briney, editor of Briney's Monthly, is to become one of the editors of the Christian Companion, after Jan. 1, and is to remove to Louisville, Ky., by that time. This will add materially to the editorial strength of the paper and not less we hope to its usefulness in extending the kingdom of God. Brother Briney is a vigorous writer and when he turns the power of his logic against what is false and evil in the church or in the world, his pen is a potent instrument for good.

—Edward L. Ely has become settled in his new pastorate at Atchison, Kan., in the house occupied by his predecessor, W. S. Priest. His wife, Sister Jennie Ely, writes: "We have begun our labors in our new field, and have received such a hearty welcome, and so many expressions of good will, we feel that here and now is our opportunity to accomplish much for the Master." We feel sure the opportunity will be wisely improved.

—The Ossian (Ind.) News speaks in high praise of a lecture in that town by L. H. Stine on "Four Lights of History." The "Four Lights" are said to be Luther, Wesley, Calvin and Campbell. The papers speak of it as a scholarly, and yet profoundly interesting popular lecture. The lecturer showed that Luther stood for "Justification," Calvin for the "Sovereignty of God," Wesley for "Witness of the Spirit," and Campbell for "Unity of Faith." This would be a good winter lecture for the churches, and would have a distinct educational value.

—"The First Christian Church at Atchison, Kan., gave a reception to their new pastor, Edward L. Ely, and wife, on Tuesday evening, Oct. 13. Although it was a rainy night, about 200 were in attendance. After a short musical program, an address of welcome on behalf of the ministers of Atchison and the Christian Church was delivered by Dr. Boyle, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, which was responded to by Brother Ely in a short but feeling address. After every one present had had an opportunity of shaking hands with their new church leaders, refreshments were served by the young people in the basement of the church, which had been beautifully decorated with autumn leaves. The Atchison Church has in its membership some rare people; they are cordial, enthusiastic, loving and lovable, and promise to the new pastor the same loyal support and co-operation they have given his predecessors.—Mrs. E. L. ELY."

—Now that we have come down from the Mount of Transfiguration, where we have had new and larger visions of Christ and duty, let us seek in Christ's name and power, to cast out all the evil spirits that afflict our fellowmen. One of the first of these to try our strength on is the demon of indifference to state missions—the kind that cometh not out save by prayer and fasting. Like as not this cunning demon will suggest that following our great National Convention we ought to let the subject of missions rest awhile. Be on the lookout for this sort of suggestion, and know whence it cometh. What we want now is "a long pull, a strong pull, and a pull all together" for state missions—the basis of all our missionary operations.

—It was a sad incident of the convention that the president of the American Christian Missionary Society, Allan B. Philpott, was called home soon after delivering his great address, by a telegram announcing the death of a younger brother, who has been very ill for some time. Great sympathy was expressed for both the two brothers, A. B. and J. M. Philpott, the latter being on his way to recovery after a long illness. As if to add sorrow to sorrow, a telegram was received stating that Carey E. Morgan, now in the hospital at Minneapolis, was very low. The convention paused in the midst of its business to offer prayer to God for these bereaved friends, and for the recovery of Brother Morgan. A later telegram announced Brother Morgan to be rapidly improving. Vice-presidents J. H. Mohorter, of Massachusetts, and C. S. Paine, of Nebraska, presided over the remaining sessions of the convention. At another time mention was made of the fact of a number of brethren prevented from being with us by illness, including Bro. J. Z. Tyler, of Cleveland, C. B. Newman, of Indianapolis, George Darsie, of Frankfort, Ky., and John L. Brandt, of St. Louis, whose little boy was very ill with typhoid fever. All these were sent messages of sympathy, and prayer was offered in their behalf. "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples if ye have love one for another."

Attention! Kentucky Superintendents.

We are fast approaching Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. This day corresponds in our home missionary work to Children's Day, and with it makes a great day in Sunday-school work. It comes at a time of the year when the school needs a rally day to increase the zeal and inspiration of the scholars and teachers.

Kentucky is making good headway in the observance of this day. Last year we experienced a gain of 100 per cent both in the number of contributing schools and in the amount given. To reach the standard set by the Paris convention, "195 rally day schools," a still larger gain must be made. But we can do it. We are confidently expecting it. Several of our stronger schools will pass the $50 mark this year.

What are you doing in preparation for this great day? Have you ordered supplies, which are furnished free, from B. L. Smith, Y. M. C.

A. Bldg., Cincinnati, O., and is your school looking forward with pleasure to a glorious day spent in the cause of patriotism and missions? We know that many of our schools can say yes to this question.

Watch for the day, the Sunday before Thanksgiving, with prayer and great expectation!

The Business Men—A Resolution.

At a meeting of the business men of the Christian brotherhood during the sessions of the missionary conventions at Detroit, Oct. 21, the following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we, as business men and members of the Christian Church, in mass meeting assembled, deplore the policy of Christian ministers who engage in promoting illegitimate and questionable business schemes, and that the secretary of this meeting be directed to send a copy of this resolution to the ministerial association of the various states, and request that proper action be taken by them; and that he also furnish a copy of this resolution to our papers.

J. H. FILLMORE, Secretary.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Oct. 23, 1903.

[The above is a timely resolution; but it might have been even more timely if it had been passed a year or two ago. Nearly all this unfortunate speculation has been the result of business inexperience, with no thought of wronging others. But experience has taught that the preacher who engages in selling stocks in untried business schemes, or in promoting such schemes has generally suffered either financial loss, or the loss of influence and power for good, and often both. Let churches support their preachers more liberally, and preachers give themselves without anxiety, to "prayer and the ministry of the Word."—EDITOR.]

A. Campbell on Trine Immersion.

Trine immersionists, some of them honestly and some with less worthy motives, often assert that Mr. Campbell taught that trine immersion was right. It seems that in the first (1844) impressions of the Campbell and Rice debate, Mr. Campbell was made to say, "Not only Mosheim, Neander, but all the historians, as well as Prof. Stuart, trace trine immersion back to the times of the apostles," p. 258. And these copies are in the hands of trine immersionists, largely. My own copy, edition, 1844, does not so read, the error having been corrected. A study of the context shows that "trine" should not have been in the text at all, as Mr. Campbell's remarks two paragraphs above indicate:

"The gentleman will have Tertullian to be a sort of contemporary with the origin of immersion. Trine immersion he ought to have said; for trine immersion and kataklusis, as a favorite word with one or two Greek fathers, were indeed contemporaries; but Tertullian denies that three immersions (not one) had an ancient origin."

If a specific utterance on this point be desired, note this reply to an inquiry bearing on this assertion of trine immersionists:

"The gentlemen affirming that I ever admitted in any debate, or on any occasion, or that I either believed or taught, that trine or tri-immersion, was of divine or apostolic authority, by any divine or apostolic precept or precedent, are mistaken. I have never so believed or taught. With me there is but one Lord, one faith, and one immersion, and that not in but into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit."

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

I hope every auxiliary in Missouri decided at its October meeting upon some definite plan of work, and some definite mark to reach this year, and that all will fall into working harness at once, and lose no precious time in relaxing. These months are our working time; later will come the harvest.

It is well to revise your membership and

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath, and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

Tidings list, strike off names quite hopeless and give your strength to winning others. Decide upon your aim in each for the year. Decide upon the amount and object of your special offering. Lay careful, prayerful plans to attain all. The auxiliary blessed with wise, aggressive officers who hold their executive meetings regularly, will have several practical plans, well thought out and talked over, presented for their approval, and only awaiting action at regular meeting to become effective working plans.

Do not be afraid to make your aims high. Do not let a few over-consecrated sisters keep you from such aims. Many splendid results are lost, because a dear sister who is loved and respected says, "I don't believe in undertaking too much. The burden will fall upon a few. I know what this auxiliary is, etc." Aren't these familiar expressions at times of enthusiastic hopes? They are well-meant, and must not make us impatient. Some of us need a little toning occasionally, but it is better to aim high, and fail to reach our aim, than to be contented to merely drift along.

Mrs. J. L. Moon is in Malden attending the Dexter district convention, which convenes on Oct. 7, 8. We are anxiously awaiting results, and expect several auxiliaries to be added to that district.

The St. Louis Quarterly Union met at Hammet Place on Sept. 29. A royal good time, both spiritually and socially, was enjoyed. The special offering for the district was set at $460, $60 for the two India orphan children, and $400 for Mexican work. An offering of $50 was raised as an expression of our sympathy for Sister Alderman in her bereavement. It was sent direct to her immediately.

What We Saw in City and Sea.

In going to Catalina one must go to San Pedro, some six or seven miles from Long Beach, west, and take one of the small steamers which ply daily between that port and the island. On Monday following the close of the convention, we embarked on the good ship Hermosa, which carries comfortably 600 or 700 passengers. The island lies off the shore 28 miles south. It is nothing more than a mountain range about six miles in average width and 21 miles long.

The passage across the channel was, to the male contingent of our quartet at least, nothing short of a delightful experience. For our ladies, the intermittent qualms of mal de mer robbed the voyage of much of its charm. Seated on the hurricane deck, directly over the propeller, the writer for the first time enjoyed the privilege of gazing upon that of which he had so often read—the beauties of a vessel's wake far out at sea. But no description can ever do justice to the reality. The picture made by the long ribbon of turquoise stretching back between wide bands of ultramarine, to be fully appreciated must be seen.

What is that shining bird that on gauzy wing flashes for a moment before the eyes and as suddenly disappears? Ah! there is another, and it is not a bird, but a fish—a flying fish. They are numerous now, and it is interesting to watch them leap from the crest of a wave, spread their long, gauzy pectoral fins and by a series of kicks with their tails against the crests of the waves, gain an elevation and momentum that will sometimes carry them as much as an eighth of a mile. In flying they do not flap the wings, but simply sail along a few feet above the surface, falling with a splash at the end of the flight. Their flights are sometimes taken in playfulness, but more frequently to escape the jaws of a relentless enemy. Often when watching the graceful flight of these interesting little creatures our pleasures would be marred, if we could only see beneath the surface, by the sight of a large fish keeping pace with them in their flight and seizing them in his cruel jaws as soon as they fall.

But three charming hours have passed by, and we are drawing near to the precipitous walls of Santa Catalina. Looking ahead we behold Avalon—charming Avalon—sitting with her back against the towering pillars of her mountain home and with her white toes touching the limpid waters that lave the sands of her crescent beach. The musical notes of our steam siren are caught up by every mountain side and repeated with startling distinctness. The propeller is stopped and our good ship, under her own momentum, glides to her pier in the beautiful little harbor. A great stream of humanity pours over her side and melts away into the little city whose population changes with every passing day. Soon we are comfortably located in rooms overlooking the quiet little harbor covered with its flotilla of small boats of all descriptions. As we sat at close of dav and gazed upon it, the beauty and sweetness of it all filled our hearts with emotions too deep to be put into words. I can only say to those who would know what it is like, "Go and see! go and see!"

But if the view above the surface of the sea is interesting, what shall I say of a look down into its depths? First among the many interesting features of Santa Catalina are doubtless the "marine gardens." A perfect view of these is obtained by means of glass bottom boats. These are of two varieties: small rowboats and naptha launches that will carry 50 passengers. These boats are constructed with water-tight compartments running around a central aperture the length of the interior of the boat and about 15 inches in width. Into this aperture, the walls of which rise to the height of the gunwales of the boat, is fitted an adjustable box which has long panes of glass that rest on the surface of the water flush with the bottom of the boat and forming a part of it—but not an essential part for floating purposes; for if by any accident the glass should get broken the boat would still float. If the surface of the sea were perfectly smooth, glass bottom boats would not be needed; but it never is, so in order to see down into the depths we must have a glass to iron out a perfectly smooth surface, thus doing away with refraction and making the submarine regions to the depth of nearly 100 feet as plainly visible as are the objects that are reflected in the face of a perfect mirror. By the aid of such a submarine telescope as this, we spent some most thrillingly delightful hours

In an interesting peep
At the depths of the deep.

Our explorations were scarcely begun before I realized that we had not brought along anything like a sufficient supply of adjectives and exclamations, and as they are not furnished by the boat companies, I did not know what we should do until it occurred to me that adjectives and exclamations, like some sermons and prayers, can be oft repeated when the exigencies of the case demand it. We managed to get along, but when we got back these parts of speech were worn as smooth as the pebbles on the beach—especially those used by Brother Hall and the ladies!

Seen through the glass-bottom boat, the little harbor that looks so clean and sweet on the surface, bears a striking resemblance to a vacant lot in the "Cabbage Patch" quarter of country towns. There on the gray, sandy bottom, 30, 50 and 75 feet below the surface, we see bits of rope, battered tin cans, pieces of broken pottery, an old, rusty stove, a gunnysack, the hulk of a sunken sailboat, and many other such things. Playing among these as children and chickens play among the debris of a dirty back yard, we saw the various forms of submarine life.

A little farther out we came to the "marine gardens." Here we saw the kelp (macrocystis pyrifera) a dark, vine-like seaweed that attaches itself to the rocks and supported by the air-filled bulbs that are distributed at intervals of a foot or more throughout its entire length, stands erect sometimes 100 feet tall, swaying gracefully to the gentle touch of the restless tides. Here is a field of "Mermaid's Bridal Veil," a fine, long seagrass of mingled green and silver hues most beautiful to look upon. Down close to the bottom clinging great beds of fluffy "sea-violets" are seen in full bloom. There a spray of coral lifts its rigid arms. There on a sunlit spot of sand lies a sea cucumber, a snail-like animal that bears a most striking resemblance to that common vegetable. Fastened to a rock, and looking like a chrysanthemum in full bloom, may be seen the sea anemone—a flower that is not a flower, but an animal as beautiful as a flower and scarcely distinguishable from one. Close by it creeps a star-fish, not rigid as when seen in the curio store, but soft and flexible. Hiding in the angle of a mass of rocks we see the purple spines of the sea urchin. That oval lump clinging so tightly to the smooth surface of that rock is an abalone whose shell, when polished, is found to be pure mother-of-pearl, and is worth from 50 cents to $5.00, according to color and size. What is that queer, flat, little fish swimming on its side so close to the sandy bottom? That is the sand-dab, and although there is only a mouthful of him when fried, he will cost you 35 cents. That dapper little fish, about the size of a man's finger, is the walking fish—so called because he uses his long, flexible fins as feet when on the bottom, where he spends most of his time. Oh, what kind of a fish is that? The blue one covered with shining violet spots? That is the electric fish, so called because he has the power to stun another fish by emitting an electric shock. What a little beauty he is! like a star in the depths. See that magnificent goldfish! He will weigh five pounds, and he's as yellow as gold, not red like the little fellows seen in glass jars. That bright blue fellow down among the kelp is the blue-eyed perch. A beauty he is, to be sure. That dark blue fish with the beetling brow is the sheep-head. All these things, and many more, we saw through the glass-bottom boat.

W. H. BAGBY.

JEFFERSONIAN SIMPLICITY.

Thos. Jefferson, third president of these United States, was skeptical of the science of medicine, believing in permitting nature to re-establish order in the system when any function was deranged, and discussed the subject frequently, with the same interest and earnestness that he did theology and politics.

"I believe," he said, "that there are certain substances by which, applied to the living body, either internally or externally or both, nature can be assisted, and by such assistance accomplish in a short time what Nature otherwise would do slowly."

The Vita-Ore remedy, with which the readers of this publication are largely familiar, is offered by its discoverer and proprietors as an aid to Nature, to assist in the natural healing and recuperating processes. It is itself a product of Nature, a geological discovery, mined from the ground as are gold and silver, different from anything which has ever been offered of a remedial character, and as such should commend itself to even those most prejudiced against the use of advertised treatments. It contains in its composition free iron, sulphur and magnesium, elements ideally calculated to, as Jefferson says, "assist nature." The fair and liberal offer to send one month's treatment on trial, made in these columns by the proprietors (Theo. Noel Co., Chicago), is certainly most deserving of consideration.

Dedication and Harvest Home Jubilee.

The First Christian Church of St. Louis, in keeping with the spirit of the World's Fair city, has been unusually progressive during the past year, and in order to accommodate its increasing membership and general attendance has found it necessary to "enlarge its borders." Owing to its limited space it was impracticable to build an addition to the church, neither was it deemed wise to sell out and locate elsewhere. So the next best thing was considered and adopted, namely, remodeling the auditorium. This has been done with the result that the seating capacity of the church is now in round numbers, 1,200. The work was accomplished by a strenuous effort on the part of the pastor, loyally supported by the official board and congregation.

The church as remodeled was dedicated Sunday October 4, Rev. Jno. L. Brandt, the pastor, delivering the dedicatory address and making the appeal for pledges to meet the expense incurred by the work. At this service and subsequently more than $1,000 was pledged, making a total of nearly $5,000 for the building fund, or $9,000 for all purposes, pledged in the past year.

Since the First Church is the pioneer of the Christian churches of the city, serving as a mother church to the other congregations, it was deemed fitting to have a "Harvest Home Jubilee" service, and bring together at the "Old Home" the 200 members who are now worshipping with other churches of the city. The success of this service was largely due to Brother W. H. McClain, the senior elder of the congregation.

A more distinguished body of ministers and laymen were never before assembled on the platform of any of our churches in St. Louis. Brother J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST presided over the meeting. Those who took part in the service were Howard T. Cree, S. B. Moore, F. G. Tyrrell, J. H. Garrison, W. H. McClain, W. Davies Pittman and E. T. McFarland.

The feast of good things enjoyed from the pulpit was seconded by the social good time in the church parlors at the close of the program, in which the sisters of the church proved themselves most efficient aids and equals.

The First Christian Church of St. Louis holds a unique position. It has been a downtown church for many years and is becoming more so every day. Yet, it is holding its own as but few of the downtown churches of the city are doing. The problems presented to a pastor for solution are many and difficult. He cannot hope for a settled congregation. It will always be transient, located as we are in a district made up of boarding houses, schools and business houses. Converts are made to serve largely in other churches. Quoting from Brother McClain's Harvest Home Jubilee address, "During the past ten years more than a thousand members have gone out from the First Church to other fields of labor, and nearly two hundred of them are now actively connected with our sister churches in this city."

Jno. L. Brandt, who has been pastor of the church for the past three years, has aggressively grappled with the problems presented and is hopeful for the future of the church. We are born into the kingdom of God to serve, and whether that service for a church is to build an established congregation or equip disciples for other fields of labor it is accepted by our Redeemer.

A Tribute to Henry F. Schell.

Died at Irvington, Ind., in the 81st year of his age, Henry F. Schell, of Somerset, Pa., while on a visit to his son, Prof. H. Stewart Schell. During his illness all that loving hearts and willing hands could do was done for him, and all his children were present with him in his last hours. His remains were taken by them to his home in Pennsylvania, where the dear father was laid to rest beside his sainted wife, Rose Stewart Schell, who preceded him to the better land fourteen years ago. The funeral was held at his late residence in Somerset, and the words of comfort spoken then were by Bro. Peter Vogel, a friend of many years.

He leaves to mourn his loss two honored daughters, Mrs. M. M. Cochran, of Uniontown, Pa., and Mrs. John F. Nichol, of Somerset, Pa., and the worthy son above named, now principal of the public schools of that city; two grandsons and two brothers, Charles L. Schell, one of the elders of the church in Beatrice, Neb., and Rev. W. H. Schell, a consecrated minister of the gospel in Washington, D. C.

Brother Schell was widely known and much loved "for his work's sake." His was a beautiful spirit in its marked unselfishness. Avoiding all public display, and many times in great secrecy, his benefactions in behalf of the unfortunate and the poor amounted to thousands of dollars. His gifts in support of the Master's cause, that he loved so well, were generous and never failing.

Seventy years he was Christ's disciple, and fifteen years of that time he served as deacon and as many years as elder in the far-famed Somerset Church, and in both instances he magnified his office, not by naming his "authority," but by making his work attractive in devoted "service."

Rheumatism Cured Without Medicine

Treatment FREE—On Approval

Every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can try FREE a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, famed all over the world for their cures of every curable kind of rheumatism—chronic or acute, Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter where located or how severe. They almost always cure, so the makers decided to take all the risk. Try the Drafts. You don't send a penny until you are satisfied with the help you get. They are safe and comfortable—far better and surer than any medicine.

Magic Foot Drafts work like Magic. Cured patients tell us they perform miracles. They do not. They are scientific—logical. The foot pores, the largest in the body, are located over rich nerve and vascular centers. The Draft on the foot acts through them on every inch of the body—curing Rheumatism no matter where located. Our booklet makes the reason clear. 68 per cent of the nitrogen in the sweat absorbed by Magic Foot Drafts is in the form of the poison Urea (uric acid) which causes Rheumatism. But we don't ask you to believe even our thousands of cured patients—we will cure you. If you have Rheumatism, send us your name and we will send you a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, free on approval. If you are satisfied with the benefit received, then send us one dollar for the Drafts. If not, keep your money. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Company, S I 31 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Michigan. Send no money.

Under the tuition of Judge J. S. Black, he entered the legal profession, and the members of the Somerset bar attended his funeral in a body and afterwards passed resolutions of respect. Hon. F. J. Kooser, the president judge of the court, in open court said: "I doubt if he has ever had a neighbor in the community whom he has wronged in the slightest degree, by word or deed. . . . In loving his neighbor as himself, and in doing as he would be done by, Henry F. Schell was a model." In the charming spirit of the Master he seemed to have one supreme thought and one controlling, holy desire concerning every person whom he ever knew or saw; "I desire to help you to grow as beautiful as God meant you to be, when he thought of you first." The world is forever sweeter, better, happier, because he lived and wrought and suffered and wept, and in the conflicts of this life he was not vanquished, but victor.

The writer and our dear brother married sisters, who were much devoted to each other and between whom no cloud of estrangement ever passed. When a boy in my teens and he a man in the active business of a public life, my heart was drawn to him. When the years of manhood came, our hearts were near to each other, and for the period of thirty-five years, hundreds of letters were exchanged. Our heart-strings became intertwined, and not one emotion of bitterness or envy ever tarnished or touched these sacred chords, but they were ever vibrant with the most tender feelings of the soul.

In the last conscious hours of this life, two beautiful angels must have visited him: the one the angel of memory and the other the angel of hope; one with the sweet music of heaven in his voice must have said: "You have fought a good fight, you have finished your course, you have kept the faith;" the other sang to him the gladdest, grandest anthem that ever thrilled the soul of man in his dying hour: "Henceforth there is laid up for you a crown of righteousness which the Lord, the righteous Judge, will give you at that day, and not to you only, but also unto all them who love his appearing."

Extracts from the Fifteenth Annual Report of the Board of Church Extension.

The close of the fifteenth year's work of your board of Church Extension is the best in its history in church building. Eighty congregations have been helped in the completion of their buildings, and six lots have been purchased, making eighty-six loans closed, aggregating $97,668.69. In addition the board has granted sixty-two loans aggregating $83,575.00 that will be closed when satisfactory arrangements have been made.

Receipts through Cor. Sec.	$ 43,147.20
Interest collected by Treasurer . . .	$ 13,994.82
Returns on loans	$ 45,137.63

Total receipts from all sources $102,279.65

The encouraging feature is a gain of $2,105.30 from the churches and a gain of eighty-eight in the number contributing. We are grateful for this gain, but the fact still remains that less than half as many churches contribute to Church Extension as to Home and Foreign Missions. There is yet a great work to be done by this board and our pastors in bringing the churches face to face with their duty to this important work.

■ We have fallen behind in receipts from individuals this year, $248, the total receipts from five year pledges being $4,753. In the seventh year of this Board's work we received $15,217 from five year pledges, which was the largest amount ever received in payments on five year pledges. About eight years ago the churches began to desire the discontinuance of the five year pledge taking during the visits of the corresponding secretary, stating that their preference was to make their annual offerings to this work on the appointed day. The annual offerings have improved from that time. The seventh year 700 churches sent $7,196.39. This year 1,155 churches sent $19,740.94. The offerings from the churches must now be our main income. The board ceased to take five year pledges four years ago.

The receipts to the annuity fund this year have not been so large as last year. The receipts this year are $16,902.75, a falling off of $673.50.

The annuity plan in our Church Extension work will become popular the more it is understood. The board can pay six per cent on annuities and find prompt investment at the same rate of interest. Churches that we cannot help with four cent money from the general fund are glad to get annuity money at six per cent and be in the hands of the brotherhood by aid of funds controlled by this board. If aged brothers and sisters are intending to leave money to this fund at their death it will be to their advantage to give it to the Church Extension Fund upon the annuity plan. We receive gifts of $100 or more, from persons who are over fifty years of age, and pay a uniform rate of six per cent in semi-annual payments until the time of the death of the annuitant. The income to the annuitant is regular; no time or money is lost by reinvestment; there are no taxes to pay; the money is building churches while earning the income for the annuitant, and at death the money is where the donor wants it to be without any contest of the will.

Up to September 30, 1903, there have been ninety-three gifts on the annuity plan and there is $87,880.45 in the fund.

If money can not be given to this fund while you live, you can arrange to give through your will. The board has received $1,368.22 from bequests during the year, which is $1,506.00 less than last year.

Every individual and every congregation in our great brotherhood should feel it not only an obligation, but a great privilege, to help in this indispensable work that is now well begun and is a demonstrated success. The funds entrusted to this board are manifestly put into its hands for distribution. However, the board is not merely a distributing agent whose business it is to see that funds reach an appointed destination; it is accountable for the wisdom with which the gifts of the churches are used, and upon its shoulder rests the responsibility of deciding what field, when the resources are insufficient to compass the demands, will suffer least if they are withheld. Often the board must discriminate between claims both of which cannot be fully met. It is pleasant to recall with what unselfish readiness the churches generally, even when disappointed, appreciate the situation, and without complaint take upon themselves burdens and borrow at high rates and on short time in order that inadequate funds may be more widely distributed, or go to help the weaker brother.

Our board recommends that this work be given a larger place in the hearts of the people. It is a child of our National Missionary Convention and should be supported by every pastor and church that has a missionary conscience. We recommend to the churches, that, at the beginning of the calendar year, when you are planning your work, you give Church Extension its rightful place. When prayer and thoughtful consideration shall have taken the place of neglect, no church, that names the name of Christ, will refuse to make an offering each year. Let us continue our efforts to make this fund the great power that it can be, in the permanent establishment of congregations that plead for the One Church on the One Foundation.

Facts About Foreign Missions.

The following telling facts are gleaned from the annual report of the Foreign Christian Missionary Society presented to Detroit, Mich., Monday October 19.

1. Gains.—The receipts amounted to $210,008, a gain of $31,685, a gain in regular receipts of $28,166. There was a gain from every source of receipts. This is the largest gain in any one year in the twenty eight year's history of the society. And this gain is more than the total receipts in 1885. During the past ten years there has been a gain of 300 per cent.

2. Percentages.—The total gain last year was 18 per cent. The churches as churches gave $79,785, a gain of $11,198 or 16 per cent. The Sunday-schools gave $51,530, a gain of $3,513 or 7 per cent. The Endeavor Societies gave $7,009, a gain of $1,936 or 38 per cent. The individual offerings were $20,100, a gain of $3,789 or 23 per cent. Bequests amounted to $4,985, a gain of $1,998 or 68 per cent. Annuities amounted to $30,930, a gain of $1,519 or 5 and one half per cent. Miscellaneous receipts amounted to $15,607, a gain of $7,728 or 98 per cent.

3. Total Amounts.—The whole amount received since the organization of the society in 1875 is $2,032,833. Certainly a great work has been done at a small cost.

4. The Fields.—The fields cultivated by the Foreign Society are India, China, Japan, Hawaiian Islands, Philippine Islands, Cuba, Africa, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, England and Tibet.

5. The Missionary Force.—The number of missionaries from America, England and Australia is 117; native evangelists and helpers 290, a total of 407, a gain in the whole force during the year of 70 or over 20 per cent.

6. New Missionaries.—Nine new missionaries were sent out as follows: Three to Tibet, one to Japan, two to the Philippine Islands and three to China.

7. Living Link Churches.—Twelve new Living Link Churches have been enrolled during the past year. The total number of Living Link Churches is now 32. A Living Link Church is one that supports a missionary by itself. It requires only $600 to support a missionary.

8. Schools.—The Foreign Society supports thirty nine schools in foreign lands with 2,199 pupils.

9. Medical.—Sixteen hospitals and dispensaries are sustained by the Foreign Society and last year 69,128 patients were treated.

10. Membership.—The total membership of the mission fields is 6,313 and 6,923 are enrolled in Sunday-schools.

HOW TO BE CURED.

WITHOUT PAIN.

Don't wait until you are a helpless invalid, for a seemingly simple case of hemorrhoids, or piles, may, if neglected, rapidly lead to worse. The unnatural formations become tumorous and permanent, and the inflammation grows until abscesses form; the disease burrows into the tissues, forming tubular growth which discharge pus; cancerous conditions, and general gangrenous degeneration appear.

What is needed at the start, or at any stage, is something to soothe this inflammation, reduce the swelling and distension, and at the same time restore the diseased parts to normal condition. These three things are accomplished perfectly by the Pyramid Pile Cure. It checks all progress of the disease, and rapidly returns the affected parts to health, besides relieving at once the pain and fearful irritation.

"I began using Pyramid Pile Cure, and in order to make sure of a cure bought five packages; for the past six weeks I have not been troubled in the least, and I had been bothered for thirty-five years, and had spent more than fifty dollars for different remedies; this is the first permanent help I have had, and no one could feel more grateful that I do." L. M. Williams, Conneaut, Ohio.

Pyramid Pile Cure is sold by druggists generally for fifty cents a package, and we urge all sufferers to write Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich., for their valuable little book describing the cause and cure of piles.

11. Native Contributions.—Contributions from all mission fields amounted to $27,567 and $5,756 was given for missions.

12. Leading States.—Ohio gave last year $32,311; Kentucky comes next with $21,412; then Indiana with $19,795; and next Illinois with $15,164; and fifth Iowa with $14,916. Ohio leads in the number of contributing churches, 321, and in the amount contributed by the churches $11,499. Illinois leads in the number of contributing Sunday-schools, 391, but Ohio leads in the amount given by the Sunday-schools, $8,867. Indiana is second in the number of contributing churches, and also second in the number of contributing Sunday-schools. Kentucky is second in the amount contributed by the churches as churches.

13. Leading Churches.—Fourteen churches gave $500 or more.

THE NEW MISSIONARY YEAR 1903-04.

1. It will be the aim of the society to send out at least twelve new missionaries. They are greatly needed. Can they be found? Shall they be supported?

2. Bible College in India.—The greatest need in India just now is a Bible College in which to train young men for the ministry. This will require $25,000. This amount should be raised at once.

3. Enlargement.—It is hoped the churches as churches will give $100,000 this year; the Sunday-schools $60,000; the Endeavor Societies, $10,000; individual offerings, $25,000; annuities, $40,000; miscellaneous $15,000; total $250,000.

4. The watchword for the new year is "A Quarter of a Million Dollars for Foreign Missions."

Greater Things For Church Extension.

To insure greater things for Church Extension we must first have a greater fund. When this fund was started fifteen years ago, it was thought by some of our wisest men that $100,000 would be a sufficient permanent Church Extension Loan Fund. But when that point was reached our work had so expanded that the quarter million mark had to be reached by the close of 1900. Having in mind still greater things, the cry went up for a "Half million by 1905," and at Omaha last year "A million by 1909." We report $390,000 in the fund at the Detroit Convention, with 741 churches built since the beginning; 300 have paid back their loans in full, and $300,080 have been paid back in returned loans and interest since 1888, when the work was begun.

SOME OF THE GREATER THINGS DONE BY CHURCH EXTENSION ARE:

1. The raising of nearly $400,000 of a permanent fund clear of all expenses.
2. The building of 741 churches that could not have been built except by our aid.
3. The improvement of our church architecture by our catalogue of 150 church plans, with rules and warnings for building committees.
4. We are helping to clear up church titles all over the country.
5. We have stimulated congregations to build that would not, otherwise, have had the courage.

SOME OF THE GREATER THINGS WE WANT TO DO ARE:

1. To have a fund large enough not only to promptly compass the legitimate demands for aid to complete buildings, but, in addition to that, go into new territory and lead the way by purchasing lots early in the history of growing towns and cities.
 2. More building of churches must go on in smaller towns to purify the stream that feeds our cities.
 3. We must build more churches in cities, great and strong, that will catch and turn in the proper direction and save the streams of population constantly flowing into our cities. These times are pregnant with opportunity because of the flood tide of prosperity in our land and because Christian unity is the one subject dearest to Christian hearts.
- Our Plea has had struggles in the past. The present times favor it. The future grows brighter the farther our eyes can see. Let us renew our strength and mount up with wings as eagles, run and not weary, walk and not faint.

Empire State Notes.

With the $100,000,000 barge canal issue before the voters of the state, and "Elijah" Dowie before the people of New York City, we are having interesting times in New York. The people will probably kill the canal issue the first Tuesday in next month, and Dowie is managing his own funeral, so there is hope for us yet. Dr. Parkhurst has said that Dowie's head was twisted, and that settles it. His ecclesiastical melodrama seems to eclipse any three-ring, hippodrome circus that Madison Square Garden has ever listed. Elijah III is even too much for poor Carrie Nation. She thinks he is too sensational! If Dowie's gray matter is addled, he at least has brass. Such monstrous buffoonery in the name of Christianity, is the work of a fool or a mountebank. One is reminded of the words of the wise old professor of theology when he said: "The man who specializes in the fulfillment and regulation of prophecy, is either crazy before he begins, or will be before he gets through."

Things in New York are looking up for a strong forward movement this winter all along the line. We want to make it the best year yet by far, both in the winning of souls and the establishment of new work.

The people here in Elmira, where your correspondent is at present holding a meeting, are just now laying plans to build a fine building next spring and summer. Bro. C. C.

Crawford has done excellent work here. They are a loyal people. They have a fine corner lot and will erect a modern building. There are nearly thirty titheers in the church.

Will help dedicate the new building at Gloversville, Nov. 1, and hold a short meeting there following the dedication. Bro. Joseph Keevil leaves there to take his brother's church in Brooklyn. J. L. Keevil has gone to Tennessee, where he will take work in Milligan College in connection with his pastorate there.

The Second Church, New York, S. T. Willis pastor, will dedicate their fine new building Nov. 1.

Bernard Smith, of Charlottesville, Va., has accepted the pastorate of the Second Church, Rochester, and is already on the field. We welcome him heartily to the state, and predict a splendid work among those excellent people.

We also are glad to welcome Bro. Benj. S. Ferrall, of Illinois, who comes to Jefferson St., Buffalo, following the Detroit convention.

New York has not heretofore had a "State Day," owing to the crowding which a fall convention has caused. Now that the state convention is changed to the last Wednesday in June, we will recognize Nov. 1 as New York day.

We have started out to increase the offerings from our churches for state work one hundred per cent. There is much land to be possessed, and there are giants in the land. If we do not wish to be grasshoppers in their sight, we must double our funds for state work.

Every church in the state ought to recognize Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, Nov. 22. If you have not secured the exercises and banks, send at once to Benj. L. Smith, Cincinnati, Ohio, and get them. If you can't recognize Nov. 22, make it a week or so later. This ought to be as great a day as Children's Day in June. Half the offering comes back to us for state work.

STEPHEN J. COREY,
Cor. Sec. and Evangelist.

Dedication at French Lick Springs, Indiana.

French Lick Springs, Orange county, Ind., is one of the most popular health and pleasure resorts in the state. The Disciples there have just completed, paid for and dedicated a new house of worship.

The writer dedicated it on last Lord's day. Although the weather was very unfavorable, yet the attendance was good and the giving liberal. More than enough money was raised to pay all debts. At the close of the sermon at night four persons united with the church. Bro. A. C. Trusty preaches for the church part of the time. It was a day of much rejoicing.

Harrison, O., Oct. 20, 1903.

Special dispatch to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

JOPLIN, MO., Oct. 25.—Harlow-Ridenour meeting twenty-second day. Two hundred and twenty-eight additions.—W. F. TURNER.

Kansas City, Oct. 22.—The South Prospect Avenue Church will pay off its debt of $4,120 early in November. They have nearly the whole amount subscribed. The Hyde Park (west part) Church will be open before the close of the year.—T. P. HALEY.

ARKANSAS.—Siloam Springs, Oct. 23.—We are in the midst of a splendid meeting here. Bro. J. A. Minton, of Oklahoma, is "contending earnestly for the faith which was once for all delivered unto the saints" every night, and is doing it royally. So far we have had 30 accessions. Large crowds, fine interest, prospects very bright. The old Jerusalem gospel is bound to win.—PERCY G. CROSS, minister.

Waldron, Oct. 20.—Bro. J. F. Powers, of Kansas, by request, spent a week with us. We find him an able young man and gave him a unanimous call to labor for us the coming year. He expressed himself as being well pleased with our county. First as to the prospective work for the church, and second, the opportunities to secure good, cheap homes for those who will come and help to build for life and eternity.—W. A. STREATOR.

GEORGIA.—Savannah, Oct. 16.—Almost ten months have passed since we began laboring with the church at this place. During this time the one thought kept constantly before this grand band of workers has been a better presentation in our meeting house. At this writing this work is under way. The work consists, principally, in remodeling auditorium—doing over the walls, ceiling and pews—new carpet, remodeling parlor, making one room sufficiently large to accommodate prayer-meeting, Sunday-school and all minor meetings and painting both church building and parsonage. When we return to our home we shall expect even a better condition of things than that we are able to report at this time. Expect to return about Nov. 8. Our audiences have been growing steadily from the first, 44 additions to date. Bible-school on the upward tendency. Last Lord's day the primary department report showed 37 enrolled and 37 present. The ladies of the congregation have pledged to raise $1,000 on the repairs; of this amount about $225 has been paid over to the church treasurer. Our intention is to open the winter's work with a two weeks' meeting, to be followed with cottage prayer-meetings, public prayer meetings and public Bible class. The intention is to organize a protracted effort throughout all lines of the work that shall continue through the winter and year 1904, God willing.—A. R. MILLER.

IDAHO.—Moscow, Oct. 20.—Last Lord's day one confession. Lord's day before one confession—one from Baptists, one by letter. Lord's day before that one confession.—ELLIS B. HARRIS.

ILLINOIS.—Long View, Oct. 19.—Our meeting here 14 days old, with 16 added; will continue a few days longer, then we go to Lebanon, Ky. J. W. Newlin, a postal clerk, is the pastor of the church and doing fine work. He stands by the evangelist and is a power among his people.—EVANGELIST BENNETT.

Granite City, Oct. 19.—Five additions at regular services in the last two weeks. Three fine young men: one by confession, one from the M. E.'s and one by letter. These all work in the factories or foundries here. Also two Christian women by statement.—M. MCFARLAND, pastor.

Fisher, Oct. 12.—Work here is prospering. We have just received a unanimous call for second year's work. Are remodeling our church building to accommodate our crowds. Forty-three added in 10 months. Church united and happy.—S. ELWOOD FISHER.

Golden Gate, Oct. 17.—Our state evangelist for the seventh district, R. Leland Brown, of Newman, Ill., has just closed a meeting for us of one month's duration. We secured a tent and usually had a large crowd of interested listeners, but had only two additions by relation. We are convinced that scores believed the doctrine but would not move to obedience, and we have to be satisfied only that good seed was sown to be gathered in the future. Brother Brown preaches the old gospel with earnestness and power and will do great good. He has gone to Shiloh, in Edwards county, near Samsville.—G. L. CHILDRRESS.

Waukegan, Oct. 23.—Recently baptized an old and respected citizen of this place who has been connected with the Presbyterian Church for many, many years. There are a number of Waukegan people at the Detroit Convention.—B. S. FERRALL.

Sterling, Oct. 23.—Good meeting in progress here: 5 additions thus far. L. O. Lehman is the evangelist, W. E. Spicer pastor. We have charge of the music.—GUY B. WILLIAMSON AND WIFE.

Carlinville, Oct. 24.—T. J. Shuey is in a meeting here which started off with good enthusiasm and interest.

INDIANA.—Indianapolis, Oct. 19.—The North Park Church here, of which Austin Hunter is pastor, will enlarge their building yet this fall so as to almost double its capacity. One hundred and fifteen have been added in the last 18 months. They are now in a meeting assisted by A. L. Orcutt.

State Line, Oct. 21.—Six added by baptism in a short meeting at Old Union, Vermilion county, Ill. Preach there one Lord's day each month; 14 added there since July 1.—CHAS. E. SHULTZ.

Knightstown, Oct. 16.—One baptism before the prayer-meeting service this week. We are having electric lights put in the church instead of the old gas lights.—ALLEN T. SHAW, pastor.

IOWA.—Des Moines, Oct. 21.—Just closed a 30 days' meeting for J. D. Corbitt at Luther. Twenty-two additions during my absence. Mrs. Boggess filled the pulpit here at Park Avenue. She had 9 additions: 6 confessions Sunday. The people are highly pleased with the outlook for good work. We are just finishing our 8 room parsonage, the first to be built by our churches in the city.—E. F. BOGGESS.

Oak Grove, Oct. 19.—Meeting conducted here by J. E. Dinger, of Cedar Rapids, Ia., closed last night with a good interest. Eleven additions the last eight days.

Creston, Oct. 19.—We closed a four weeks' meeting Oct. 16, conducted by Bro. A. Martin, with 10 additions, including three just before the meeting began. Of these, five were by confession, the others by letter and statement. The small results were chiefly due to the want of available material, the large ingathering of last winter and the gleanings of the summer leaving few within reach. Brother Martin, almost uniformly successful, is a strong, scriptural and entertaining preacher and a companionable gentleman. Taken as a series, his sermons are not easily excelled. The last night was given to a lecture that drew a full house and made a fine impression.—R. H. INGRAM.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Nowata, Oct. 18.—Am sorry to say that our meeting has been postponed indefinitely on account of scarlet fever in our midst. Five cases reported by the Board of Health up to to-day. Can't tell just what the next few days will bring us. Let us hope that the fever will run out and that our meeting will commence at an early day.—WILL. A. ATKISSON.

KANSAS.—Wellington, Oct. 19.—One made the good confession here yesterday. We began a meeting Nov. 1 with M. Lee Sorey as evangelist.—H. M. BARNETT.

Independence, Oct. 17.—Seven additions lately at La Fontaine, Kan. One Holiness preacher and one Catholic.—J. W. FERRELL.

MISSOURI.—Bowling Green, Oct. 17.—I closed a two weeks' meeting Oct. 13, at "Elm Grove" church, Lincoln county, Mo. There were five additions. Brother J. H. Thomas, who labors regularly for the church, did the baptizing and was in every way a true "yoke fellow." I am sure the conversions were only a part of the good results of the meeting. The church there, like many, yes, very many of our country churches, has been living in neglect of the weekly worship; only meeting when they have a preacher to meet with them. There is a sad want of a real Christian conscience in regard to the Lord's day worship.—E. J. LAMPTON.

Warrensburg, Oct. 18.—I closed a ten days' meeting at Rich Hill, Mo., the place where I did my first preaching. There were 18 additions. Also raised money to employ a pastor.—KING STARK.

Jasper, Oct. 17.—Closed a 20 days' meeting here. Bro. J. P. Adcock, of Pilot Point, Tex., did the preaching; 18 added; one from the Baptists, 11 by letter and statement, six by baptism.—O. W. JONES.

Joplin, Oct. 17.—The Harlow-Ridenour meeting at First Church continues with great interest. Now 13 days and 125 added. Whole community stirred. Turning people away every night from largest church in the city.—W. F. TURNER.

Lawson, Oct. 15.—I have recently held a meeting here, with my son's assistance, of three weeks' duration; 13 added.—J. W. MONSER.

Potosi, Oct. 19.—We had two additions here yesterday.—I. B. DODSON.

There's nothing better than Scott's Emulsion after the grip. When the fever is gone the body is left weak and exhausted; the nervous system is completely run down and vitality is low.

Two things to do: give strength to the whole body and new force to the nerves. Scott's Emulsion will do it; contains just what the worn-out system needs.

Rich blood, healthy flesh, resistive force, more and better nourishment are what Scott's Emulsion supplies to the convalescent.

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl Street, New York.

41 additions; 30 by baptism, 7 from the Baptists, three from the Methodists, one from the Presbyterian.—W. H. HOBBS.

Memphis, Oct. 21.—Our meeting closed last Sunday night. Had 42 additions to the church; 27 by obedience, one from Baptists and 14 by letter and statement. Never saw more intense interest from beginning to the close. Bro. C. E. Millard assisted the pastor. His illustrated songs were very helpful and he did us much good in singing the gospel truth. We praise God and press on for greater things.—M. J. NICOSON.

California, Oct. 22.—Bro. Thos. J. Thompson, who has just closed a year's pastorate with the church here, began a meeting at Fortuna, Mo., on the first Lord's day in October, closing Monday night, Oct. 18. The immediate results were one by statement, one from the Baptists reclaimed, one from the Presbyterians and two by confession and baptism; five in all. We consider the meeting a grand success from the fact that the additions represent the very best element in and around the village. All of them except one are wives of irreligious, but splendid men, and we hope for still better things in the near future. The gospel still has power to save when presented in its purity and simplicity as Brother Thompson presents it.—P. D. GUNTER.

Kidder, Oct. 23.—One addition here since last report. We are in a protracted meeting at Taggart, which is 12 days' old, with 25 additions. Expect to organize here next Sunday.—C. E. HUNT AND WIFE, evangelists.

St. Joseph, Oct. 22.—I closed a meeting with the King Hill Christian Church in South St. Joseph, Oct. 18, with 16 accessions to the church, most of whom were received by letter and statement, one being baptized. That is comparatively a new work, and most of our effort was toward gathering up the members who had not yet united with the church there. We feel that if all the church will co-operate there is an opportunity for a great work in that part of the city. I am giving them two Lord's days in the month and as much pastoral care as I can. The work is growing nicely.—N. ROLLO DAVIS.

MICHIGAN.—Saginaw, Oct. 23.—We closed our work last night at this place. We have never found it harder to say goodbye to any work than to these dear people. On returning from the National Convention, our young people gave us a glad surprise. To wife they gave a set of imported Japanese dishes, to myself a baptismal suit and purse. In the latter the older ones joined. We go to Chicago for a few days, thence to Milkes Barre, Pa., to begin a new work entirely.—E. E. COWPERTHWAIT.

NEW MEXICO.—Carlsbad, Oct. 15.—Our meeting here is progressing nicely, considering this town of saloons and gambling houses. There have been to date 53 accessions; four by confession. We will be able to organize a strong church, and build a good building at once.—D. B. TITUS.

Carlsbad, Oct. 21.—Our meeting with Brother and Sister Brickert, of Houston, Tex., closed last night. The result is a congregation of 57 members, a Sunday-school of 48, an Endeavor Society of 20, a C. W. B. M. of 9 members, and a strong Ladies' Aid Society. They have employed the writer as pastor, and expect to begin the erection of the very best church building in the city immediately. There were but four by confession, but the getting together of our own people in this health resort place was quite as difficult as the other. A great work was accomplished, and a greater one started. This was made possibly larger because Bro. W. R. Allison had made a canvass and knew the standing, religious and otherwise of almost every individual in the whole community. We are striving to make it spiritually healthful for the hundreds who are flocking to this great irrigated valley, with its perfect climate, so beneficial to those suffering with pulmonary troubles.—D. B. TITUS.

OHIO.—Chardon, Oct. 20.—The church here has been very busy the past year. Bro. Harrison F. Miller is our pastor. He is not only an able speaker and a good pastor, but a man of more than ordinary executive ability, as he has proven in his work of managing the extensive repairing upon the church building the past summer. The Ladies' Aid Society has assisted him nobly by furnishing the means to carry forward the work. The men of the church have put on a new roof. The ladies, together with the help of two good solicitors, have raised the past year $862.26. This money has been used to place steel ceiling upon the auditorium and new paper upon the chapel. A new furnace has been put in. The whole interior, including seats, has been painted. A new choir platform has been erected. The exterior of the building is now being painted. When all is completed, the sum of $1,350 will have been expended. All this means a vast amount of work for a few, as the active membership is only about 150. The Ladies' Aid has given many entertainments. A "Sock Social" netted the society $92, the "Birthday Party" $63, and the "Dollar Experience Meeting" $94. Brother Miller donated 120 days' time to the work, about half of it being expended in hard labor. He wired the house for electric lights with his own hands. One young lady and her class raised the money for the lights. At the annual business meeting each society had a good report of the year's work. The sewing circle had sent several boxes and barrels of clothing to orphanages, homes and the Salvation Army. The C. W. B. M. had kept up its dues. The Sunday-school had done good work and sent its Children's Day collection for missionary work. The Christian Endeavor had helped to pay the pastor and sent a bushel of flowers to the Hiram House in Cleveland. The state work and Church Extension had also been remembered by the church. While the repairing was being done the members visited the other three churches of the town, announcing each Lord's day where we would go the next; so we held together very well. Now that the church is a fit place in which to worship, we are planning some visiting among the members, and will try and build up the spiritual work of the church the coming year.—MRS. E. D. KING.

OKLAHOMA.—Morman, Oct. 19.—We closed our short meeting at this place on Sunday night, Oct. 18. Bro. W. A. Wherry did the preaching and did it well. We had four added by confession and baptism and one by statement. Three confessions the last day.—J. G. CREASON.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Sandy Lake, Oct. 24.—I am to begin a meeting at Shamburg, (Pleasantville P. O.) Pa., Oct. 30. It is a mission point. We hope to be able to plant the cause of Christ there.—THOMAS MARTIN.

TEXAS.—Paris, Oct. 19.—Our meeting with Jno. W. Marshall and Talmage Stanley closed last night. Thirty-eight added during the meeting. Very much good done otherwise. Our congregation is united, hopeful, happy.—G. LYLE SMITH, pastor.

Austin, Oct. 17.—We have recently had 16 more additions to the Central Christian Church of this city: four were by confession and baptism, one from the Baptists and the rest by letter and commendation.—J. W. LOWBER.

Haskell, Oct. 21.—Have just closed a two weeks' meeting, Bro. J. T. McKissick doing the preaching. Members worked diligently. Results: 24 by baptism, four by statement, four by reclamation, two from Methodists, one from Presbyterians.—C. N. WILLIAMS, minister.

The Church and [the] Modern Spirit.

is unmoved. No power can wage successful war with human reason. Before it the serried hosts of armies, the fading scepters of tyrants, the hoary dignity of creeds and the feeble protests of custom will all go down. Christianity, like the North Star, will remain unmoved for a thousand millenniums.

There is another spirit abroad in our day with which the church must reckon—a spirit which, unchecked by the holy influence of religion, may work havoc with the finer ideals of our country. When imperialism set in a few years ago, we all took a much more practical, combative and materialistic view of life. We are told to get rich, to fight, to win the game. To be weak means to be miserable, to be poor a failure. Competition rules everything—education, sport, industry, literature, even the church, for I read the other day in somebody's sermon that the present divisions of the church are warranted because their rivalry insures a salutary activity. These be parlous times for the meek and quiet spirit. The strenuous life is a good thing if tempered by brotherly love; competition alone is savagery. But for the fact that somehow wise counsels generally prevail in our national life, one would not be over rash to say that now we are listening to the distant mutterings of a war between capital and labor. The time has been in this generation when a million homes were asking for bread; we may yet see the day when a million fire-sides will cry for peace. The church has its message for the hour and for all hours and for all the ferments of human society, and it is the old, old message that a man shall love his neighbor as himself. Jesus looked upon a world of struggle and vaulting ambition and said, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." Is religion restraining from evil? Does it purify, direct and inspire man's life? These are pertinent questions. Christianity is devotion to goodness, not simply the savings of one's soul. Its ideal is not getting good things, but becoming good; not the getting of an advantage, but the attainment of righteousness. This splendid gospel of the inner life was never more needed than to-day.

For centuries the nightmare of superstition has clung about the teachings of the church, and yet she has been as a light shining in a dark place. Let her now accept the simpler, clearer, nobler mission, committed to her by our adorable Lord and Master, of being the light of the world, the aider of all who would live by the spirit. She can do little commerce in small explanations. Her ventures are upon the high sea of mystery and faith. Her light is the lamp of conscience, her sanctions the word of Holy Scripture.

Atheism is dead. Its successor is agnosticism, the child of a grave culture. While a few souls in classic shades may soothe their uneventful lives with a dreary negation, the world at large demands the supernatural, demands a sense of God so concrete, warm and helpful, as to put courage into their tragical careers. Such a demand is met by the incarnation, the expression of God's grace. It is only in the light of this truth that any real worth or beauty can attach to our ragged human history or any charm of poetry beguile our life of monotony and care. We are told that this is an age of reason and not of worship.

Jesus made his appeal to the noblest reason, and in the large and liberal sense this has always been the solemn court of God's appeal. The opposite doctrine, that man is of no account, that his powers are too puny, his reason too meager, his moral being too cramped or blurred to constitute a basis of authority, is the shortcut to atheism. If we are no better than the beasts that perish, why a Calvary? why the miracles? why the gospels of the incarnate Son? why the tender and untiring arguments of Jesus? But just here should come a word of caution. Although the authority of reason may not be denied, it is incompetent to solve the mysteries of life. It must be appealed to, but it cannot discover the path of God. It simply accepts the trustworthiness of Jesus, and then it depends upon his unfolding life of truth and principles. Before I commit myself to a mountain guide I must be satisfied that he is able to direct me through the grandeurs of the scene. As soon as I am satisfied on that score my reason trusts the guide. It does not thereby disown its imperial scepter. My reason tells me that Jesus knows enough to guide me through these high places of the soul and rejoices and glorifies itself in splendid submission to the supernatural. This appeal, mind you, is not in the last resort to the reason of single men, but to that broad, illuminated reason of advancing races, not to the blatant skeptic mouthing his criticisms against Christianity, nor to last night's convert at the Salvation Army barracks sputtering out his gratitude for a Savior's rescue, not to the coldly intellectual monsters, but to the royal, munificent men who seek truth and grow by the best standards, and impress their fellows Godward. We go to them, and thus has human reason been an ally to faith. But we cannot rest in the misty theisms of reason, the vacant skies of agnosticism or the severely judicial God of a too dogmatic theology. Our God is superhuman, but clothed with tender loveliness and beauty. He is a Father, and in this conviction we find all the broken and discordant fragments of life brought into an inviolable unity. This creed vibrates with spiritual powers, and touches our varied and jarring natures, as with a magic wand.

No one word properly characterizes the modern spirit. On the side of intellectual culture it is less fastidious, warmer, broader, more accessible to spiritual truth than formerly. In the great universities and centers of training, there is far more hospitality shown to the religion of Jesus than a quarter of a century ago. Current literature, once surfeited with teachings inimical to faith, is now full of consideration for the splendid ideals of the kingdom. Christianity can have no quarrel with reason. The more reason the better. And it behooves the teaching of religion to press its claims with greater confidence upon the intellectual, the cultured and the strong. No fallacy has hurt the church more than the lazy, cowardly plea that God is influential chiefly with the lower masses, and that we must despair of supremacy over the strong and the wise.

The Jesuits won over the best heads and the ablest jurists of Europe because they raised giants of thought who were able to knock at the front door of human nature instead of stealing around to the back door of sniffing emotionalism. The suspicion is abroad that the universities are drifting from the church; if so it is a grievous thing. I cannot believe it. But the institution of learning that proves inimical to faith in this twentieth century, is going to find its walls more and more deserted by the best youth, the strongest and noblest sons and daughters of our American blood. America is a nation whose God is the Lord, and our people, after looking upon the dire results of irreligion in Europe, will not let go the splendid inheritance of faith received from our fathers. Our universities have come out of the bosom of the church. They have all in some sense been founded in the name of religion and for its glory. Surely they will not now turn and smite the mother who gave them birth. No, it is not so. That there have been grounds for criticism and apprehension, I will not deny. But things are coming right. Let our young men fill the halls of learning and get the strength and poise and humility of the scholar, then let them buckle down to hard, even unremunerative service, that they may prove themselves workmen that need not be ashamed. We need learning and acumen in the pulpit to cope with the intellectual progress of our day. We need humble, consecrated men, willing to go anywhere that the Lord God sends them, that the church may answer the needs of the people. And these two things, the spirit of learning and the spirit of humble service, cannot be separated without endless friction, rivalry and failure. Both are kingly qualities and should exist in every man. The hardest problem, however, in connection with the modern spirit, as has been already suggested, lies not upon its intellectual but upon its worldly, money-getting, pleasure-loving side. For this view of life is not simply a tendency, a fault, it is a doctrine, a creed that people openly defend and advocate. Opie Reed says, the man of affairs to-day holds religion in a sort of busy esteem, and when his wife's preacher comes into his office he says, "Well, sir, what can I do for you?" We need a man right there with the courage to say, "Nothing sir. I have come to see if I can do anything for you, for I observe that you are in a bad way and in danger of starving your best life and losing your soul in this unceasing absorption in business. I come, sir, not to ask you to do less business or be less effective in affairs, but to urge you to do it with a different purpose and in a different spirit, and remember you are mortal."

The modern spirit is on the surface restless, strenuous, critical, bent on achievement. Surprised at its accomplishments, its loves to watch the processes of its multiform development. On the intellectual side there is strength and mastery. We live in an age of reason, of intelligence, of fine human sympathy. The deeper spirit of the time is crying out for God. A few things have changed, but death and sin and sorrow are the same. The world needs the great eternal verities of faith.

But to conclude, I feel that as a people we are in a position to speak to our generation all the words of this life. Our advantage, for reasons already noted, is great. We need much yet, of consecration, of power, of confidence. We need to know the word of life which we proclaim, and the people to whom we proclaim it—their difficulties, their sins, their desires and even their tastes. We need to learn how to make preaching helpful, winsome, convincing, to make worship beautiful and satisfying. Life is for most a hard battle, for some it is a dark valley, a vain and empty show. Everyone needs the gospel of the grace of God. How arid and sterile the landscape where no waters flow! How bleak the peaks of rugged granite without a flash of cascade or plunge of torrent! How bare and hueless human life without the streams from the supernatural! Let us rejoice to-day for that river whose streams make glad the city of God.

The modern spirit is no one thing, neither skeptical nor believing, neither intellectual nor practical, neither Christian, Jew or Pagan, but a composite of all these and more. It is what we and all men make it, and if our gospel be as leaven in the lump we shall some day see it predominant in the world's life. Let us affirm without wearying or fainting the external verities, let us make the people hear the same old voices of prophets and sages, of apostles and martyrs, while above them all the sweet evangel of the Nazarene sings its way down into troubled and sin-sick hearts, until the world's spirit shall be a Christian spirit and the kingdom of our God be established from sea to sea and from the rivers unto the end of the earth. Then shall be verified that ancient word—there shall be an handful of corn upon the mountains. But the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon. I have spoken of facing the modern spirit, but as I close let me say that we must face the modern duty. We are gathered in this convention to rejoice over the larger attainment and the larger outlook. Our missionary spirit is rising, our giving is mounting up, and we are sure that this tide will never ebb. Great doors are open to us on every side; the harvest is plenteous, and he that reapeth receiveth wages.

The angel of the forward look is beckoning us on; some follow close up and some at a distance, while some halt and stumble; but finally let us hope that all will be in line, with the watchword: America for Christ and Christ for the world!

Convention Notes.

these unfruitful schemes. He doesn't often give his humor free rein in a public address, but in this instance he allowed it to play like sheet-lightning upon a subject that otherwise might have proved a bit prosaic.

The convention was blessed with a number of gifted singers, including Mrs. Princess Long, late of California, Mrs. J. M. Philputt, Mrs. Powell, of Wabash, Ind., Mrs. Phillips, of Pittsburgh, the Neff sisters, a quartet of Toledo, Ohio, and several other ladies whose names we do not recall, besides brethren not a few. An occasional solo by a sweet singer whose words can be understood, is very good, but the main body of the singing should be congregational. A chairman of a music committee, however, soon finds himself in the way of a resistless tide that sweeps all his plans into confusion.

Detroit is a beautiful city, and it never looked so beautiful as it did last week when its hotels, restaurants, street cars and streets were full of good-looking men and women wearing a piece of ribbon marked "International Christian Missionary Convention." Nor did we hear any complaint of "languidness" by those who kept restaurants and other eating places! See criticism printed elsewhere.

Ex-Congressman and ex-United States Labor Commissioner T. W. Phillips, of Pennsylvania, was present and briefly addressed the convention, presenting Christianity as the only religion which contains forgiveness of sins, and teaches humility, the greatness of service and immortality.

That was a great speech of Hon. O. W. Stewart, on "The Greatest Governmental Problem," and the remembrance of those corralled jack-rabbits, captured and penned by the tender-foot college athlete under the impression that they were lambs and a part of the flock he was herding, ought to inspire temperance workers and voters with the virtue of "persistence" in the good work, against all manner of opposition.

In one respect our conventions differ from those of other religious bodies. We have never been able to get up any spirited contest in the election of officers, not even for the president of the American Christian Missionary Society. This organization, very wisely, changes its president each year, and passes around the honor and responsibility of the position among brethren whose ability, character, age and service entitle them to such recognition. The custom with most religious bodies is to have a number of men nominated, in nominating speeches, and then vote on them by ballot, and this often becomes very exciting. Never but once since the plan of electing by ballot was adopted, has there been more than one candidate nominated. This year Z. T. Sweeney, who for many years served as pastor of the church at Columbus, Ind., and who, under President Harrison, served his country as Consul General to Turkey, and is at present preacher, lecturer and fish commissioner of Indiana, was nominated and elected without opposition. Brother Sweeney will have the honor, probably, of presiding over the largest convention ever held in our history, if all the signs do not fail. He is now President, and may exercise his function throughout the year in stimulating gifts to the society which he represents, and in other ways promoting the welfare of the work of Home Missions.

A New Named Fund For Church Extension.

but is added to the fund semi-annually. The fund being loaned at 4 per cent to be returned in five equal annual installments by the mission church that has been aided to build, is increasing by the interest compounding itself semi-annually. The returns on loans and the going out of the money again to help other churches to build increases the working power of the fund, so that the work done by a Named Loan Fund is something wonderful in the course of a few years.

That the working power of such a fund may be actually known, we publish a statement of the General F. M. Drake Fund, established in February, 1889.

GENERAL F. M. DRAKE.
(Established February 1, 1889.)

Total amt. received from Gen. F. M. Drake.....	$ 5,000 00
Total amt. received from returned loans to Sept. 30, 1903.....	11,097 00
Total amt. of interest received to Sept. 30, 1903.....	2,546 94
By 49 loans made aggregating.....	$18,470 00
Cash on hand to balance..	173 94
	$18,643 94 $18,643 94

It will be noticed that this fund has built 49 churches and done the work of $18,643 in 14 years. It was the showing of the above statement of the Drake Fund to Brother Main that decided him to take the Named Fund at once. He stated to Brother Muckley that God had blest and prospered him in business during the last few years and he wanted to put $5,000 where it would do the most good, and he believed the money would work most surely and the most rapidly in the Church Extension Fund. We should have many more such men who would establish Named Loan Funds in our Church Extension work at once.

Current Literature

Decennial Publications of the University of Chicago. (University of Chicago Press.)

In commemoration of its tenth anniversary, the University of Chicago is issuing an elaborate series of monographs presenting original investigations by members of the university in the several departments. We have before us the following numbers in the series: "The Elements of Chrysostom's Power as a Preacher," by Prof. Galusha Anderson (paper, quarto, pp. 16, $.25 net); "Practical Theology," by Gerald Birney Smith (paper, quarto, pp. 21, $.25 net); "Have We the Likeness of Christ?" by Prof. Franklin Johnson (paper, quarto, 24 pp. illustrated, $.50 net); "The Virgin Birth," by Allan Hoben, Ph.D., (paper, pp. 87, $.50 net). The latter is not a theological but a purely historical and linguistic study, tracing the use of the narrative of the virgin birth of Jesus in apostolic times and by the ante-Nicene fathers.

The Faith of Robert Louis Stevenson. By John Kelman, Jr. (Revell. $1.50 net.)

There are some who would call Stevenson a man of doubt rather than a man of faith, as there are some who would call Lincoln an infidel because he was not a church member. Such estimates are false, not that they place too high a value on the church, but that they put too low a value on men. It is hard for one who is "three-fifths artist and two-fifths adventurer," as Stevenson said of himself, to be religious according to the orderly and decorous manner which most of us feel to be incumbent upon us. Yet such a man may have, and in Stevenson's case did have, an almost subconscious faith, a faith which seldom risks to the surface in declarations of doctrine, but which sweetens the fountains of life, purifies the heart and gives the soul fortitude for his struggle with the world. "There are strong men whom God has guided though they have not known Him, and quiet men who do not seem to be following Christ and yet unquestionably are casting out devils." Mr. Kelman, who is pastor of a church in Edinburgh, views Stevenson with a large and lenient vision and interprets him as a man of essentially religious nature. His book is a charming piece of literary criticism and appreciation. It is a distinct service to faith to show that, while there may be hypocrites in the world who profess more faith than they have, there are others, like the beloved and versatile "R. L. S.," who have more faith than they profess.

Outlines of an Introduction to the Old Testament. By John Walter Beardslee. Revell. $1.20 net.)

A useful and compact little volume which takes up separately every book in the Old Testament, summarizing the contents and giving some discussion of authorship, date, structure, purpose, etc.—all within 200 pages. On disputed points the author gives the arguments on both sides, with an obvious and generally successful attempt at fairness, but his own position is that of the thorough-going conservative. He is not even willing to concede that the statement about the meekness of Moses and the account of his death and that "no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day," were written by any other than Moses' hand. To him they "do not present any serious difficulty, for the assertion that he did not write them is at least no stronger than the contrary assertion that he did write them." The book on the whole, however, is much more valuable than one might infer from this remarkable statement.

"Helps to Faith."

MY DEAR DR. GARRISON.—I have received the book and read a part of it; enough to know that it is an admirable presentation of a very important subject. One of the most imperative needs of Christian workers is books to put into the hands of those who are honestly inquiring concerning the Christian faith. Yours seems to be admirably adapted for the purpose for which it is designed. I congratulate you upon being able to produce so valuable a book.

Very sincerely yours,

THE BIBLE IN SHAKESPEARE

Read What One Paper Says—This is Only One of Hundreds:

As this is the first volume to reach us bearing the imprimatur of the new publishing firm, a word of congratulation to the publishers might be allowed us. In the matter of material, workmanship and good taste shown, we have never seen a better or more pleasing sample of the bookmaker's art than the volume before us. If it is to be taken as a sample of what we may expect, then we can well wish the firm abundant prosperity and success, though how it will come in publishing books like this at the price we may question. * * * Since the publication, in 1864, of Bishop Wordsworth's "Shakespeare's Knowledge and Use of the Bible," several books have appeared, covering somewhat the same ground, but for general and satisfactory use, we have seen nothing to compare with Mr. Burgess' work. * * * A satisfactory feature of the work is the fact that quotations are not by reference to act, scene and line, but the great majority of passages are given in full. It is needless to point out how useful the book will be to the preacher and lecturer, as well as to the special student of Shakespeare.—The Canadian Churchman.

Faith and Repentance.

In your issue of August 13, I read with interest an article by W. T. Moore. "Jesus and His Apostles in the Inquiry Room."

He says: "By an examination of the three records of this commission, as given in Matt. 28:19, 20; Mark 16:15, 16; Luke 24:44-48," etc. In this last passage Jesus said unto his apostles that he had already told them that all things recorded by Moses and the prophets about him would be fulfilled, "then opened he their minds, that they might understand the Scriptures; and he said unto them, 'Thus it is written that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and (unto) remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem.'" It seems that the apostles did not fully understand the Scriptures, but that now Jesus opened their minds so that they could do so, and immediately called their attention to a summary of the prophecies in the words used by him, "Thus it is written that the Christ should suffer, and rise again from the dead the third day; and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name unto all the nations, beginning from Jerusalem." This statement does not seem to be a commission to the apostles, but a summary of prophecies concerning what would be done about him after his resurrection, and he was particularly anxious for them to understand this. Why? Because he had already given them two commissions, in neither of which was "repentance" mentioned, and there were prophecies stating that "repentance" in connection with remission of sins would be preached. He wished that there should be no confusion, so he opened their minds particularly about "repentance."

He had commissioned them to preach the gospel to the whole creation. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." I believe that when the gospel is preached, and the man believes and is baptized, that he will be saved (have remission of past sins). If that be true, where was the necessity for repentance, and why did the apostles preach repentance instead of faith? The prophecy had to be fulfilled, and they had to change from faith to repentance. Not a word in the commission about 'repentance as recorded in Matthew. It was very necessary for them to understand this. The explanation was very simple to a Greek-speaking person. When Jesus said to his apostles that the prophets had said "that metanoian unto remission of sins should be preached," what did they understand? Change of mind. Does the word ever mean anything else? If so, where? When Jesus called their attention to this prophecy, he said, "that change of mind unto remission of sins," etc. It would take that form of expression instead of pistenoos. Why? Because all the listeners were Jews who had decided that Jesus was an impostor, and now in order to be saved they must change their minds.

Dr. Moore does not say so explicitly, but conveys the idea that these Jews believed before they cried out, and that such was implied by the expression, "they were pricked in their heart" (not to the heart, as he quotes it). Does this Greek expression ever mean a change of mind, from disbelief to belief? It is used twice only in the New Testament, once literally and once figuratively. They were startled and cried out. After many other words by Peter proving that Jesus was the Christ, as many as believed were baptized, showing that "pricked in their heart" was not believing. There were some who did not believe even after Peter argued still further, for it says that they who received his word were baptized, implying that some did not even then believe.

In the entire New Testament Scriptures, not a single person is told to believe and repent! Should we do it? Would we do it if we would open our minds that have been blinded by tradition? Campbell says "reform." McGarvey makes sport of him, and after saying it means "change of mind," changes it without any reason to "change of will," but the masses of our preachers stick to "repentance" and never translate! In Acts 20:21, we have "testifying both to Jews and to Greeks, repentance toward God, and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ." Two different persons; repentance to one and faith to the other.

As we modern preachers tell all men to believe, repent and be baptized, is it not strange that no apostle or inspired preacher ever told any man to believe, repent and be baptized! Repentance and belief are never required of the same man! Do not all Greek words have definite ideas? If not, how can we translate? Does not metanoian have a definite meaning, and should not that meaning be always given, and if not, who has the authority to change it? Were we to translate this word, would not the meaning be made plain? Is anything lost by a faithful translation? If metanoian does not mean "change of mind," what does it mean?

Dr. Moore says: "In the case of the Pentecostians, it is evident (?) that they already believed the gospel, for they were pricked to the heart, and being under deep conviction (?) cried out, Men and brethren, what must we do? They were not, therefore, told to believe, but to repent and be baptized. In other words, they were not told to do what they had already done, but to do that which still remained to be done." What remained to be done? He says that they were under "deep conviction," whatever that means. If they believed and were then baptized, would not their sins be pardoned? What else was necessary? He says that Paul had believed and repented? What had Paul done? He had been a disbeliever, but had changed his mind, and was now a believer. He was anxiously waiting for Ananias to tell him what to do. He had not been told to repent or to believe. Evidence was forced upon him that caused him to change his mind, and then he was told to be baptized. While he was waiting to be told, he prayed and fasted, according to Jewish custom. Will Dr. Moore please meet these difficulties?

E. W. HERNDON.

Austin, Tex.

(1) It is not needful to make an extended reply to the foregoing. In my remarks, to which exception is taken, I was aiming to write for the people, and could not, therefore, use a new biblical terminology. This would have required explanation, and my aim would have been defeated in multiplying words. We sadly need a new terminology, but this should be given in a translation of the Bible into our modern English. It ought not to be attempted in a popular discussion intended for the maps.

(2) I am not sure that Brother Herndon's translation of metanoia will help matters much. It is not always safe to follow the etymological meaning of a word. Doubtless the notion of a change of mind is always included in metanoia, but it may contain more than this. Luke is especially partial to the word, and probably for the reason that he looks at the gospel from the standpoint of Christ's death and remission of sins.

(3) I fail to see that there is anything the matter with my contention that the Pentecostians believed when they cried out. Does any one think they would have been pricked in their hearts, if they had not believed what Peter preached? But what did he preach? Undoubtedly the very marrow of the gospel. That the faith of those who cried out was increased after Peter exhorted them may well be believed; but the record nowhere says, "As many as believed were baptized," but "as many as having received his word were baptized." We had better stick to the book, no matter what becomes of our theories.

O Thou ever blessed fountain of life, I bless Thee that Thou hast infused into me Thine own vital breath, so that I am become a living soul. It is my earnest desire that I may not only live, but grow. May I grow in patience and fortitude of soul, in humility and zeal, in spirituality and a heavenly disposition of mind. In a word, as Thou knowest I hunger and thirst after righteousness, make me whatever Thou wouldst delight to see me. Draw on my soul, by the gentle influences of Thy gracious Spirit, every trace and every feature which Thine eye, O heavenly Father, may survey with pleasure, and which Thou mayest acknowledge as Thine own image. I ask and hope it through him of whose fullness we have all received. Amen.

The Friendly Hand.

When a man ain't got a cent, an' he's feelin' kin' o' blue,
An' the clouds hang dark an' heavy, an' won't let the sunshine through,
It's a great thing, O my brethren, for a feller just to lay
His hand upon your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way!

It makes a man feel curious; it makes the tear drops start;
An' you sort o' feel a flutter in the region of the heart.
You can't look up and meet his eyes: you don't know what to say,
When his hand is on your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way.

Oh, the world's a curious compound, with its honey an' its gall,
With its cares an' bitter crosses; but a good world, after all.
An' a good God must have made it—leastwise, that's what I say,
When a hand rests on your shoulder in a friendly sort o' way.

Paul's Goat Team.

Sarah Endicott Ober.

Paul Gophet went to bed nine years old, and when he awoke he was ten. But he wished he was not as old, when his three brothers gave him each ten slaps to begin the day with.

"Love pats don't hurt," said his sister Sallie, and she gave him ten kisses to make up.

Birthdays came so frequently in the Gophet family that they were not celebrated.

"We would never do anything else but celebrate," said jolly Mother Gophet, "if we kept all the birthdays and holidays in the year."

But Mother and Father Gophet had always some nice surprise in store. Paul came right in the middle of the family, which was like a long flight of steps, from Tom, who was very proud of his neckties and downy upper lip, down to Baby Bunting, whose one-act performance of putting his chubby toe into his mouth delighted the whole tribe, and convulsed them with laughter.

"Does anyone know of a birthday?" asked Father Gophet, solemnly, at the breakfast table.

"I've got one!" cried Paul, eagerly.

"Now that is strange," said his father. "There was something out in the barn for a boy with a birthday. Are you sure you are the one?"

Yes, Paul was sure, there was no other Gophet birthday in that month; which was a mercy, as Mother Gophet said, for Christmas came in that month, too, and New Year's followed close behind, and what would she do with any more "remembering days?"

Off to the barn flew the whole lot, Tom's long legs leading the mob, while Sallie brought up the rear, with Baby Bunting's head bobbing over her shoulder.

That big old barn! There never was another such place! No cows or horses were there, or had been for years. It was as sweet and fragrant as could be, with its big mows chock-full of hay. There was a real floor for the second story, that lifted up in the middle, when the hay was put in, just like the draw to bridge that spanned the broad river a mile away. There were real stairs leading to the upper story, not a ladder like those in the other barns in the neighborhood. Way up in the "cock-loft" were Tom's pigeons, and the pretty "pouters" and "fantails" were so tame that the children could catch them and hold and pet them to their heart's content.

Down in the basement were guinea pigs, rabbits and cages of white mice, besides toads and other reptiles, and cats—cats everywhere, of all sizes and colors. For the Gophets were all enthusiastic lovers of any and every living thing.

In the stalls were four goats. Lily was a snow white African goat with long, black horns. Nannie was a common gray goat, with a wonderful appetite for all sorts of indigestible things, from the children's dresses to nails and old tin cans. But the prettiest sight of all was the twins, Lily's kids, Jettie and Gypsy, who belonged to Paul. They were so exactly alike that no one but he could tell them apart. They were black and white, and spotted beautifully.

But we shall never get to the birthday surprise if we try to describe all the barn pets, so I will tell you now what it was. There in the middle of the floor stood Jettie and Gypsy harnessed to the prettiest little wagon! The goats tossed their heads, and rattled their shining harness as if they were proud enough of it all. The old barn rang with the shouts of delight and surprise, as the tribe crowded around the little turn-out. But Paul still stood in the doorway, staring with eyes and mouth wide open, but never uttering a sound.

"Go see your birthday present," said Sallie, giving him a little push.

"Is that mine?" gasped Paul, drawing a long breath.

"Read the placard," said Sallie, pointing to a big card that was fastened on the harness. And Paul read, "For little old Faithful."

"Is that me?" he gasped again.

"Who else can it be?" asked. "Who gets the kindlings every night? Who runs the errands, when all the rest shirk out? Who does all the chores, when the other boys play hookey?"

"And who cuts wood for poor Ma'am Gallop?" cried Tom.

"Who digs out the paths for her when the snow comes?"

"And who always gives up the biggest piece, and gives me the biggest bite of his apple?" chimed in little Claire, whose heart lay very near her mouth.

"And who always digs the graves?" put in Elsie, solemnly.

At which they all shouted with laughter, for though they all delighted in funerals, no one liked to dig the graves.

"And who does the work the unfaithful boy leaves undone?" finished Sallie severely, and looking straight at Teddy, who turned very red and looked crestfallen.

"I don't care!" he muttered, tossing his head. "You quit preaching, Sallie Gophet. You're always nagging a fellow."

But Sallie did like to "preach" and she held forth on the merits and rewards of good boys, and punishment of the bad ones, until there would have been an open fight between her and Teddy, but for Paul.

"O, hush up!" he cried. "I never did nothing" (for his feelings always affected his grammar). "I loved to do things. I never did nothing—never!"

But Paul's joy was unbounded when he at last realized that the whole outfit was his own. He had trained the goats to work in harness from the time they were tiny kids; though his harness was made from bits of string, and his wagon from a soap box, ingeniously combined with the wheels of a cast-off baby carriage. But this harness was a "sure enough" one, of shining red leather, all studded with brass. And this wagon was a miniature express, strongly made, and gay with bright paint. Was there ever such a lucky boy!

"O, my—O, my!" screamed Paul, his blue eyes shining with delight. "It's—it's—it's just—goluptious!" and that to Paul expressed the height of appreciation.

Paul never was happy unless he could share his pleasures, so Elsie and little Claire were politely assisted into the back seat of the wagon, and Teddy and Paul took the front, and off they went for a ride.

Paul's goat team became a feature in Goshen, the town where the Gophets lived, and a pretty picture it made with its load of happy young faces. Paul had other uses for it, however, and many an errand he went on for his parents or the neighbors. He made a "heater," or snowplow, and with his goats attached, he cleared the paths for all the yards in the neighborhood. And wherever there was a lonely old lady, Master Paul could always be reckoned on, to clear paths, do errands, or bring wood with his team, and his bright, cheery face did the lonely old hearts as much good as did his ministrations.

But Paul had one grief: Sallie could never be persuaded to ride in his wagon. She felt it beneath the dignity of her fifteen years, for she was now "putting away childish things," though at heart she was just as much a child as ever. One day she was walking in the woods when Paul overtook her with his team.

"O, Sallie!" he cried, reining up the goats in good style beside her. "Come ride, now do! just a little way."

Sallie refused at first, but who could resist Paul's pleadings? At last she consented, just to please him, only stipulating that the ride should not extend beyond the woods, and must be kept a solemn secret. Paul agreed, and jumped out to help her in, pushing the front seat well back to allow room for Sallie's long legs.

When she was nicely seated, and he was about to spring in, his hat blew off. He dropped the reins, and ran to catch it, but a gust of wind flung it right into the goats' faces. They shied, then started off in a panic. Madly they tore down the road, Sallie clinging to the seat, helpless to stop them, for the reins were dragging on the ground. She shouted to the goats, but that only made them run the faster. They were hungry and impatient to get home, for they had been all the forenoon on the road.

Down through the main street they flew, past stores and houses, bearing the mortified and angry girl. Her hat blew off, and her long hair streamed in the wind, but all she could do was to hold on for dear life, though tears blinded her eyes. The goats never slackened their speed until they reached the barn and halted in their stalls. Far, far behind ran Paul, puffing and blowing, and gasping, at the top of his voice, "Whoa—whoa—stop—Sallie—stop! Bring back my team!"

Sallie scrambled out of the wagon as soon as it stopped, and rushed to the house in a passion of tears.

"O, I'll never—never see anybody again!" she wailed as her mother tried in vain to comfort her. "I can never look people in the face! What will they think of me, to ride through the town like a great tomboy? O, dear me! What shall I do!"

Paul reached the barn full ten minutes afterwards, and as soon as he found that his beloved team was safe and unhurt, he rushed to the house.

"What made you run off with my goat team?" he demanded of Sallie, who stared at him for a moment breathless at this unmerited accusation.

"Run off with your team?" she cried, in utter bewilderment. "Why, what do you mean? It was your old team that ran off with me!"

"I'll never ask you to ride again," sputtered Paul.

"And I never want you to!" declared Sallie.

"Children, children!" warned Mother Gophet, as Sallie's black eyes blazed, and Paul's little fists doubled up.

But Sallie's rage ended, as all her furies generally did, in a hearty burst of laughter, as the comical side of the affair struck her; and Paul, seeing that no blame was attached to his beloved goats, joined in, so the trouble was over. But Sallie never forgot her "John Gilpin" ride, which became a by-word of the family.—The Congregationalist.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS

THOU WILT GUIDE ME BY THY COUNSELS

AN ILLUSTRATED WEEKLY

DEVOTED ESPECIALLY TO

The Work and Welfare of the YOUNG PEOPLE of the CHRISTIAN CHURCH

AND GENERALLY TO THE INTEREST OF

All People of All Ages Engaged in Bible Study and Church Work.

WILLIAM WORTH DOWLING, Editor,

Assisted by an Able Corps of Special and General Contributors.

The Minister finds OUR YOUNG FOLKS almost indispensable for many reasons, particularly on account of the Notes on the Uniform Mid-week Prayer-Meeting Topics, which are fuller and more complete than are given by any other publication. One of the leading Homiletic Monthlies reprints in nearly every issue one or more of these articles as "Sermon Outlines" for the use of its host of ministerial readers.

The Sunday School Workers, including the Superintendent, Teachers and Bible Students, find in the two or more pages devoted to the International Bible Lesson in each issue the very best helps available. The Notes for Primary Teachers, by Mrs. Mary W. Grant, are especially valuable.

The Christian Endeavor, by a study of its columns, is thoroughly furnished. The exposition of the Senior Topics, by Frank G. Tyrrell, and of the Junior, by Mr. and Mrs. J. C. B. Stivers, are the fullest and most helpful that go into print, while the practical articles on methods of work and kindred subjects make OUR YOUNG FOLKS the foremost journal of its class.

The Picture Gallery is adorned from week to week with half-tone engravings of the best class of leading Ministers, Superintendents, Teachers, Endeavorers, and other Christian Workers, as well as by pictures of charming bits of Natural Scenery in all parts of the country.

The Story Department is a charming feature of OUR YOUNG FOLKS. In the past several serials have run through its columns which were so popular that they were afterwards published in book form. Shorter stories appear in every issue that are always pure and wholesome and uplifting.

The Subscription Price of OUR YOUNG FOLKS is One Copy One Year, 75 cents, and in clubs of ten and upwards only 50 cents each, although it is a large Sixteen-Page Weekly. Subscriptions are invariably discontinued at the expiration of the time for which an order was distinctly given.

Abraham Lincoln's Wit.

Whole books have been filled with anecdotes of our great martyr war president. None of them more strikingly illustrate his practical cuteness in a critical moment than that related by the late Bishop Simpson before the Yale theological students.

A committee from New York, composed of leading citizens, went to see Mr. Lincoln in reference to the conduct of the war.

After they had transacted their general business and the committee were making their way to the door—he was standing in the other part of the room—one of the gentlemen, who presumed on his acquaintance with Mr. Lincoln to ask particularly searching questions, stepped up to him and in the lowest tone of voice, said:

"Mr. President, I would like to know where Burnside's fleet is going."

Burnside had just sailed with a fleet, but the destination was unknown.

"Well," said Mr. Lincoln, in a low tone of voice, "would you very much like to know?"

"Yes," he said, "I would."

"Well, now," said Lincoln, "if I would tell you, perhaps you would tell someone else?"

"No," he said, "I would not."

Then Mr. Lincoln, putting up his hand to his face and as if to whisper, said loud enough for all to hear: "He's gone to sea!"—Michigan Christian Advocate.

Friday, Bunker Hill was seized and fortified.

Friday, the surrender of Saratoga was made.

"Now, children," said the teacher, "let us see what you remember about the animal kingdom and the domestic animals that belong to it. You have named all the domestic animals but one. Who can tell me what that one is? It has bristly hair, likes dirt and is fond of getting into the mud." Miss Fanny looked expectantly around the room. "Can't you think, Tommy?" she asked, encouragingly. "Yes'm," was the shame-faced reply. "It's me."

Helping People.

Sometime since we were invited to a small gathering at the house of a friend. One of the guests was to come on the train from a neighboring town. After hearing the whistle of the engine we went out on the porch to await her arrival. Soon we saw her passing up a neighboring street carrying a large and heavy carpet-bag, while a feeble old lady, poorly dressed, was walking by her side.

"That is just like G—," said the hostess; "she has found that old woman at the depot, and is lending her a hand."

So it proved. This young girl was beautiful, talented and accomplished. Yet she was not ashamed to be seen carrying the burden and acting as a guide for the aged and poor. Many ladies of far less position and culture would have been horrified at the very suggestion.

In conversation afterward we found that this little act was but an index finger pointing to her whole life. She not only enjoyed helping people who need help, but made it the rule of her life. Every day she asked God to give her an opportunity to lift some burden. And her burden-bearing was done in such a modest way that the burden-bearer never seemed prominent. Helping people! It is more a privilege than a duty.—Epworth Herald.

Companions in Courtesy.

Warm was the Irish heart of the late Lord Dufferin. Shortly before he left Canada he was walking one windy day when he came upon an old Irish laborer.

The governor stopped to have a chat, and the laborer stood bare-headed, the wind blowing his thin, white hair roughly about.

"Put on your hat," said Lord Dufferin.

"Not in your excellency's presence," replied the old man.

"Then," said his lordship, taking off his own hat, "if you will expose your gray hairs to this wind out of deference for my position, I must expose mine to it out of respect for your gray hairs."—The King's Own.

A VERY small girl in a Harlem apartment was observed by a friend of the family eating a certain cereal preparation. She seemed to eat, as the English are said to take their pleasures, sadly.

"Don't you like that, my dear?" inquired the friend.

"Not partic'ly," replied the little maid.

"Why do you eat it, then?" persisted the inquirer.

The daughter of the house paused with spoon on edge of bowl.

"It's got to be eaten," she answered, gravely. "The groceryman gives mamma a rag doll for every two packages she buys, and it's got to be eaten every morning."

And she continued to eat cereal.—Christian Endeavor World.

The head master of the Wakefield grammar school, in an examination paper on general knowledge asked, "Who was John Wesley?"

One boy answered as follows: "John Wesley invented Methodist chapels, and afterwards became duke of Wellington."—Bishop How.

"Why, Jimmie," said the gracious hostess, "you've taken half a pie on your plate."

"Yes'm. Mamma said I musn't have but one piece when I was visitin'."

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "Well, I'm back again, but not with a quarterly report." (Donnie was the 393rd to join the Advance Society.) "I kept the rules six weeks when one Sunday we had a family reunion at the Dug Spring, and with the coming of many big cousins and little cousins, aunts and uncles, I forgot to read my Bible verse. I wish you had been there, too, and we would have given you all the chocolate cake you could eat. I believe that is the kind you said you liked." (So it is; still, I don't dislike fig cake.) "I am going to begin keeping the rules again. I am reading 'Lady of the Lake.' I like it fine. I would like to have been in that show with Helen Ross. It was acted at our school once, but I can't remember it. It has been a long time since I saw a letter from Gussie Toren. What has become of her? Ruth Day and I live in the same county, though I am not acquainted with her."

Grace Read, Dermid, Ont., Canada: "I send my 2nd quarterly report. This summer I went to a town called Fort Frances. It isn't very large. It is across the Rainy River from Koochiching, in Minnesota." (Oh, I thought it was in China!) "I went over the river to Koochiching. It was the first time I had been in the United States for five years. I saw the falls. They are very pretty. I have a black kitten named Josie. She is such a good little mouser. She is playful, too." (Please rub her behind the left ear for me.)

Grand Rapids, Mich.: "I send my 3rd quarterly report, but you see it doesn't begin where the 2nd left off, because at the end of the 2nd, I began forgetting, and I forgot four weeks, either my quotation or Bible verse or something." (It's a bad thing to begin, isn't it? By the way, you didn't sign your name. I rummaged around on the outside of the envelope and found, "Return to A. Per Lee." You, I suppose?)

Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark.: "I send my report for the 20th quarter. I don't believe there are any ahead of me. Did you ever go 'possum hunting? We are talking of going one night this week. My, but we will have fun!" (My!) "You ought to go with us and help eat the 'possum and sweet potatoes—my, but they will be good!" (Haven't caught it yet, have 'you?) "Do you like persimmons?" (Yellow ones.) "We have so many good ones down here. They are what the 'possums get fat on." (Don't blame 'em.) "Last night, just about dark, Claire called to me to meet her down at the 'Red Dirt,' our half-way meeting place; she said there was going to be some kind of a show at Oak Hill and she wanted to go. I did, too, so I went up home with her, and Uncle Will said we would have to walk if we went." (Oh, Uncle Will!) "We thought that would be lots of fun, so I came and begged mamma to let me go, and I got ready" (Wonder which dress you wore?) "and was back at Uncle Will's in 20 minutes." (Your hair must have been all ready in the first place.) "We (Claire, Will, Eunice, Maude Gorman and I) started out with our lantern, and the fun we did have as we went down the mountain! When we got there, the man was up there making his little speech" (little?) "and we could see the great Kansas City flood for just 10 cents." (Pretty cheap, but we got to see it over here for nothing.) "He had a wagon with some kind of a light inside, and all along the side were holes for us to look through. We looked" (of course you did; that was what you were there for, wasn't it?) "and saw all of them, too. There were some comic ones. They had a large graphophone that played several nice pieces" (and sounded like a sleepy man singing 'way back in his nose?), "but a crowd of boys were having Kangaroo Court in the schoolhouse, and they made such a noise the show had to close" (shut up all those holes in the side, I suppose). "But we thought we were well paid, even if we did have to walk. A good many of the Av. S. members have been bragging about their cats, so I will about mine; their names are Thisbe and Pyramus. His tail has a little white tip on it. Every time we grind coffee he will come around and beg for some, and when he gets it, he chews it up and begs for more. They are both black and are regular Arkansas cats, for they would rather have biscuits than any other kind of bread. I am glad that old gold and blue are the Av. S. colors." (Some things are so big that you get no real idea of them when given their dimensions. For instance, when you are told that some of our guns in the navy are 39 feet long, as I am telling you now, and that they send their load 13 miles, and in doing so, consume more than 500 pounds of powder in each explosion, you don't really grasp the actual magnitude and power of such a weapon. In like manner, when Madge tells us that she sends her 20th report in the Advance Society work, we can hardly realize just what this means, unless we go into details. She was the 94th to join our ranks.

Her simple statement means that for 240 weeks, or, in round numbers, for five years, this member has not missed reading a verse in the Bible every day, that is to say, a verse every day for 1,680 days; and so far from contenting herself with one verse a day, I see in her 20th report that during the last 12 weeks she read 2,565 verses. That isn't all; for five years she has read 30 lines of poetry and 5 pages of history each week—I mean at least that much. Her last report averages 10 pages of history a week, while her total poetry is 2,091 lines from "Idyls of the King." She has memorized a quotation from a standard author once a week for five years, and all that time has kept her account in her note book. It is when we go into details thus, that we realize what the Av. S. is doing for us—not, as I have always said, that it puts a quantity of good literature in our minds, though of course it does that; but that it gives us the habit of reading the best, the habit of associating with bright and pure minds. It is habit that accomplishes a large part of the world's work; it is habit that leads to so much misery and sin and disease. It is habit that will keep us from these things. I wish I could get more to join our society, because I know it would cause them to form the habit of good reading and good thinking.)

As I write this, I have not had time to hear from you about our Advance Society orphan. What will you do about it? It is altogether in your power to decide whether you will take a little stranger into your protection, and be a blessing to it, or whether you will do nothing. I have put the case before you, and as I said, it is not my purpose to urge it, because you know the need, and I would not have you give unwillingly. If you want our society to adopt an orphan, send your contribution at once; send what you feel you can spare, and what such necessity calls for. This is for many of you your first opportunity to help in a work so good, so great, so noble.

"Helps to Faith."*

Whether this is an age of doubt or of faith depends much upon one's own attitude toward religious questions. That there is a more general denial of the authority of tradition is, we think, unquestionably true. But that the faith of the Christian believer rests upon a more solid foundation than ever before is, we equally believe, capable of satisfactory demonstration. It is characteristic of the scientific spirit of the age that the believer should be asked for a "reason" for the hope that he cherishes. And it is equally characteristic of the spirit of our holy religion that it should meet this test fairly and adequately, and prove its entire consistency with all truth, scientific and philosophical.

The little volume with the above title, published by the Christian Publishing Company, is an effort to show the "sweet reasonableness" of the Christian faith, and thus both to strengthen the conviction of the Christian himself, and remove obstacles from the path of the earnest seeker after truth and righteousness. The author, J. H. Garrison, has made us greatly his debtors by this clear, strong and sympathetic argument. The first division of the volume treats of the facts upon which faith rests. Primary among these are man's religious instincts, his consciousness of sin, God's revelation of himself, culminating in the incarnation, and the presence and power of Christianity in the world. Brief as is the treatment of these great themes, it is conclusive, and leads naturally to the chapters following, in which the vital elements of the gospel are studied in their relations to man's salvation, and the relations of the Church and the New Testament literature clearly set forth.

In Part II. the author treats of some obstacles to faith, and here will be found the antidote for a multitude of doubts and denials. This section of the volume, read carefully and sincerely by the average doubter, would bring him to the simple faith of Jesus Christ. It would brush away the mists that dim his vision and help him to see the simplicity and reasonableness of the gospel of our salvation. The little book is a gem in every way, and ought to have a very wide circulation. Its utter freedom from dogmatism and denunciation is in keeping with the spirit of its author, as manifest in the several other volumes which he has contributed to our literature.

A WEEKLY RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPER.

Vol. XL. No. 45. November 5, 1903. $1.50 A Year.

OUR age is constantly affirming that all things have become new. But in reality the change is seeming and superficial rather than real. We have a new physics, but there are no more elements in nature than there were in the morning of creation. We have also a new theory as to how Moses came to write the Ten Commandments, but the same old moral principles are with us. . . . If, in the light of science we have re-written our theories of conscience, of sin, of churches, of creeds, we have not changed the great facts which these theories describe. We can make no greater mistake than to fix our eyes upon the changing theory and neglect the moral facts which are permanent and personal and vital. The theories are transient, but the truth is permanent. The geographies come and go, but the mountains and hills and seas abide. The physiologies change, the human body remains. Theological statements rise and fall like the grass. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God standeth forever.

Current Events

In front of a certain store in St. Louis a young man has been standing for several days, handing to all passers-by circulars calling upon all friends of labor to "BOYCOTT" (in very large type) this store, on the ground that its proprietor is "unfair to union labor." This is a grave charge, and it is apt to stir to indignation the sympathetic hearts of people who believe that labor ought to have its rights, and that unfairness toward it is an outrage. But just what has this employer done that he should be branded as "unfair to union labor"? It appears, upon investigation, that certain employees in his trade have recently formed a union, and that they have persuaded some stores to agree to employ only members of the union. But the proprietor of this store says that the union is nothing to him; that it was not organized by his advice or for his benefit; he does not see why he should give the union's members any preference over others. In short, he says he will employ the fittest men he can find, without reference to their membership or non-membership in a union. This seems reasonable, does it not? But this is the very attitude which the "boycott" circular describes as "unfair to union labor." The unfairness consists in putting it on a par with other labor. The simple justice for which they so modestly ask is a complete monopoly of this particular branch of employment. To order a boycott against an employer on the ground that he is not fair to union labor, is the same as saying that fairness is all they ask for. To be fair means to be impartial. But when we investigate this demand for impartiality, it turns out to be a demand that all the jobs be given to union men, and that all the non-union men be thrown into the street. A beautiful piece of impartiality this!

A conference of capitalists and employers was held in Chicago last week for the purpose of organizing a national federation of employers' associations. It resulted in the formation of what is to be known as the "Citizens Industrial Association of America." The organization of local employers' associations in the various states has been one of the most important recent movements in connection with the labor problem. Employers have come to feel that, if labor is going to act unitedly in making its demands and enforcing them by strike and boycott, capital must act as a unit in dealing with these demands. The justification for labor unions is the justification for unions of employers, and there is as good reason for one to take on the dignity of a national organization as for the other. The addresses at the Chicago conference were in a conservative vein, and indicated only a desire to do what is right and to prevent unreasonable and ruinous demands on the part of the unions. The principle for which the association stands is the principle of the "open shop;" that is, that union labor is to be considered on an equal footing with non-union labor and neither is to be discriminated against in favor of the other. This is not the program which is most popular with the unions and neither does it meet the desires of the violent anti-unionists, but it is the only method which will save the industrial world from the tyranny of the labor unions on the one hand, or of the employers on the other. The refusal of certain employers to have anything to do with union labor and the policy of discharging employees who join the unions is equivalent to a declaration of war. It is saying to the laborers, it is our place to issue orders and your place to submit. The opposition of the unions to the principle of the open shop is a weak appeal for special favors from the parties whom they are organized to oppose, and an intolerable infringement upon the rights of non-union labor. We are of the opinion that this open-shop principle will have to be patiently worked out—and perhaps painfully fought out—before the relations of labor and capital can ever be amicably adjusted. If the new federation of employers can contribute anything to the right solution of that problem, it deserves the approval of all sane public opinion.

An unusually interesting political campaign is approaching its climax in New York City. The situation is complicated by some extraordinary elements which render all predictions liable to a wide margin of error. Two of the fusion nominees, Grout and Fornes, accepted places on the Tammany ticket and were then dropped by the fusionists. How much strength they will add to Tammany is a great uncertainty. There have been and still are serious breaks in the harmony of the Democratic ranks. Devery, the former Tammany chief of police, was dropped by that astute organization in its effort to look respectable during the campaign, and he is a candidate on an independent ticket which will appeal chiefly to those who want a simon pure article of graft without even a temporary masquerade of decency. How much strength Devery will draw from Tammany is another unsolved problem. The administration of Mayor Low has been fruitful of reforms, but naturally it has not pleased everybody. The reforms have been too sweeping to please some and not sufficiently so for others. The prospect of reform is sometimes more pleasing than the real thing. On the other hand, the fear of Tammany's rule has been considerably diminished in the popular mind by the lapse of these two years. The American citizen has a short memory, and it is much easier to bring his indignation to the voting point to turn out a bad administration that is in power than to prevent its return after a period of reform. These are some of the uncertainties of the present campaign. The Low administration is justified by its records, but New York will be on trial at the polls. Elections are to be held on Tuesday of this week in many cities and states, but none of them equals in importance the contest in New York.

One feels a degree of hesitancy in making any reference to the embarrassing situation in which Mr. William J. Bryan is at present involved in connection with the Bennett will. The admitted facts are these: Mr. Philo S. Bennett, of New Haven, Conn., a personal and political friend of Mr. Bryan, died leaving a will by which $50,000 was bequeathed to Mr. Bryan, who, acting in the capacity of lawyer, wrote the will. As a confirmation of the will, Mr. Bennett left a sealed letter, addressed to his wife, explaining the disposition which he wished made of his property, including the bequest to Mr. Bryan. This letter contains interlineations in Mr. Bryan's handwriting. The law of Connecticut provides that the lawyer who draws a will (in this case Mr. Bryan) cannot appear in it as a legatee (as Mr. Bryan does, to the extent of $50,- 000). The widow, whose legacy is less than the sum given to Mr. Bryan, is trying to break the will, on the ground that Mr. Bryan took advantage of his professional relations with Mr. Bennett, as his attorney, to influence him unduly in the disposition of his property, and on the ground that the above mentioned statute is clearly violated. The sealed letter, which bears marks of being at least a joint production of Mr. Bryan and Mr. Bennett, is declared to be a mere subterfuge for the evasion of the law. In any ordinary case, one would say without hesitation that there was good ground to invalidate the will. It is, to say the least, a most indelicate thing for a lawyer to write a will under which he is the chief beneficiary. The code of the profession and the sentiment of the public everywhere condemn such a procedure, and the laws of Connecticut, under which this will must be administered, explicitly prohibit it. In defense of Mr. Bryan's conduct it may be said that Mr. Bennett was a very warm political friend of Mr. Bryan, in a region where his political friends were very few. A bequest to him might seem equivalent to an endowment of the free silver cause. Mr. Bennett lived three years after the will was drawn, during which he might have changed it if he had been improperly influenced. No one, we hope, feels disposed to charge Mr. Bryan with a criminal or distinctively dishonest act. But he has shown a lack of delicacy and of sensitiveness to fine points of honor which will scarcely be gratifying to those who still regard him as an apostle of human rights.

Legacy.

The annexation of Canada to the United States is one of those questions in which nobody takes a very serious interest, but which inevitably come up for discussion at stated intervals. Canada's dissatisfaction with the Alaskan boundary award, and her consequent coolness toward Great Britain, who is blamed for the verdict, furnish the present occasion for the revival of the subject. Algernon Sartoris, a grandson of General Grant, has gained some prominence through a recently published statement, in which he says that the United States made a great mistake in ever submitting the boundary question to arbitration; that we ought simply to have taken possession of the disputed territory by force, and that while we are about it, we ought to take possession of Canada in the same way. We merely mention this as an illustration of one foolish form which the annexation agitation sometimes takes. Mr. Sartoris is himself half English, and his sentiments on the Canadian question certainly come very far from being American. Far more rational are Mr. Carnegie's recent words on the subject. He compares Canada's relation to the United States with Scotland's relation to England, and asserts that when both parties are ready for a union to be effected, in the same way as the union of England and Scotland, it will be a great advantage commercially and politically to both countries. Perhaps it will. But one is reminded that it took a long time, and a great deal of bloodshed, for England and Scotland to get together. The Englishmen who first attacked this problem went at it precisely in the manner recommended by Mr. Sartoris, and even with this strenuous plan, it was more than five hundred years after the Norman conquest before the crowns of England and Scotland were united on the head of James I., and another century before the parliamentary union was effected under Queen Anne. So this historic instance of annexation, while it may illustrate the final advantages of the policy, does not in all respects encourage the annexationists. The hammer-and-tongs method of annexation is hopelessly out of date in this age, especially between civilized communities like the United States and Canada. If ever they are to be united, it must be a genuine love-match on both sides, and the shortest way to that end is for both parties to conduct themselves under their present conditions as peaceably and with as much of mutual helpfulness and good will as possible.

The Australian Confederation is now profoundly agitated over the question of locating their capital. When the several hitherto separate colonies entered into the confederation a few years ago, the long-standing jealousy between Melbourne in Victoria and Sydney in New South Wales found expression. New South Wales would come into the agreement only when it was promised that the capital should be located within her borders, and Victoria was appeased with a promise that it should not be within a hundred miles of Sydney. So the Confederation is committed to the establishment of its capital city somewhere within the province of New South Wales, but outside of a circle with a radius of one hundred miles, centering in the only large city in the province. This means virtually the establishment of a new city to be the capital. Several rival locations which meet the requirements are urging their claims, none of them having anything substantial to offer except a tract of land. The situation is not altogether dissimilar to that in this country when our capital was located at Washington. The site was chosen not because it was occupied by a city which could rightfully claim the distinction of having the capital of the nation, but because its location was suitable for the capital city and convenient with respect to the leading cities of the country. After all, the project of building a capital city to order is no great novelty and has frequently turned out very satisfactorily. Peter the Great located his capital in the marshes of the Neva and then built St. Petersburg there, and Athens was chosen as the capital of the modern kingdom of Greece when it was only a squalid village of a dozen huts. Australia's "bush capital" is not to be despised.

In a railroad wreck eighty-five miles east of Kansas City, last Thursday, Mrs. Emma Booth-Tucker received injuries from which she died a few hours later. She was the second daughter of General William Booth, founder and commander-in-chief of the Salvation Army, and was forty-three years old at the time of her death. A woman of naturally fine sensibilities, delicate, refined and retiring, she devoted her life to the work of the Salvation Army—a service popularly supposed to be essentially boisterous and repulsively crude. But she lent to that work something of her own native refinement, and she moved among the cultured and rich and among the poor and degraded with the same self-possession as an equal to both. When her brother, Ballington Booth, left the Salvation Army in 1896 to organize his "Volunteers," her husband, Commander Booth-Tucker, succeeded him in charge of the Salvation Army in America, and Mrs. Booth-Tucker was given the rank of "Consul." To untiring zeal and executive efficiency she added a winsomeness of personality which contributed much to the success of her work.

Brevities.

Professor Mommsen, the famous German historian, died Saturday at his home in Berlin at the age of eighty-six.

The Cuban Congress convened on Monday. President Palma, in his message, congratulated the country on the satisfactory working out of the relations with the United States under the Platt amendment, and spoke in praise of President Roosevelt for calling a special session of the American Congress to consider the Cuban reciprocity treaty.

A run on some of the strongest trust companies in St. Louis furnished a sensation for two days last week. It soon developed that there was no cause for anxiety. It is believed that the flurry was caused by false rumors sent out by prominent financiers in Chicago or New York with a view to assisting in a manipulation of the stock market. If so, the result must have been unsatisfactory to the authors of the rumors, for the companies attacked showed themselves quite equal to the emergency. St. Louis was the only large city in the country which had not a single bank failure during the panic of 1893, and there is no city in the country whose financial institutions are on a more solid basis.

Religion in the Home.

From the responses which we have received to our articles in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST asking ministers and others to state what per cent of the families in their congregations or in the range of their acquaintance had any regular worship or religious instruction in their homes, and the nature of such religious exercises, we are justified in drawing the conclusion that not more than five per cent of the families represented in our churches have any sort of religious worship in their homes. A larger number of responses, representing a wider field, might increase this ratio, but we take it that those who have reported represent, very fairly, the average condition of things in the church as respects this matter. The religious exercises in the homes of the small per cent of families who do keep up religious worship, consist in reading a portion of Scripture and prayer. No doubt a larger per cent than this offer thanks at the table, but this custom is by no means universal even among church members.

If these facts represent, with any degree of accuracy, the real condition of things as relates to religious worship and religious instruction in our homes, our readers will agree with us that it is high time for an agitation on this subject. Those who have responded to our request—and we could wish the number had been greater, indicating a larger interest on the part of the ministers—express their gratification that we have taken this matter up in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. One person writes: "I rejoice to know that at last some one, whose voice may be heard further than mine, has taken up the subject of religious exercises in the home. I owe my firm faith in the Christian religion to the fact that my father read the Bible and prayed in the family every day from the time I was able to hear it until I left home, and I know that he prays for me at the family altar every morning now." Another minister writes: "I have stayed in the homes of professed Christians of all denominations in New York and Wisconsin, including our own people and preachers, and I should say, in answer to your questions, that about five per cent conduct family worship, consisting of reading a portion of Scripture and prayer. Herein is a great weakness in our brotherhood." Another, giving the same per cent as the foregoing, though from a different state, writes: "I am glad you have called my attention to this fact in this way, and I shall look with special interest to your articles."

Who can calculate the loss in membership, in spiritual power and energy, in religious zeal and efficiency, from the failure of the ninety-five families out of every hundred to read and explain the Word of God to their families, and to invoke daily the divine blessing and guidance? What matter of greater concern can there possibly be among us than the revival of interest on this subject, and the quickening of the consciences of those who are heads of families as to the religious training of the children in their home? We are free to say that in our judgment, our power and usefulness in the future as a religious movement, will depend very largely upon our ability to bring about a reform in this matter. Any religious body that loses its hold on its children, loses its hold on the future.

We have already referred to the changed conditions in our home life which have tended to drive religious worship out of the home, and many, we fear, will plead these conditions as a justification for the neglect of religious worship in the family. Surely it ought not to require much reflection to convince any one that there can be no justification in existing conditions for the neglect of what is so vital to the welfare of our families and to the Church of Christ. It is perhaps true that the changed conditions of our social and industrial life may have rendered necessary, or at least advisable, certain modifications in the time for, and character of, family worship. We are not pleading for the restoration of the old regime, or for any special method of religious culture in the home. We are not sure that the old method was the best, especially that it is best for the present time, but we are sure that if religion is a vital matter, and the most important factor in the molding of character, we cannot afford to dispense with its influence in our home-life. We believe that, in this matter as in most others, if there be a will there will be found a way by which the religious life may find a legitimate expression in the home.

It is evident that no one method of conducting the religious worship in the home will be adapted to all families and to all sets of conditions. What each family should do is to ascertain what is the best time for its worship, and what the most profitable form of exercise for its own use. For some the evening hours, before the children retire, will be the best time, and others may find it more convenient to have their worship in the morning in connection with the morning meal. In many families the Scriptures may be read by some member of the family, and the father or the mother lead in prayer. In many others there will be no one who, at first, will feel able to lead in audible prayer. In such case it would be possible for the family to recite together the Lord's Prayer, which all could readily learn. A brief form of thanksgiving could, in the same way, be memorized and used by the head of the family, or by all in concert. We have known thanks to be offered very effectively in perfect silence, all the family bowing their heads at the table. In all cases where the reading of the Scriptures forms a part of the worship the lesson should be short, and if a word or two of comment can be added here and there to make a passage plainer to the children, it would be well.

There should be a small manual of family devotions, consisting of short Scripture lessons with explanations and brief forms of prayer and thanksgiving, for use in such families as may feel the need of such help. If such a manual is not in existence, the writer would undertake, with the assistance of his brethren in the way of suggestions, to prepare such a volume, provided there should seem to be such a demand for it. We are sure there would be such a demand if parents were brought face to face with their duty and obligation in the matter of religious worship and instruction in the home. We can only appeal to our preachers everywhere to lay this matter upon the consciences of their brethren, and to render such assistance as they can in this attempt to revive an interest in family religion, both for the welfare of our children themselves, and of church and state. Any contribution which any one interested in this subject may wish to make, relating either to the time, manner or importance of cultivating religion in the home, will be welcomed.

Why is There a Falling off in the Number of Ministerial Students?

It seems to be a pretty generally admitted fact that the number of students preparing themselves for the ministry in the various religious bodies is less than formerly and less than the demand. We do not cite statistics here to prove that fact, but we assume it as a fact and deal with it as such. It seems to us to be a fact of sufficient significance to attract the attention of the whole church. The New Testament states it to be God's plan to save the world through the preaching of the gospel. The church is the divine agency for nurturing, educating and training a succession of preachers of the gospel, from age to age, and from generation to generation. If it is failing in its duty, it is worth while to study the cause and the remedy.

We believe it may be laid down as a rule that times of great material prosperity are not the times in which men give themselves most readily to the service of Christ. The past decade has been a time of general prosperity in this country, in which fortunes have been made or increased, great business enterprises have been launched, vast combinations of capital have been formed, and the magnitude of these great financial schemes, with the quick fortunes which have been made in stock speculations, have dazzled the eyes of young men and they have been led into business callings rather than to give themselves to the ministry of the gospel. It is strange how material things shut out from men's view the kingdom of God and its higher claims.

Is it not true, too, that the whole church has grown apathetic on the subject? How many churches have definitely in view the sending out of a number of young men from their membership to prepare themselves for the work of the ministry? How seldom do we hear a prayer from our pulpits or in our prayer-meetings, that among the young people there may be some called forth into the great harvest field where the laborers are so few? "How can they preach except they be sent?" and this sending begins back in the Christian home, in the Sunday-school, in the Christian Endeavor society, in the church, in the kindly advice about going to college, with this end in view, and the furnishing of all necessary encouragement and assistance.

It is a fact that a large majority of our ministers come not from the families of the rich, but from the middle classes and the poor. Many of the young men of these families need assistance in order to avail themselves of college training. Herein lies the necessity for a fund for this purpose to be loaned to young men to enable them to complete their preparation for the ministry, and to be paid back when they shall have entered upon their calling. There has not been sufficient attention given, on the part of churches, in seeking out bright, promising young men of good character, and with the ambition to do the most good in the world, and pointing out to them the way by which they can secure the needed education and training for the ministry.

It is no doubt true that the number of ministerial students in some religious bodies has been lessened by certain difficulties in the theological creeds to which they are expected to subscribe. There will have to be considerably more "creed revision" and a good deal more latitude allowed, before this obstacle is entirely removed. But this difficulty does not exist in all religious bodies and certainly not in the churches of this reformation which exact only faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and the acceptance of the word of God as the rule of faith and practice. Nor do we believe that the complaint of a lack of young men who are willing to enter the ministry, applies to our own religious movement to the same extent as it does to others. There is indeed a great lack among us of a sufficient supply of educated and trained ministers of the word, but this arises from the inadequacy of our endowment for our Bible colleges and other institutions of learning where our young men are trained for the ministry, and from the lack of any systematic effort to aid young men who are willing to enter the ministry and who lack the means to provide themselves with a suitable education. As soon as we remedy these two evils by endowing our colleges and establishing a Ministerial Students' Aid Fund, we believe there will be little complaint among us of any insufficiency in the number of ministerial students.

The real remedy for this and all other delinquencies in the church is to bring up the spiritual tone of the churches. The most powerful agency for doing this is the earnest, heart-searching preaching of the gospel, that shall make men realize their obligations to the kingdom of God, and to see that the only life worth living is a life of service to God and our fellowmen.

The Business Men's Meeting.

One of the special meetings at Detroit which has in it the promise of great good, was a Business Men's Meeting which Bro. J. H. Allen, of this city, was principally instrumental in working up, though unfortunately he was called away before the meeting was held. At the first session nothing was done, but the election of a general committee to provide for a future meeting at St. Louis in connection with our next national convention. This committee consists of Sydney H. Thomson, as chairman, J. H. Allen and H. M. Meier, all business men of St. Louis. At a second meeting held at Detroit, as we learn from the secretary of that meeting, J. H. Fillmore, the resolution concerning ministers engaging in the promotion of questionable business schemes, which we printed last week, was adopted. It was also voted that a column be secured in two or more of our larger religious journals in which to conduct a business department "for the purpose of bringing before the church at large the best business suggestions and plans regarding the work of the church, contributions to that end to be accepted from the business brethren of the church." A number of business men participated in the discussions, among them being Robert Christie, of New York City; J. H. Fillmore, of Cincinnati; C. S. Paine, of Omaha, Neb.; Charles B. Sala, Minerva, O.; S. Potts, of Minneapolis; S. M. Hunt, of Springfield, Mass.; J. D. Wharton, J. W. Darby, Eli H. Long, E. B. King, D. F. Blonde and W. C. Allen. Among the matters discussed were how to interest the churches which are not contributing to the missionary societies, and the suggestion was made to secure at least one business man from such churches if possible to attend our national conventions.

There are many questions which might well be considered with profit in a business men's meeting, in which should be represented the active, capable business men, and men of means, in our various churches. The question of how they may best advance the kingdom of God by the use of their means we should think would be a vital question for conscientious Christian men, possessed of some wealth, to consider together. The matter of conducting our local churches in a more business-like way might be discussed with great profit. As a matter of fact we all feel that our business men have not had a sufficient voice, or exerted their influence in an adequate way, in connection with all our general enterprises. This has not been because the preachers desired any monopoly of power, but rather because the business men have too often neglected to attend our conventions, and when they have attended, have not felt able, as public speakers, to express themselves before our conventions; but the Business Men's Meeting, furnishes a way by which this evil may be remedied. We hope, therefore, that the Business Men's Meeting at St. Louis will be largely attended. If the convention program, proper, covers only the forenoon and evening of each day, as has been suggested, and as we believe would be wise, the afternoons would be left free for such special meetings, and all those interested in such meetings would have the opportunity of attending. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST gladly offers its columns to the promotion of this movement for larger and better things among the business men of our churches.

The Christian Endeavor Book League Fund.

The Christian Endeavorers of California have taken an advance step. At their late convention at Santa Cruz they adopted the following preamble and resolution:

"Whereas the means at command of the great majority of our pastors are not sufficient to permit them the blessed stimulus of new books—devotional, topical, historical, missionary or otherwise—that is so necessary to the enriching of the spiritual life and the promotion of the intellectual growth and the increase of the preaching power and

Whereas the Christian Endeavor of the Christian churches in California in convention assembled believe that their pledge to Christ to do whatever he would like to have them do, places upon them a splendid responsibility in this particular, therefore

Be it resolved, that we recommend to the local Endeavor Societies the formation of a Christian Endeavor Book League Fund for their pastor, any other pastor or missionary as follows:

Class A, $2 per month, $24 per year, shall constitute a Class A fund to be raised by twenty Endeavorers, pledging 10 cents per month, or 40 members 5 cents each per month, etc., or Class B, $1 per month, $12 per year, shall constitute a Class B fund to be raised by ten members giving 10 cents per month or 20 giving 5 cents per month, etc., such $1 or $2 per month to be given to the pastor or missionary as consecrated money for the purchase of books or periodicals for the equipment of his library and for no other purpose.

We believe that such a work will appeal to the Endeavorers as intensely practical, that its results, if faithfully carried out will produce a better educated ministry, rich and more interesting sermonizers, the wider dissemination of biblical knowledge and history and research pertaining thereto, and above all, the establishment of closer relation between pastor and people, longer pastorates, wider Christian influences for church and ministers with the consequent winning of souls for the Master."

The object outlined in the above is certainly a most desirable one and the plan, too, seems to be practicable. To assist our underpaid preachers in securing helpful books is a work that might well enlist the interest of all Endeavorers. Bro. P. C. McFarlane, of Alameda, Cali., has been appointed superintendent for northern California, this year, and expects to give considerable attention to this work. In a note to the editor he says: "I believe if this movement is generally taken up and sustained, it will be the means of doubling and trebling the influence of many of our preachers. It will raise the dead, revive the dying and cast out the demons of discouragement and spiritual decay." We are glad to call the attention of our Endeavorers throughout the country to this method of work and commend the same to their favorable consideration.

Editor's Easy Chair.

The quest of God is the highest pursuit of the human soul. To know God, and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent, is life eternal. A great preacher once exclaimed, in an outburst of deepest longing, "O, that I could know more of God!" May it not be said that one's knowledge of God is the true measure of his progress? While it is the deepest passion of true souls to know God, it is God's deepest concern in His relation to men that they should know Him. He has been seeking, through all the ages, to disclose Himself to men; to manifest his character and his will. We greatly underestimate our opportunities for learning of God. The agnostic who claims that we cannot know God is blind to His innumerable manifestations. The whole visible creation is a sublime theophany, and we do not study nature intelligently until we study it as the outward manifestation of the infinite and the immanent God. We look with admiration upon the grandeur of the ocean, the majesty of the mountains and the gorgeous beauty of the woods in these autumnal days. But many of us fail to see, in all these, the external symbols of the invisible Spirit. Are not the elements of grandeur, sublimity, majesty and beauty, which enter into the divine character spelled out to us in these visible symbols? Does He not love those features that are so prominent in His creative work? In studying nature we are studying God.

But God had to come closer to men than He does in nature to inspire love for Himself. Hence He visited man in the form of man. In Jesus Christ we have a true revelation of God, and a fuller revelation than could be made in star, in mountain or in the far-reaching sea. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." We have the records concerning Jesus of Nazareth which enable us to know much of

His mind, His spirit, His attitude toward men of all classes, toward sin and toward righteousness. We know how He loved men, how compassionate His heart was toward our poor, ignorant, suffering humanity. We know how constantly He "went about doing good." We know what an optimistic view He took of men, and how He appealed to that which is best and noblest in man's nature. We know how utterly unselfish He was, preferring rather to minister to others than to be ministered unto. This is God. Why should any one say, we cannot know God, when we have this resplendent picture of His character shining in the face of Jesus Christ? We only know God, in the highest aspects of His character, as we know Christ. But Jesus Christ reveals a most lovable God, whom He called, and taught us to call, by the tender name of Father. "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ!"

But there is still another way in which we may know God and his will concerning us, which we think is very much neglected. It is in his own providential dealings with us. How few there be, apparently, who seek to interpret God's will concerning them in the light of their own personal experiences. In every blessing that comes to us, in every calamity that overtakes us, in every victory, in every sorrow and bitter defeat in which our fondest hopes seem to be trampled in the dust, we should stop and ask, "What does God mean by this?" "What lesson is he trying to teach me in these experiences through which I have passed, or am passing?" No one should doubt for a moment that by everyone of these experiences God is trying to impress upon us some lesson which we have failed to learn, and which we must learn in order to our highest happiness. For each life God has a plan, and when we run contrary to his plan for us, these bitter experiences are to remind us of this deflection from the right course and to bring us back to the path of duty. Anyone who will study his own history, and look minutely into his own personal experiences from childhood to the present, can hardly fail to see in God a compassionate Father who is not dealing with us according to our sins, nor rewarding us according to our iniquities, but who is seeking to guide us, by all the disciplinary agencies of life, into the true path of happiness and of highest development. When the psalmist made such a retrospect of his life, he saw not only the kindness of God, but his loving kindness, and not only mercies, but tender mercies.

But when we have studied God in all these ways, can we understand him perfectly? Certainly not. God is infinite and we are finite. There will be problems which we cannot solve.

There will be mysteries we cannot understand. There will be providences and experiences which baffle us. What then? "We walk by faith, not by sight." Can a little child in its infancy know all the father's plans for its future welfare, and understand all his dealings with it? Much less should we expect to fully understand all that our heavenly Father is doing for us and through us and in us in all these experiences of life. But we have seen enough of His goodness, we have learned enough of His character in Jesus Christ, to perfectly trust Him even where we cannot understand Him. The one thing which we cannot doubt, if we believe Christ and know him, is, that God means good to us and not harm, in all His dealings with us, and that He is in all the experiences of our life, whether of joy or of sorrow, seeking to work in us "both to will and to do His good pleasure." Our chief purpose in this meditation has been to lead the reader to see God in his daily life and seek to understand the lessons He would teach us by these daily experiences. May He lead us "beside the still waters" and cause us to "lie down in green pastures." But if it fall to our lot rather to pass through the dark valley with its deep, chill shadows, may we not forget that even there He is with us to guide us, to feed us and to bring us safely at last into the everlasting fold!

Notes and Comments.

Elsewhere in this issue will be found an article by Dr. Mosheim Rhodes of this city on "The Faith of the Evangelical Lutheran Church." This is one of the great historic movements in the church. Referring to what Luther says about his followers wearing his name, as quoted by Dr. Rhodes, we can only regret that all those who are seeking to carry out the reformation he inaugurated have not acted on his advice in this respect. Dr. Rhodes might also have quoted what Luther thought of baptism. It is well known that both Luther and Calvin gave preference to immersion, Luther going so far as to declare that "aspersion destroys the force of some passages in the New Testament." (See Schmucker, [Lutheran] Bib. Theol., Vol. II. p. 290.) On the question of name and action of baptism, therefore, we who call ourselves Christians and practice immersion are truer to Luther's teaching than those who wear his name. The Christian world owes a debt of profound gratitude to Martin Luther for the great and unique work he accomplished in behalf of a purer and more vital Christianity, and our readers will be interested in the article setting forth the present position of that great religious body which, with more or less fidelity, has stood for these principles through the centuries following the reformation.

Our October Anniversaries

By F. D. Power

A journey in the golden month of the year through the autumn-tinted forests of the Alleghanies and the harvest-laden fields of Pennsylvania, New York and Canada, and by way of the never-tiring wonders of Niagara, is an experience worth remembering. Detroit is "the city of the straits" and has been under three governments. For fifty years the French flag with its fleur-de-lis floated over the primitive city, then the cross of King George, and now, for a hundred and seven years, "Old Glory." Beautiful for situation, with great industries, cultured people, and charming homes, it is itself worth seeing; and when the visitor finds thousands of congenial spirits coming up to the same center as with one purpose to a sort of mountain top of spiritual vision, a harvest-home of busy workers in the Master's vineyard, it is indeed a blessed pilgrimage.

Seven of us journeyed together. We broke the long trip by a day's rest at "the Falls." Here we encountered about 3,000 "Dowieites" on the way to Gotham. Two of our party, Hoyer and Hopkins, curious to observe these followers of "Elijah, the Restorer," were caught in a photographed group of the faithful, and will no doubt appear as true members of "Zion." These Chicago people, by the way, seemed to be a very respectable sort of folk, free from tobacco and some other offensive things that one usually has to deal with in a crowd of excursionists. But it can not be questioned that the exhibition of Dowie and his crowd in Madison Square Garden as exponents of the Christian religion, has been one of the most hurtful things to the cause of Christ the east has known for many a day. Another item for the litany: From all fakes and fakirs in religion, and all the itch of Athens, good Lord deliver us!

Canada has not yet heard the decision of the Alaska Boundary Commission, so we rolled through its territory peacefully enough in broad daylight. The women had a great meeting in session, but the Lord's day was the high day of the feast. Perhaps five thousand were there. Nearly all the churches except the Episcopal and Catholic were open to us. It was my privilege to visit the First Presbyterian, where they have the finest organ and the most splendid music in the city. It was rich indeed in all its appointments. One accustomed to the effete and slow-paced East is almost taken off his feet when he finds such elegance and up-to-dateness in "the wild and woolly." Twice before I had preached in Detroit, and both times in Presbyterian churches, at the Christian Endeavor Convention in '98; so I felt at home with Dr. Jennings. Taking me into his study, he knelt and prayed for God's blessing on the preacher and the service, and then in the pulpit he fervently remembered the convention and the work of the Disciples. From all the churches came the same report of the gracious manner in which the visitors were received.

Sunday afternoon the zenith of the convention was reached. It was a most impressive scene when the Disciples came together to break bread. Fervent prayer, sweet music, simple words of exhortation, holy fellowship, the vast multitude of bowed heads and kindred hearts uniting in solemn observance of the sufferings and death of the Lord Jesus. The world celebrates the memory of great conquerors and their splendid victories. Here was a host commemorating an ignominious death on a Roman cross, nineteen centuries ago. This has ever been with us the supreme act of worship on the Lord's day; not song, nor eloquent preaching, nor even prayer and scripture reading, but participation in the emblems of His body and His blood. How much the Disciples owe to this drill in the weekly observance of the simple Supper! The cross is the central feature of Christianity. In the cross is the hiding of the Redeemer's power. Always, everywhere, the cross.

In no respect were these anniversaries greater than in their spiritual aspects. Worship, adoration, humble reliance upon Almighty God, thanksgiving for past mercies, prayer for larger wisdom and consecration—these marked the sessions from first to last. Addresses like those of Mrs. Kelley, Mr. Morgan, Mr. Medbury, and others, were full of unction. In the devotional services every heart was uplifted. God was there, the Holy Spirit was there, the burden of unsaved millions was there, and so the hours were holy hours; the convocation, a holy convocation.

The reports of work done were great. My first convention was in Cincinnati, in 1874, when about $5,000 was reported for all missionary causes. This year the sum is $645,110; 33,464 added to our churches, and a total membership of 1,220,841. This does not look like "a disappearing brotherhood confined to the languid middle west." Figures don't lie, however much liars may figure in the newspapers. Forty-five thousand dollars raised in the convention where no offerings were asked, is another memorable thing. In the former days heroic efforts were made in the conventions themselves to swell the receipts; now no appeals are made to the delegates, yet ten times the sum then raised is voluntarily given. These things mean growth. Some of us with hoary hairs will yet see the day when the gifts will be reckoned by millions, where now they are hundreds of thousands, and the advance will be even less wonderful than it has been in the past quarter of a century.

"A quarter of a million for foreign missions this year!" "Half a million for Church Extension by 1905! One million by 1909!" "Two hundred thousand for home missions this year!" "Faithfulness, fruitfulness, fullness! 50,000 women; 20,000 Tidings; $150,000!" were some of the watch-words. I want to add one more: "One million for our colleges this year!" I do not know but that Detroit itself gives the slogan for 1903 in all departments of our church and missionary and educational and individual life—"Detroit," a name from a foreign tongue with a ringing significance—right, straight, direct, onward, keeping the way, however narrow or difficult, that brings heaven and earth together, that brings the kingdom of God to men. As the narrow pass of Thermopylae opened the way from plain Thessaly to storied and sovereign Greece; as the straits of Gibraltar from the confines of the Mediterranean to God's great Atlantic, washing all shores; as the narrow Detroit river between the Great Lakes for the passage of her 25,000 vessels yearly, laden with wealth and blessings for the nations of the earth; so by the gospel stream the bounty of heaven is to reach all men, all men. A good scripture is Paul's word to the saints at Philippi: "Whereto we have already attained, let us walk by the same rule, let us mind the same thing."

Who can describe the holy fellowship; the inspiration of song and prayer and sacred eloquence; the glow of a common faith and hope and love; the mighty impulse toward God, blessed foretaste of heaven, glorious uplift of soul? "What do you put upon your faces to make them shine?" asked the Hindoo of the native Christian. "Nothing." "But you do: I have seen the faces of your Christians everywhere and they shine unlike our own. What do you use to make them shine?" "It is the grace of God!"

Vision.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

For him who has the eyes to see,
There shines in every flower and tree
Truth from above;
For him who has the ears to hear,
In every breeze that draweth near
Is note of love.

For him who has the magic sight,
The world of day, the world of night,
Is wonder-land;
To him no ill brings coming death;
'Tis but renewing of the breath
For world more grand.

A Business-like Church Business Meeting

By Amos R. Wells

I say a businesslike meeting, because not all church business meetings are business-like.

Some are pow-wows; much talk, little done.

Some are cemeteries.

Few indeed are like the meetings of a prosperous and active business firm, in which all present are equal partners; meetings full of rejoicing over what has been done, full of eager planning for more to do, full as any evangelistic meeting of the co-operating spirit of our heavenly partner.

Should churches hold business meetings at regular intervals? Yes, if they are such business meetings; never unless there is business; never merely for the sake of holding a meeting. The possibility of such a meeting, and at regular intervals of, say, once a month, is a severe test of a church; but it is a test the church surely should meet. If nothing has been done to report, and nothing is doing to be planned, certainly it is less the business meeting than the church that needs a reformation and revival.

The forms of church administration vary from the broadest democracy to an absolute monarchy. In this article I take it for granted that the constitution of my reader's church permits and encourages some assembly in which pastor and people talk over their joint work for the kingdom, and together form designs for its progress, a meeting with some degree of authority, if only that of suggestion and advice.

Over such a meeting the pastor naturally presides; if I were a pastor, I should not have it otherwise. Some churches, however, with a desire to preserve the strict neutrality of the pastor on all debated points, have the custom of electing annually a lay moderator of the church, who takes charge of the business meetings, and thus frees the pastor for such action from the floor as he may deem best. This course is undoubtedly wise as a temporary expedient when matters come up in which the pastor is personally involved.

Certainly much of the success of a business meeting depends on the presiding officer. If he is weak, vacillating, dilatory, verbose, tedious, inert, the meeting is flabby and drags. He should be a man of few words, but those words should be strong. He is to suggest debate, but not guide it or participate in it. He should be decisive and prompt. His bearing and speech should be alert. Always courteous, never disconcerted, full of the resources of tact, ready with the oil of wit, and moved always by a deep and preserving earnestness—such a chairman will of himself insure a successful business meeting. If nothing has been done, he will arouse the church to do something. If something has been done, he will stir the church to a "divine discontent." If much has been done, he will clap his hands and lead off in the doxology.

When a business meeting fails, when it falls dead, it will generally be found that no preparation was made for it. Half of a business meeting consists in what is done before it is called to order.

It should be well advertised. Announce it frequently and energetically from the pulpit, in the church paper, on the bulletin boards. Create an atmosphere of anticipation; something is going to happen, something pleasant and profitable.

To arouse interest, proclaim the principal subject of the meeting; or its subjects, if there are more than one. Announce also whatever special features are to be introduced by way of instruction and entertainment. Make each meeting an event.

This requires, of course, that the main business of the meeting be laid out beforehand, as far as possible. I would plan, for example, one business meeting a year for each of the major enterprises of the church—one to consider the work of the Sunday-school and Bible study in the home, one to consider the young people's society and the training of the young for church work, one to consider the missionary study and activities of the church, others for work with men and boys, the poor, the music, the church finances, evangelistic work, family life, the social life of the church, the relation of the church to the community.

Every meeting where such a specialty is considered, should be introduced by an essay or talk concerning it presented by a specialist; and this should be followed not only by discussion, but always by the introduction of actual business, some forward step desired to be taken with regard to the Sunday-school, the church finances, evangelistic work, or whatever is the theme of the evening. Every meeting should adjourn with a sense of progress, of achievement.

Other business meetings should consist of a panoramic view of the church life, the various activities and organizations being taken up one after the other, brief reports being read by responsible officers, and then the question asked, "What more can we do for the children? for the poor? for our town?" Such a meeting should be preceded by an inspiring paper on the church life in general, what it means, and the spirit that should animate it. If this cannot be obtained, it is always possible to have read some suggestive article, or extract from some bright book. The presiding officer should always, at some time in the evening, invite general suggestions and questions on the work of the church.

Nothing will sooner wear out men's patience and disgust them with church business meetings and church methods in general, and nothing will more surely set a church by the ears, than haphazard discussions of poorly presented and half-understood situations, followed by repeated adjournments for more information. Of course, we must avoid hasty action. When real differences of opinion occur on important matters, time is the safest of solvents. The disputed point may well be referred to a committee composed fairly of both sides, and the church must wait till the committee has threshed the subject out. But the majority must rule. Some timid churches, over-anxious for peace, have set up the dictatorship of the minority. If there are those that will not walk in any way unless it is their own way, sorrowfully relegate them to their own church, the Church of the Solitary Ego.

On the other hand, while you insist on effective action, avoid machine rule as you would shun the plague. There is no protection against it except the democratic spirit, practically manifested in the business meeting. Don't let only a few—the same few—make all the motions. Go to others and ask them to make them, if they will not of their own accord. Don't let only a few make all the speeches. Call on others for their opinion, and draw them out publicly. Don't toady to the rich or eloquent or experienced. One of the prime objects of the church business meeting is to make the poor, the stammering, the beginners feel at home in the church. Don't let only a few vote. If the vote has not been full and hearty, call for it again, and yet again, until substantially all hands are up, on one side or the other. Do not be satisfied until it has become not only easy for all to take part, but inevitable.

Open with prayer; genuine prayer, that elevates the church business to the rank of devotion which it should always hold. Close with praise; if the business has been transacted in the spirit of Christ, you will have abundant cause for thanksgiving.

As to the minor details of the meeting, there is one so important that it must have a special word. Next to the presiding officer, the clerk has in his hands the making or marring of the occasion. A blundering clerk, who takes down motions with inaccurate wording and omits from his records items that should go there, will work much mischief. So will a stupid, slow and paltering clerk, who cannot read his own writing, who delays the meeting with needless calls for explanation, who is not familiar with the records

The Faith of the Evangelical Lutheran Church

By M. Rhodes

The Lutheran Church had its origin in one of the greatest movements in human history, "The Reformation of the Sixteenth Century."

It was not the purpose of Luther to found a church, but to enter protest against the errors and corrupt practices of Rome. To all who read the history of that event without prejudice, that protest was as scriptural in its substance as it was sincere in its avowal.

It was not until Rome had cast Luther out, that his followers were called "Lutherans" by way of scorn. Subsequently the name was accepted as a thing inevitable, but not without emphatic protest from Luther. He says, "I wish people to be silent as regards my name, and to let themselves be called not 'Lutherans' but Christians. How came I, poor corrupt mortal, to this, that Christ's children should be called by my unhallowed name? Not so, my friends. Let us put away party names and bear the name of Christ, whose doctrine we hold." The name however, adheres not because we worship Luther, nor accept everything he said, but because of the doctrine for which his name stands. We are Lutherans, not in any spirit of party, but because we sincerely avow the great truths which, under God, Luther recovered to the church and the world. It is possibly unknown to many outside that the Lutheran church is the most polyglot of all, and preaches the gospel in more tongues than any. Lutherans are to be found in all parts of the world and number in all more than sixty millions.

The growth of the denomination continues to be rapid. The policy of the Lutheran church is simple and never arbitrary. As expressed in her formula of government, we believe, "As order is necessary to the prosperity of every associate body, and as Jesus Christ has left no entire, specific form of government and discipline for his church, it is the duty of every individual church to adopt such regulations as appear to them most consistent with the spirit and precepts of the New Testament, and best calculated to subserve the interests of the church of Christ."

The rights of members of the church are carefully respected. In some countries the Episcopal form obtains, in all, more or less the Congregational. The ministry is recognized as a "divinely appointed office," and in accord with the doctrines of the "universal priesthood of believers," the parity of the ministry is maintained.

The Lutheran church is unsurpassed in its hymnology and in the wealth of its liturgical literature. In worship it is moderately liturgical. Uniformity in form is not insisted upon; whatever tends most to edification is allowed. Our church makes much of worship.

Everything commonplace is avoided, and the spirit of devout reverence is encouraged. Her forms in all their parts are intensely scriptural. We insist upon the worshipers having a share in the service, encourage congregational singing and seek to cultivate a cheery spiritual atmosphere in the sanctuary, so that with the immediate blessing, the memory will abide.

Her care of the young enters into her order. The Lutheran church enjoins upon her ministers the careful catechisation of the youth who seek membership within her fold. Two or three months is devoted each year by the minister to the study of the doctrines of God's word and of the church with the young; the object being not only to make our youth familiar with what the church teaches, but to lead them to an intelligent acceptance of Jesus Christ as a personal Savior. This is followed by the rite of confirmation, which admits them to all the privileges of the church.

We believe that knowledge is essential to the service and permanence of faith, and in this way, we seek to impart it to the young.

Our church in all countries has but one title, "The Evangelical Lutheran," and but one common symbol of faith, "The Augsburg Confession." We accept "the word of God as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and the Augsburg confession as a correct exhibition of the fundamental doctrines of the divine word and of the faith of our church, founded upon that word."

The Lutheran church makes much of the central truth of the gospel, justification by faith alone, and holds that no merit of virtue or of works avails anything in securing our personal salvation, but that "we obtain remission of sins, and are justified before God, by grace, for Christ's sake, through faith." As stoutly do we insist that this gratuitous acceptance of Christ must be followed by holy living and the daily bringing forth of the fruit of the spirit. This great truth is distinctive with us, because our church's life is rooted in it. Others hold this doctrine in common with us, yet we believe we are especially called to emphasize it in all the ages. Luther was wont to call it, "The doctrine of a standing or a falling church." We believe that every defection of the faith is a departure from this great truth. The loss of it, made the reformation a necessity; the recovery of it brought back the quickening spirit, and enthroned the Christ. Luther says, "It is that which forms the church, nourishes it, builds it up, preserves and defends it. No one can rightly teach in the church or successfully resist its adversary, if he be wanting in attachment to this great truth."

This doctrine of justification by faith is so identified with the history and life of our church that we regard it as chief of all.

With like devotion the Lutheran Church accepts the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's Supper as means of grace appointed by Jesus Christ. They are not such because water is used in the one and bread and wine in the other, but because with these they are connected with the Word and Spirit of the Lord. With us that which constitutes baptism is, "The word of the institution, water and faith—where these are, there is the Holy Spirit, and where the Spirit is there is life." "Children are to be baptized who by baptism being offered to God are received into divine favor." Heartily do we believe in the Christian nurture of the children through the church and by the believing parent, and as heartily do we believe in conversion and in regeneration by the Holy Spirit.

We accept baptism by immersion, but practice sprinkling.

There is no article of our faith in which the Lutheran Church has been so persistently misrepresented as in the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. With us this ordinance is not simply a memorial service. If this were all, there would be little significance in it, for all else in the service of the sanctuary reminds us of the passion of our Lord. It is also a means of grace. We teach that "in the Lord's Supper the body and blood of Christ are truly present under the forms of bread and wine, and are there communicated and received." To many this is a hard saying, and we are straightway charged with holding the Romish view of the Eucharist. The charge is wholly false. It will be admitted by all who attach any significance to this feast of love, other than a memorial, that if the Master be present in any way, he must be truly and not untruly present. We utterly reject the teaching of Rome that the bread and wine in any way whatever are changed into the body and blood of Christ. It is a presence we contend for, not any material transformation. The bread and wine remain just what they are. They are simply elements through which Christ communicates himself—all the benefits of his passion to the sincere believer.

The Lutheran Church has never believed nor taught the monstrous error of Transubstantiation (a change of substance) nor Consubstantiation (a change into one substance). We accept the Lord's own word, "This is my body; this is my blood." We do not pretend to explain this presence. It is

Christ's Sayings—I. By Cephas Shelburne

Nicodemus said to Jesus: "Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God." The word "rabbi" means master in the sense of teacher. It is the Hebrew for "my master," and a Hebrew master was a Jewish doctor or expounder of the law. What about this Rabbi, Master, my Master and yours, the Teacher come from God?

The teachings or sayings of Christ are all compressed within the compass of the four gospels. They possess the merit of brevity. Does it not strike us as a little strange that the Son of God, of whom the prophets did write, whose coming the whole world looked forward to, and of whom all literature was filled, chosen before the foundation of the world, and before Abraham, was to be the founder of a new religion and universal kingdom, of whose church and kingdom the whole system of the Jews was but a type—does it not strike us as strange that the whole foundation, principles, evolution and sweep of this new religion and universal kingdom of God on earth, should be formulated and compiled in a few brief words recorded by the four evangelists, and when taken together and printed, can be carried in the vest pocket? I have a little book three inches long, two and one-half wide and one-eighth of an inch thick, that records all the sayings of Christ upon which the universal, earth-kingdom of heaven has been built. "Brevity is the soul of wit," wit is striking wisdom, and here we have recorded the wit and wisdom of the world. Evolution is an unfolding from pre-existing, unfolded germs. From a germ or beginning, God unfolded the flower and the solar system and the world and our social order. When Infinite wisdom and foresight formed a seed, and said let it bring forth after its kind, and there came forth all the flowers and fragrance of the world—that is wonderful.

But more wonderful is it that Christ should utter a few brief truths and out of them should be evolved the whole wonderful system of Christianity and the kingdom of God on earth; that, wrapped up, involved, in a few condensed germs are the beauty, wisdom and truth out of which should be evolved the universal kingdom and brotherhood of man, and the knowledge of the Lord that should cover the earth as the waters cover the sea.

His sayings, precepts, illustrations, sermons, proverbs, aphorisms, parables, were brief, pointed, concise, blazing with divine wisdom, beauty and power. Let us illustrate: "A city set on a hill cannot be hid." That sentence of nine monosyllables contains in touching brevity all that Mr. Hall Cain has put into the 500 pages of his "Eternal City," and all that Dr. Barclay has put into the 600 pages of his fine book, "The City of the Great King." It is wonderful in its brevity, simplicity, and yet in its breadth and adaptability and wisdom. A child can understand it, a saint cannot outgrow it. It applies with marvelous accuracy to the little, white, hill-top village of Nazareth, to the great, blazing, golden-spiked temple on Mt. Moriah, to the White City at Buffalo, the sky scrapers of New York; it applies to the Holy City, the heavenly Jerusalem, to every illuminated soul that lets its light shine before men, and to the purity, separateness, loftiness and whiteness of the church.

Jewish literature abounds in proverbs and aphorisms; we find them in the Old Bible and other writings of the Jews, their Talmud, wisdom books and sayings of the fathers; we find them in Heraclitus of the Greeks, the Greek philosophers, Chinese, Japanese and Persian moralists, Indian epigrams, the Koran; Epictetus, Goethe, Pascal, Luther, Theocritus, Voltaire and hundreds of others have spoken to us in this form of truth. But the sayings of Christ are without a parallel in any other form of proverbial instruction, either ancient or modern. Look at their marvelous brevity, simplicity, picturesqueness, beauty. They compress books of wisdom into a single line, they illustrate like a flash of lightning; a child may understand them, the wisest philosopher and theologian cannot exhaust their infinite meaning. All the centuries of time, all the ages of eternity cannot exhaust the wealth of spiritual truth wrapped up in one of the Savior's aphorisms. "A city set on a hill," applied to the little hill country of Nazareth, expands its teaching into the electric blaze of the twentieth century, widens out into the millennium fullness, and on into the ages to come of the great, white throne.

A sharp, shrewd bank president told me that he owed his business career, more than anything else, to the direct, pointed, wise sayings, proverbs and parables of the Savior, and that he frequently purchased small Testaments, marked these sayings and gave them to young business men. Study some of them beginning: "If the light that is in thee be darkness—;" "Do men gather grapes of thorns—;" "Be ye wise as serpents—;" "If the blind lead the blind—." Simple, plain, direct illustration; no gorgeous metaphor or sonorous rhetoric or theological phrases or pedantry of the schools or minutiae of logic. No wonder the common people heard him gladly, and that little children came unto him, and that the multitude praised him! It was "to hear the gracious words that proceeded out of his mouth."

Nine-tenths of the gospel words are monosyllable. Taking ten of these sayings of the Master Teacher, within which are enclosed the deepest wisdom and spiritual truth of the kingdom of God, and they contained a little over 100 words, 90 of them words of one syllable, and in the whole 100 words there was only one of three syllables, and this a proper name, the word "Pharisee;" and yet these ten sayings contain almost every principle of his teaching, out of which the kingdom of heaven is evolved. Contrasting these ten sayings with the language of the first authorized creed, the Nicene, and I found there one sentence that contained as many words as the whole ten sayings of the Savior, couched in a diction and theology that no human mind could understand. No wonder it has become old and obsolete, and laid upon the musty theological shelves. The same comparison may be made with the Augsburg, Westminster and Philadelphia Confessions of Faith. Preachers, teachers, writers, divinity students, theological professors and schools imitate this Rabbi and Teacher sent from God. The children, the common people, the multitude that heard him gladly, are hungering for the same simple, universal gospel.

LIKED HIS "NIP"

Not a Whiskey but a Coffee Toper.

Give coffee half a chance and with some people it sets its grip hard and fast. "Up to a couple of years ago," says a business man of Brooklyn, N. Y., "I was as constant a coffee drinker as it was possible to be, indeed my craving for coffee was equal to that of a drunkard for his regular 'nip' and the effect of the coffee drug upon my system was indeed deplorable.

My skin lacked its natural color, my features were pinched and my nerves were shattered to such an extent as to render me very irritable. I also suffered from palpitation of the heart.

"It was while in this condition I read an article about Postum Food Coffee and concluded to try it. It was not long before Postum had entirely destroyed my raging passion for coffee, and in a short time I had entirely given up coffee for delicious Postum.

"The change that followed was so extraordinary, I am unable to describe it. Suffice it to say, however, that all my troubles have disappeared. I am my original happy self again, and on the whole the soothing and pleasant effects produced by my cup of Postum make me feel as though I have been 'landed at another station.'

"Not long ago I converted one of my friends to Postum, and he is now as loud in its praise as I am." Name furnished by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Morley's Life of Gladstone

["The Life of Gladstone." By John Morley. The Macmillan Co.; 3 volumes $10.50.]

By William Durban

Like all other progressive Britishers I have always felt that it is a supreme honor for an ordinary mortal to be permitted to celebrate the fame of William Ewart Gladstone. By far the greatest Englishmen of recent times were Gladstone and Spurgeon. Some great men are over-rated. But others are far greater than even the highest estimates of them make them appear. I was so closely associated with C. H. Spurgeon, during the best years of his life, that I know there were superlative attributes in him, of both character and genius, not generally understood, famous though he was. Gladstone was of the same supreme order. I, like a host of the admirers of the greatest statesman England ever had, have waited eagerly for the appearance of Mr. John Morley's "Life of W. E. Gladstone," but I wondered if the biography would be disappointing. It fully comes up to the most exacting expectations. These three large volumes are adequately monumental of the moral worth, the spiritual exaltation, and the intellectual glory of the political prophet of whom his country was not worthy.

Mr. John Morley has accomplished his task triumphantly. Of biography, more than any other kind of literature, it may be said that the art of writing is the art of omission. He has known what to leave out, and thus has not, in the usual style overloaded the record of a famous man with letters and documents unessential to the main purpose. In addition to the marvellous multifarious activity of the man, and the complexity of character as seen from the outside, Gladstone's life in its extent and its intimacy with events is the history of the whole of the grand Victorian era. A glance through the three huge volumes reveals the beauty and majesty of Gladstone's personality in four aspects—as a man, a Christian, a politician, and a citizen. As a man, W. E. Gladstone always perplexed those who looked at life with narrow minds. He was a mystery to the ordinary Britisher, who, I am bound with some sense of humiliation to admit, is not a large-minded sort of person. I cannot flatter my countrymen of average order, though I maintain that they are courageous, love fair-play, and pursue their somewhat insular aims with dogged consistency and persistency. Gladstone soared too far beyond the limitations of British thought, and this was why he lost his grip in the last period of his marvelous career.

Gladstone as a Man.

Gladstone was one of those rare beings who are always growing, always outstripping their old selves, always learning and always transcending the ideas of the mere mob. Men used to complain of the difficulty of understanding the changes, seemingly so swift, that took place in his view of things. But his biography throws vivid light on this irrepressible tendency to move intellectually upward. Here is an entry from his diary at the age of 52: "Dec. 29. Began my 52nd year. I cannot believe it. I feel within me the rebellious, unspoken word, 'I will not be old.' The horizon enlarges, the sky lifts around me." Here we have an explanation of what seemed often to be inconsistency. His seeming dualism of character perplexed people, as for example when, though a staunch supporter of the Church of England, he disestablished that very Church in Ireland. The truth is that in the view of a truly great soul the sky is always lifting and the horizon is always enlarging.

Gladstone as a Christian.

Ordinary people who were bewildered by the progressiveness of Gladstone's mind, and rashly concluded that he was a fickle and erratic genius, "made mad," like the apostle, "with much learning," knew nothing of the anchor which held him fast to the moorings, as he seemed to drift on the sea of public life. Though his ecclesiastical sentiments seemed to be as mutable as his political opinions, there was one thing that never wavered in his soul, and this was his Christian faith. The tribute paid to him by Lord Salisbury was summed up in the dictum that he was a "great Christian." Now, though Mr. John Morley is an agnostic, he endeavors to do full justice to the fundamental fact of Gladstone's life. That human life was throughout harmoniously attuned to a celestial keynote. At every crisis in his life he sought strength and comfort from prayer, and from some word he might find in the Bible. In what he calls "the very harrowing contest at Oxford of 1847," he fed on the verse, "O Lord God, thou strength of my health, thou hast covered my head in the day of battle." At his first Budget speech in 1853 it was, "O turn thee then unto me, and have mercy upon me, give thy strength to thy servant, and help the son of thine handmaid." On his 60th birthday the entry in his diary is, "The Almighty seems to sustain me and spare me for some purpose of his own, deeply unworthy as I know myself to be. Glory be to his name." When he resumed the Premiership in 1880, he records, "the remarkable manner in which Holy Scripture has been applied to me for my comfort and admonition." Mr. Morley may well say that a man who approached his task in such a spirit was at least impregnable to ordinary mortifications. His colleagues little thought that in the House of Commons, before he rose to make a speech or to introduce an important bill, he turned his heart to his God in silent prayer.

Gladstone the Idealist.

I recall the following noble words spoken by Mr. Gladstone 26 years ago to the boys of Hawarden Grammar School: "Be inspired with the belief that life is a great and noble calling; not a mean and grovelling thing that we are to shuffle through as we can, but an elevated and lofty destiny." Those words fully accord with what Mr. Morley aptly says: "We are dazzled by the endless versatility of his mind and interests as a man of action, scholar and controversial athlete; as legislator, administrator, leader of the people; as the strongest of his time in the main branches of executive force; strongest in persuasive force; supreme in the exacting details of national finance; master of the parliamentary arts; yet always living in the noble visions of moral and spiritual idealist."

But how often in the history of humanity has it turned that the loftiest idealists and the most visionary dreamers are also the most strenuous and practical men of action! Mr. Morley goes on to say, "However men may judge the fruit it bore, Mr. Gladstone lived in vigorous activity every day through all his years. Time showed that he was born with a frame of steel. Though, unlike some men of heroic strength—Napoleon for example—he often knew fatigue and weariness, yet his organs never failed to answer the call of an intense and persistent will. Sir James Graham said of him in these years (1830-1840), 'that Gladstone could do in four hours what it took any other man 16 to do, and worked 16 hours a day.'"

The heart of this wonderful man was as large as his intellect. His account books show that he never at any time in his life devoted less than a tenth of his annual incomings to charitable and religious objects.

Closer Views of Gladstone.

Mr. Morley's great book initiates us into intimate knowledge of the subject of this enchanting record. He often gives us the privilege of contact with Gladstone as he himself used at times to see him, detached from the cares of public life and politics. When Morley accompanied Gladstone to Biarritz in 1891 he had some interesting talks, which he duly committed to paper with journalistic precision, and they now make excellent and sometimes most amusing reading. He records that one day Mr. Gladstone did not appear, as he was suffering from a surfeit of wild strawberries, another time he tried to draw his leader about Mitchell, but found "Mr. G. not very much interested—seems only to care for political and church history;" they always "talked freely and abundantly together on ecclesiastical affairs and persons, but never a word upon theology or religious creed, either at Biarritz or anywhere else;" Mr. Gladstone "has a passion for the sound of the sea;" he thought Charles I "a dreadful liar;" Cromwell "perhaps did not always tell the truth;" Elizabeth was a "tremendous liar"—and so on.

Everybody does not know that Queen Victoria offered Gladstone an earldom and that he declined the honor. He felt that he could serve his country far better in the House of Commons than in the Upper Chamber. Here is the last entry in the diary of the "Grand Old Man," on Dec. 29, 1896:

"My long and tangled life this day concludes its 87th year. My father died four days short of that term. I know of no other life so long in the Gladstone family, and my profession has been that of a politician, or, more strictly, Minister of State, an extremely short-lived race when their scene of action has been in the House of Commons, Lord Palmerston being the only exception. In the last 12 months, eyes and ears may have declined, but not materially. The occasional contraction is the only inconvenience that can be called new. The blessings of family life continue to be poured in the largest measure upon my unworthy head. Even my temporal affairs have thriven. Still old age is appointed for the gradual loosening and snapping of threads."

As we read these three wondrous volumes, we feel that we can for the first time realize what a marvelous, stupendous and almost inconceivable figure this was. How multitudinous in his activities, how kaleidoscopic in his interests! In the vast variety of his energies Gladstone stands alone. He is one of nature's wonders: But what really marked him out from other great men is that all these lofty powers and faculties should have been subservient to the good of humanity. The world is not often so fortunate. Vast powers like those of Napoleon and Alexander have commonly been devoted to destruction. In Gladstone's case we may say that just as his great powers grew, so his desire for good increased also. With him wisdom and stature never outdistanced each other, but as he waxed in stature, he waxed in wisdom also.

London, England.

Those with whom the feeling of religion is only occasional, have it most when the awful or grand breaks out of the common; the meek who inherit the earth find the God of the whole world more evidently present, and in the commonest things. That which is best he gives most plentifully. Hence the great fullness of ordinary nature.—George MacDonald.

A New Missionary Method.

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—Since Brothers Keller and Spayd, of Carrollton, Mo., have brought their South African scheme of missionary effort before the church, I have called to mind an article which I read some ten years ago in the Christian Baptist, under the title, "The Capital Mistake of our Modern Missionary Schemes." I enclose the article for publication. W. T. GROOM.

Extract from essay on The Capital Mistake of Modern Missionary Schemes.—Christian Baptist, Vol. I, No. 2, Sept. 1, 1823.

"The Christian religion is a social religion, and cannot be exhibited to the full conviction of the world, only when it appears in this social character. An individual or two, in a pagan land, may talk about the Christian religion, and may exhibit its morality as far as respects mankind in general, but it is impossible to give a clear, a satisfactory, a convincing exhibition of it, in any other way than by exhibiting a church, not on paper, but in actual existence and operation, as divinely appointed.

"Then suppose a Christian Church were to be placed on the confines of a heathen land, as some of them must inevitably be, the darkness of paganism will serve as a shade in a picture to exhibit the lustre of Christianity. Then the heathen around them will see their humility; their heavenly-mindedness, their hatred of garments spotted with the flesh, their temperance, their sobriety, their brotherly love, they will observe the order of their worship, and will fall down in their assemblies, as Paul affirms, and declare that God is in them of a truth. They will say to one another and proclaim to their country on every occasion: "These Christians are peaceful, benevolent, humane, forgetful and forgiving of injuries; they hate war, oppression, theft, falsehood, detraction; they are always talking of the hope of a glorious resurrection from the dead, and are looking for the coming of him whom they call their Lord. In their assemblies there is order, peace, love and harmony. Their chief guide is not distinguished by his dress, as our priests, nor does he, like them, live upon the sweat and sacrifices of the people. He works with his own hands as those who meet with him in their assembly. They repay the curses of the wicked pagans with blessings, and their benevolence is not confined to themselves. They are as benevolent to all our people as to themselves. Come, see if their religion is not better than ours—better than all others.

"When the Christian Church assumes such a character, there will be no need of missionaries. She will shine forth in the doctrine and in the practice of her members, as the sun in the firmament, and the brightness of her radiance will cheer the region and shadow of death. If, in the present day, and amongst all those who talk so much of a missionary spirit, there could be found such a society, though it were composed of but twenty, willing to emigrate to some heathen land, where they could support themselves like the natives, wear the same garb, adopt the country as their own, and profess nothing like a missionary project; should such a society sit down and hold forth in word and deed the saving truth, not deriding the gods nor the religion of the natives, but allowing their own works and example to speak for their religion, and practicing as above hinted; we are persuaded that, in process of time, a more solid foundation for the conversion of the natives would be laid, and more success resulting than from all the missionaries employed for twenty-five years. Such a course would have some warrant from Scripture, but the present has proved itself to be all human."

[The foregoing interesting article is worth reading, not so much for its criticism upon current missionary methods—for the achievements of the eighty years since these words were written has, for the most part, nullified these—but for their suggestion of a method which is still largely untried. The preaching of the isolated minister among the heathen has been effective from Paul's day to our own. But it is quite possible that we may yet learn to utilize for the conversion of the heathen, as we have never yet done, the power of the contagion of Christian living as manifested by consecrated laymen.—EDITOR.]

HARD ARGUMENTS

Coffee Uses Them Whether one Likes or Not.

The ill effects of coffee are present in many coffee drinkers, but some people pay no attention to the warning signals like dyspepsia, insomnia, nervousness, fluttering of the heart, etc., until coffee finally uses a knock-down argument which means collapse on the part of the coffee drinker.

"I am 30 years old and have drank coffee since I can remember until four years ago, when I broke down completely with nervous prostration and indigestion. I simply cannot describe the agony I suffered.

"Doctor told me he could not help me if I did not leave coffee alone, so I bought some Postum to give it a trial. At first I did not know how to make it, and was disappointed in the taste, but after reading the directions on the package carefully, made it right, and then I thought it better than coffee. At that time I weighed 140 pounds, and now I weigh 185 pounds, that's quite a gain isn't it? I never have indigestion now, and the headaches are all gone and I am otherwise entirely well and strong.

"I never had any troubles that were not due to drinking coffee, and these disappeared and health came in their place when I shut off coffee and drank Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

News From Many Fields

Texas.

On Sunday, Oct. 25, quite an enthusiastic mass meeting was held with the church at San Marcos in the interest of Texas missions for Southern Texas, at which time "the San Marcos River Camp Meeting Association" was organized by the raising of about $1,200, and electing the following officers, to wit: Ed. J. L. Green, president, San Marcos; L. C. Brite, vice-president, Marfa; Jim Blanks, vice-president, Lockhart; Sherman Birdwell, vice president, Buda; Prof. J. S. Brown, secretary, San Marcos.

Executive committee: J. T. Blanks, chairman, San Marcos; W. H. Gosden, San Marcos; E. Huffmeyer, San Marcos; Joe Blanks, Lockhart; A. R. Chew, Lockhart; R. J. Crunk, Martindale; W. G. Fuller, Martindale; W. L. Ridout, Luling; H. F. Cook, Seguin.

The place selected is on the San Marcos river, some ten miles south of the city of San Marcos, and the time of beginning the meeting June 24, 1904. B. B. Sanders and R. R. Hamlin were chosen as the evangelists to do the preaching, and E. M. Douthit and wife to lead the song service.

This will be a great meeting for the Disciples of Southern Texas, as doubtless from 2,000 to 5,000 people will be in attendance. Men of spiritual and financial ability are backing the association and every arrangement will be made for the convenience and comfort of those attending. The place is ideal, the water splendid and the surroundings pleasant.

The San Marcos River, rolling out of the mountain in the city of San Marcos, is one of the most beautiful streams in America, and its waters cold and clear affords a lovely place for bathing, while the bold and beautiful spring at the camp ground will afford abundant water for drinking purposes.

All departments of our mission work, the state work, the C. W. B. M., the Sunday-school work, the Christian Endeavor work, as also our national work, will be represented in this meeting.

Our schools, Texas Christian University, Bonham College, Carr-Burdette College and Jarvis College will be invited to take part on the program and show to the people not connected with the Christian Church what we have in the way of educational advantages. The committee on arrangements will plan for a great crowd and for a great meeting.

The Graford Camp Meeting Association is planning for a great meeting at Whitt, which will commence on July 16, 1904. B. B. Sanders has been selected as the evangelist to do the preaching, but who will be the leader of the song service the writer has not been informed. The committee, however, having this meeting in charge, is composed of wide-awake men who will plan wisely and have every arrangement made for a successful meeting. At this meeting our various missionary enterprises and our various schools will be represented and a great number of people will doubtless be in attendance.

When these notes are read our "Texas Mission Day" will have come and gone, and what the result will be a few weeks' time will tabulate. But let the result be what it may, our corresponding secretary, Bro. J. C. Mason, has been untiring in his efforts to rally every church to a liberal offering, and if the churches have listened to his calls the results will be most gratifying. B. B. SANDERS.

Eugene S. Holmes has been called and has accepted the pastorate of Whitesboro Church for another year. Brother Holmes has staying qualities.

A. J. Bush, of Cleburne, has accepted the superintendency of the Juliette Fowler Orphans' Home. It is the universal decision that the board has chosen wisely. Brother Bush's long and faithful service in Texas gives him a hold upon the Texas brotherhood that few men have.

The outlook for a good offering on Texas mission day is encouraging. If the interest now manifest is a true index, then when we write the next Texas letter it will report fine offerings from some of the churches, good offerings from others, poor offerings from a few, and — from which?

Virgil L. Graves has just closed a good meeting at Woodville; 37 added, leaving a church of 70 members, a church lot donated, and $800 pledged toward a house.

J. B. Woodin, of Hammond, La., is in Texas and it is predicted that some of the Texas churches will capture him. We can use a number of good men in Texas who, like Brother Woodin, are not looking for a soft place or a large salary, but for work with a living to begin with.

Chas. H. Caton, once pastor of the church at Harrodsburg, Ky., later, via Yale, to the Congregational Church, has returned to his first love. Brother Caton is a scholarly and able speaker, capable of doing excellent work. A man who will win his way to the front among intelligent workers, and can, I suppose, be had for gospel preaching.

S. K. Hallam is making an earnest effort to build a $10,000 house of worship at Denton, the seat of one of our Texas Normal schools. We need to be well represented at such centers. Scarcely any class of workers exert a larger influence over the rising generations than public school teachers. A good, live working church near the Normal school is a wise investment.

The East Side Church, Dallas, is now a fact. The lot was purchased and a tabernacle is going up. John A. Stevens, our city evangelist, is moving things, and when he can occupy the tabernacle, a great meeting is predicted. The Disciples in Dallas are united and are pushing the work and word into new fields. As soon as a suitable man can be secured, a Dallas county evangelist will be employed.

Bro. James A. Arnold is watching at the bedside of his very sick wife, now at the home of her mother at Alkins, Ark. He asks for the prayers of his brethren in this hour of his trial. It is a dark day in the preacher's home when the faithful helpmeet is stricken with the dread disease, when there is no release until the messenger from heaven comes to escort the spirit of our loved one home. May our Father, whose love is ever the same and sufficient, be our brother's refuge.

Kentucky.

Kentucky was well represented by preachers, teachers and church workers at the Detroit Convention.

Mark Collis is in the midst of a meeting with "home forces" at this writing at the Broadway Church, Lexington. He is being assisted in song by Mrs. Princess Long.

S. R. Hawkins has resigned at Murray on account of ill health. He is now in a meeting at Marion, Ia.

S. F. Fowler, of Madisonville, will begin a meeting with the church at Beaver Dam on Nov. 9.

E. J. Willis, of Hopkinsville, recently assisted the pastor, W. G. Eldred, in a two weeks' meeting at Fulton, which resulted in 21 additions.

T. S. Tinsley, of the Clifton Church, Louisville, recently closed a meeting at Jefferson-town, with 24 additions.

W. A. Ward, of New Albany, Ind., is in a good meeting with the church at Leitchfield, with four added at last report.

A meeting at Hodgenville recently held by J. M. Vawter, of Jeffersonville, Ind., closed with five additions.

A good meeting is now in progress at Elkton. J. T. Hawkins, of Lexington, is doing the preaching, with Leonard Daugherty, of Louisville, as leader of song.

J. W. Mitchell recently closed good meetings at Roaring Springs and Wallonia, resulting in 17 additions.

The Fannon-Wilson meeting recently held at Stanford closed with 27 added. J. W. Hagin is the regular preacher.

The many friends of Carey E. Morgan will regret to learn that he continues quite sick. Many are the prayers that are being offered for his recovery.

The new church building at Isle's Mills, Bath county, was dedicated on Oct. 18 by the minister of the Owingsville Church, W. Kent Pendleton.

The students of the College of the Bible and Kentucky University were instrumental in receiving into the church, during last vacation, 1,245 persons: 1,159 by baptism and 86 from other sources.

R. B. Neal, of Grayson, is in a meeting at Peebles, O.

The writer has just closed a short meeting with the Berea Church, near Lexington, which resulted in nine additions. Horace E. J. Kingsbury is their regular preacher.

We are glad to report 12 additions here at our regular services since our last report.

Midway, Ky.

GEO. W. KEMPER.

Nebraska.

J. W. Walker has been recalled at Wakefield for another year.

C. F. Swander has just closed meetings of three weeks at Murray, and two weeks at Kenosha. Four baptisms and one by statement at Murray, two baptisms at Kenosha. He returns to his work at North Platte.

Three confessions reported from Belvidere by W. T. Hacker, pastor. The Bible-school there will observe boys' and girls' rally day.

Edgar Price, minister at Beatrice, held a ten night's meeting three miles east of that city with seven baptisms, two otherwise. Will hold a meeting in West Beatrice. Lawrence Wright and Louis Smith will hold a meeting at Beatrice in January.

Harry G. Hill has resigned at Omaha First Church, and will take the secretaryship of the American Christian Educational Society with headquarters at Indianapolis. We are sorry indeed that Brother Hill leaves the state at this time.

G. J. Chapman has resigned at York, closing his work on Nov. 1. He will hold a meeting in Cherokee, Okla., in that month. Brother Chapman has had a very successful ministry at York, building up the congregation to more than double its size, and erecting a fine new house. We hope Brother Chapman will not find it necessary to leave the state. Bro. Thos. Maxwell has been given a call to the pastorate at York. Brother Maxwell preached there as a student, and was the moving factor in getting the church house moved into the center of the city. He supplies there on the 8th ult.

A. L. Ogden, state evangelist is now at Douglas. Has six added to this writing, and will continue this week if not longer. Chas. D. Richards is the pastor there, but has resigned to take effect Jan. 1. Brother Ogden will hold his next meetings in Boyd Co.

DeForest Austin supplied at Geneva on Oct. 25. The church there is busily engaged in raising the amount necessary to pay off its mortgage indebtedness. They are succeeding very well, but will need some outside help. This is a case where the needs are great and the location important. I shall make a brief canvas in the interests of this work, and pray for voluntary gifts on the basis of paying the whole debt in full. Send me pledges on that basis, payable on demand as soon as the whole amount is pledged. It must be done soon. Brethren, I am slow to make such appeals, and would not do so if the case were not especially urgent. Let us rally to the help of this distressed church.

The secretary attended the Detroit Convention. On the way home preached in the morning at Omaha Northside. Will spend Nov. 1 at Hastings in the interest of the state apportionment.

We are mailing this week information folders for the use of the preachers and congregations on Nebraska day for state missions. It was in the mind of the projectors of this matter, that a good way would be to put the folders in the hands of the congregation at the session when the offering was taken, and go over the matter together with them. However, let each one receiving a package of the literature, use it as he shall deem wisest. Only do not let it lie around unused. With a thorough understanding of the needs of the field, the brethren will be willing to give liberally to the support of the work. We believe there is a great work to be done, and that we are able to do it. Thus we speak. We need funds promptly just now. Let the month of November be given unreservedly to this work. Forty-two churches, twenty Bible-schools and twelve Christian Endeavor societies reported in November and December last year. Can we not largely increase this number this year? Send to me for pledge cards if you can use them.

G. C. Johnson has moved to Wray, Col. H. B. Hollingsworth will spend a month in California, and possibly locate there. E. W. Yocum and W. E. Gray have gone to Missouri. There are other changes brewing. J. B. White takes the North Bend work.

Indiana.

The district conventions were unusually well attended for the fall series, the spring series, after winter revivals, being marked by greater enthusiasm and larger attendance. The Indiana delegation to the Detroit convention numbered about 300. The Pennsylvania road furnished a special going, and the Wabash a special returning, without change of cars between Detroit and Indianapolis. The convention will certainly have a marked effect upon the activities of the church throughout the state.

The evangelistic season is already on, and splendid meetings are in progress all over the state. Unless all signs fail, Indiana will make a new record this winter in evangelistic work. Reports last week gave 330 additions against 126 for corresponding week of 1902. This is a good start for the first week after the national convention, and augurs well for the winter campaign.

The number of churches increased last year, from October to October, from 914 to 942. The state board assisted in 63 weak churches last year, adding 1,131 members. Many of our churches that had no preaching at all, now have fourth or half time preaching. Others have gone from fourth to half time, and still others from half to full time. This, with the addition of 28 new churches and the loss of some good preachers by removal to other states, makes a shortage of preachers. We now have 10 full time vacancies and a larger number of half and quarter time places, and nearly all of them want resident pastors.

I should be glad to put some good preachers in correspondence with these churches. But we want good, clean, all-round men, and men who are missionary through and through—state missions as well as general missions.

Within the last three years the Indiana state board has helped weak churches so that they could have preaching; then within the next year, the preachers of these same churches have come to me and said: "We have given $— to foreign, $— to home, $— Children's Day, etc., and see, you have got your money back with interest!" The fact is, they remembered about everything else but the source from which they received their help. There is no business or spiritual sanity in such a course as this. The Lord knows that we have not given enough to any of our enterprises, but churches that expect the cause to be extended throughout the state, must contribute to the state missionary enterprise that has for its work the helping of weak churches and the establishment of new churches within the state. With an offering for state missions, such as we give to foreign missions every year, we shall in five years be able to double our giving, both to home and foreign missions.

Indiana needs some preachers, but she needs preachers who can show a record in

An Ancient Foe

To health and happiness is Scrofula—as ugly as ever since time immemorial.

It causes bunches in the neck, disfigures the skin, inflames the mucous membrane, wastes the muscles, weakens the bones, reduces the power of resistance to disease and the capacity for recovery, and develops into consumption.

"A bunch appeared on the left side of my neck. It caused great pain, was lanced, and became a running sore. I went into a general decline. I was persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and when I had taken six bottles my neck was healed, and I have never had any trouble of the kind since." Mrs. K. T. SNYDER, Troy, Ohio.

support of state missions before they come. I say this in behalf of the preachers all over the state who have supported state missions regularly. They are entitled to help, and since we must have more preachers they ought to come with records that would guarantee fellowship with our preachers who are pushing Indiana missions to the front. Brethren, Indiana wants preachers, but we cannot, very well, use those that other states cannot use. See?

There will be a few ministerial changes the first of the year, but most of the churches are showing their appreciation by increasing salaries and calling their pastors for another year.

The November offering in Indiana will be generally taken. Cheering words from all along the line give promise of offerings from $170 down, and the prospect is far brighter for state missions than ever before. Of course some of the churches whose pastors only visit them once or twice per month will not take the offering Nov. 1, but will wait till the pastors come; but a largely increased number will take it. It ought to be liberal, and commensurate to the 300 unanswered calls on our books.

Los Angeles.

On September 25 the writer and his wife returned from a four months' trip abroad. During that time we visited portions of Italy, Austria, Germany, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, France, England, Ireland and Scotland. It was a most delightful trip and we returned to our work greatly refreshed in mind and body. The writer recently delivered a lecture on "Under Eight Flags" to a $150 house in Blanchard's Hall, this city.

The second Lord's day in September I began the fourteenth year of my ministry in the First Church. This is the longest pastorate held by any man in Los Angeles, and so far as I can learn, the longest among the Disciples on the Pacific Coast. The work is greatly prosperous. Twelve persons have been added to our membership in October.

I am proclaiming a series of Sunday evening sermons upon "Christianity a Reasonable Religion." Thus far three have been preached, showing that the "Biblical Doctrine of God" is reasonable; also the biblical doctrine of Jesus and the church. I shall pursue the course through a long series in which I shall lay especial stress upon the reasonableness of all the distinctive doctrinal teaching of the Disciples of Christ. Preachers would find this a marvelously fertile field for sermon material. After thirteen years in the same pulpit I find the sermon material growing all the while. What wonderful avenues of study and investigation are open to the industrious student of God's word! Nearly 1,100 sermons in the same pulpit have convinced me that a preacher's resources are infinite if he only be industrious enough to discover and utilize them.

Two enterprises press upon the First Church for this year—a mission church to be erected upon our church lot in the southwestern part of the city, and a pipe organ in harmony with our magnificent church auditorium. It is believed that we can accomplish both in this year's campaign.

Early in June, Eugene Burr, after a successful ministry at Anaheim, was called to the ministry of the East Side Church in this city. He is engaged with them in a most successful work. Some discordant elements have withdrawn from the church, and the brethren there are rejoicing in a most blessed growth. That congregation took the church extension offering, and henceforth will stand with our other churches in all kinds of co-operative work. The world moves.

Dr. F. M. Kirkham has succeeded T. D. Garvin, who has passed to his eternal reward, in the pastorate of the Vernon Church. Only good reports come from his work.

M. J. Furguson, who for some months has been serving the Central Church of this city, is in the east, engaged in some revival meetings. In his absence D. A. Wagner is supplying the pulpit.

The Eight Street Church, for which H. Elliott Ward labored so successfully for four years, is now pastorless. It is expected that a pastor will be secured before this appears in print. That is an important church, and it is to be hoped that the head of the church will send a faithful under shepherd to carry on the work in that important field.

Los Angeles grows with marvelous rapidity. It was never growing with such leaps and bounds as characterize it to-day. We are striving to gather into our churches a proportionate share of the new comers. It is often a most difficult task. We find many eastern Disciples hard to affiliate with our churches.

DAVID'S TRUST IN GOD.—

Psalms 23.

Memorize the whole psalm.

GOLDEN TEXT.—The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want.—Ps. 23:1.

The Shepherd Psalm.

Among those portions of the Bible which have, by common consent, been considered the choicest treasures of the Christian world, is this psalm of trust. Perhaps no other passage has appealed more universally in all ages to the learned and the unlearned, the old and the young, the sorrowful and the rejoicing. The picture which it presents, of a careful, competent and tender shepherd, and of his sheep trusting themselves absolutely to his care, is so simple that all can understand it. The meaning of the figure is so transparent that explanations rather obscure than reveal its teaching, and comments are but a pale reflection of the luminous original.

A Spiritual Biography.

We like to think of this psalm as genuinely Davidic in its authorship. If David was the father and founder of the whole psalm-literature (though by no means the author of our Book of Psalms), who but he should have written the greatest of all the psalms? The words of the psalm acquire a clearer meaning when we think of David as their author. "My shepherd" is a reminiscence of his own shepherd days. The "green pastures" and "still waters" are the hills and water-courses about Bethlehem, where as a boy he led his flocks and tended them with loving care. He remembers that his sheep often went in devout ways, and thanks Jehovah for leading him back into "paths of righteousness" after his wanderings. The "rod and staff" were familiar instruments of his craft. "The valley of the shadow" may have been suggested by the day when the lion and the bear came out of their caves and seized a lamb from the flock. But later in life David had other valleys to pass through, deeper and darker than this, and the Lord had been with him. "My enemies"—David had had plenty of them: first Goliath, then Saul, then foes outside of his kingdom, then enemies in his own household, even his son. He had been delivered from them all. "Goodness and mercy shall follow me"—a thanksgiving for past blessings and a prayer that his old age might be crowned with peace. The psalm is a spiritual biography of the shepherd-king of Israel.

A Universal Psalm.

But, though this psalm grows so directly out of David's own experiences from youth to age, its appeal is to all men in all times. Perhaps it is because it is so personal and intimate that it comes home so unerringly to the hearts of men everywhere. Men are always moved more readily by particulars than by generalities, and a great truth comes home more surely if it is clothed in a garment of simple and concrete experience.

Only a small proportion of those who have loved the shepherd psalm have ever been shepherds, yet this allusion to the shepherd's loving care, to the dangers and the delights of the simple life under the clear skies of Judea, comes very close to us all, because in one way or another we have had experiences which are parallel to it.

The Experience of Faith.

David knew how tenderly he, as a shepherd, had watched over the lambs committed to his care. He had fought their battles for them, had found them food and water and led them into pleasant places of rest, asking of them only that they obey his voice and trust his guidance. And in this experience he figured to himself God's watchcare over him. He felt himself justified in trusting God because he knew how amply his sheep were justified in trusting him. His faith in Jehovah might be, in a sense, blind. But faith itself, trust as a principle of life, was to him a tested reality. He could not believe that God would be less true to him than he was to his sheep.

Faith and Faithfulness.

As only the pure in heart can see God, so only the faithful can have this convincing experience of faith. The argument from man's fidelity toward the helpless beings which are dependent upon him, to God's fidelity toward us, his creatures, can have no force with a man who is conscious of being faithless to his obligations. "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want," could never have been written by a shepherd who knew that he had allowed his own sheep to suffer want. It can not be read with appreciation, and its argument cannot be received with conviction, by one who neglects his children, or abuses his horse, or maltreats his dog. Everyone of these relations may be so transfigured by the the spirit of gentleness and faithfulness that it shall become a testimony to God's love for us and an incentive to fuller trust in Him. So may the Shepherd Psalm be translated from the Hebrew of three thousand years ago into the vernacular of daily life in our own days.

THE SINFUL SALOON.

Eph. 6:10-13.

All sin is more or less contagious. It not only injures the person who commits it, but tends to corrupt others. But the meanest kind of sins are those which deliberately and intentionally aim at the corruption of men. Prominent among these sins is the sin of the liquor business. It is more dangerous than theft and meaner than murder. While the thief tries to get gain by another's financial loss, and the murderer satisfies his passion at the cost of his victim's life, the maker of drunkards aims to make money by the assassination of character.

A man may barter away his own soul, if he will, for the pleasures of sin or for gold. It is an awful mistake, a sin against God and against himself. The tragic story of Faust is the story of a man who sold his soul to the devil for certain temporal rewards and benefits. The story has been lived over again and again in every age. It is always a sad tale of spiritual blindness and folly and degradation. But the course of such a man is not to be compared, for meanness, for black iniquity, for sheer devilishness, to the course of a man who snares and sells the souls of others for his own gain.

The characteristic of the saloon is that it does just this thing. It attacks manhood and womanhood, corrupts virtue, debauches innocence, weakens intellect, debases moral sense, woos the soul away from God, makes the highest life impossible and the lowest inevitable. And it does all this for gain. Under the protection of a government based upon virtue and honor, it makes its assault upon virtue and honor.

It is this fact—the fact that the saloon is an aggressive enemy to all good men and all pure women—that makes it a social problem and not merely an individual problem. It is not a matter of private right, but of public wrong; not an institution toward which each individual should adopt the attitude which pleases him, but an institution toward which the state should adopt the attitude of uncompromising hostility.

Christian Endeavor teaches good citizenship. Whatever makes a man a good Christian makes him a better citizen. The especial need of our time is for active good citizens. Most good citizenship is passive. Christian Endeavor should foster the other sort, the sort that will work as diligently and patiently and shrewdly to secure good government for Christ's sake and men's sake, as the corruptionists work for bad government for the sake of boodle. When that time comes, the Christian nation will be ready to take the saloon by the throat, and "regulate" it as it regulates every other criminal institution—by effective prohibition.

TWO GATES, TWO WAYS, TWO ENDS.

Matt. 7:13-20; 25:31-33, 46.

Will hell be crowded and heaven sparsely populated? Is that the teaching of this passage, the meaning of the "many" and the "few"? What about the "many" of that other passage, who shall "come from the east and the west and the north and the south"? At first reading it may seem to be a mournful view of human life and of the kingdom of heaven. But it is rather a strong statement of a recognized and inevitable principle. One statement we have in the wide gate and the broad way; it is easy to go down hill, easy to retrograde. And then the opposite principle is as strongly put—it is hard to advance, to rise, to conquer.

Test this teaching elsewhere. Do you desire to enter into the kingdom of power and influence? It is a hard way. No one now enters in, or did ever enter in, who was not willing to toil terribly. There is no one without influence of some sort. But walk among the leaders, the kings of men; they are few. Trace their paths to eminence, and you will find them winding along precipitous and dangerous ways. Commune with artists and musicians. There is a group in every generation who enter into these kingdoms; but it is a small group, if you limit your count to those who hold the sceptre and wear the crown.

There is no kingdom worth entering into which is not fenced with high walls and narrow gates. According to the value of the kingdom, so is the way thither difficult, and the possessors thereof, in its plenitude, few. Said a great writer, in presenting a copy of one of his books to a dear friend, "You will read it in a few minutes; but I assure you it has cost me such labor that it has whitened my hair." Some years ago I heard a famous lecturer. Night after night he spoke to great audiences, lifting them into the heavens of thought and emotion. I ventured to ask him, "How do you prepare your lectures?" and with look and accent that lent emphasis to his words, he replied, "I agonize them! 'Strive to enter in!'"

Now on the other hand, is it not all true of the way to destruction? The gate is wide and the way is broad. Going that way is simply yielding to the soft and continuous pressure of base desire. It is giving rein to passion. And there are many, sad to say, that do it. When the strait gate is pointed out, like the young man who had great possessions, they go away sorrowful. They are the Hamlets of the religious life. They repeat the great refusal.

Truth gleams in every line of this teaching. The end of this way is destruction, literally, perdition. It is a cutting off, a banishment, a punishment, ageless. But are we not told that ageless means not eternal, but simply of indefinite duration? That therefore this punishment must come to an end? Would that this were the teaching. Who would not fill hell up with doubts, if he could? If that would do away with the fact of it or the necessity for it? But the same reasoning applies to "ageless life," and the logic that gets the lost out of hell expels the saved from heaven. This language depicts awful, appalling fact. In every other field, we know there is such a thing as destruction; why not here? Contrast success and failure; knowledge and ignorance; health and death; life and perdition.

And the end finally must be one of two. There is no middle ground; everlasting punishment, or everlasting life. The Master cries out to-day, as of old, "Enter ye in by the narrow gate;" it leads to life. There is an incitement to patient effort in these words. Suppose you do not at first succeed, try again. As it is given in another gospel, "Strive!" Again and again we are urged and encouraged to importunity, to persistence. "Fight the good fight," and at last you will lay hold on eternal life. Which gate do you en-

ARE YOUR KIDNEYS WEAK

Thousands of Women Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

MRS. SCOTT.

An interesting letter to our readers from Mrs. Gertrude Warner Scott, of Vinton, Iowa.

Vinton, Iowa, July 15th, 1902.

In the summer of 1893, I was taken violently ill. My trouble began with pain in my stomach, so severe that it seemed as if knives were cutting me. I was treated by two of the best physicians in the county, and consulted another. None of them suspected that the cause of my trouble was kidney disease. They all told me that I had cancer of the stomach, and would die. I grew so weak that I could not walk any more than a child a month old, and I only weighed sixty pounds. One day my brother saw in a paper an advertisement of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy. He bought me a bottle at our drug store and I took it. My family could see a change in me, for the better, so they obtained more, and I continued the use of Swamp-Root regularly. I was so weak and run down that it took considerable to build me up again. I am now well, thanks to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and weigh 148 pounds, and am keeping house for my husband and brother on a farm. Swamp-Root cured me after the doctors had failed to do me a particle of good.

Gratefully yours,

Gertrude Warner Scott

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

ter? which way do you travel? which end do you anticipate?

PRAYER.

Be merciful unto us, O God, with infinite mercy. We are helpless and undone. Do thou pluck us as brands from the burning. Transform our stubborn wills. The heavenly gateman beckons; forbid that we should refuse, and walking in the broad way, be lost. Fill our hearts with a passion for purity and righteousness, through Christ. Amen.

Our Budget

—The offering for state missions is in order until attended to.

—No one of our national conventions has been better reported than the one at Detroit. All the papers we have seen have done well.

—The Detroit convention is likely to grow larger in the perspective of history. It had in it the seeds of things to be. Business men's organization, Sunday-school workers' organization, the Evangelistic Board, the Educational day and secretary, the St. Louis World's Fair Exhibit—all these were steps forward.

—It will be a most significant prophecy of a great year, if our state secretaries are able to report, by the first of December, the largest offering in the history of their respective states. As this is the first duty of the new missionary year, let us perform it faithfully.

—"Which do you think were the greatest speeches of the convention?" We think that of Brother — and Sister — were, all things considered, about the best. The blanks in the above may be filled out by each one who attended the convention, to suit himself. Many different names would be written in these blanks, and they would probably all deserve the vote which they would receive.

—The Detroit convention voted to go to the Pacific Coast in 1905. In 1906 it ought to swing back somewhere near the center, and then in 1907 go to New York, Boston, Washington or Baltimore, or somewhere near the eastern coast. It might venture toward the south in 1908, and of course in 1909 we go to Pittsburg, Pa., for our centennial. Alternate meetings of our national conventions may well be used for missionary invasions into regions where we are not strong or well known, dropping back toward the center of the country for larger mass meetings the next year.

—There is a general feeling that state missions, which are so important a part of home missions, and which are so essential to foreign missions, have been neglected, and the expectation is no less general that we are going to make a better record this year than ever before. Last Lord's day was an unfavorable day in a large part of the country, but no offering ought to depend upon the weather on any given day. The offering is not taken rightly until all the members have an opportunity and are urged to give. If this is not accomplished in one Lord's day, let it be continued until it is accomplished.

—Prof. J. W. Jones, of Liberty, Mo. has recently been elected to the department of elocution and oratory in Kentucky University.

—Charles Richard Vawter, pastor at Elizabethtown, Ky., made us a hasty call en route to Pattonsburg, Mo., where he is to hold a meeting.

—Victor L. Johnson reports that he is getting the work well in hand at Clinton, Ia. The church there paid his expenses to the Detroit Convention.

—A preacher writes that he has been moved to resign his pastorate because the congregation thought he preached missions too much. What that congregation evidently needs is not less missions but more.

—B. S. Ferrell has taken charge of the Jefferson Street Church, Buffalo, N. Y., to which he was recently called. He spent seven years at his last pastorate in Watseka, Ill., during which time there were over 400 additions to the church.

—Delegates to the Detroit Convention who had occasion to use the typewriter service provided gratis at headquarters by the Kensington Typewriter Company, make grateful acknowledgment to the company for this courtesy.

—O. W. Wilkinson, pastor of the church at Cisne, Ill., and his wife were given a surprise by the church on October 26, at which time many useful articles were presented to them in token of the appreciation of the work they have done this summer.

Every Elgin Watch is fully guaranteed. All jewelers have Elgin Watches. "Timemakers and Timekeepers," an illustrated history of the watch, sent free upon request to —Mr. J. Frank Merryman will deliver two lectures on the "Life of Alexander Campbell" at the Hamilton Avenue Christian Church on Sunday evening, Nov. 8, and Sunday evening, Nov. 15. Admission free. All are invited.

—The congregation organized by E. E. Moorman at Byron, Ind., has commenced the erection of a house of worship to cost about $1,200. They expect to dedicate it about Thanksgiving. Any help from the brotherhood at large will be gladly received. Address W. M. Livengood.

—J. N. Jessup sends us his fifth annual statement as pastor of the First Church at Little Rock, Ark. During the year there have been 101 persons received—33 by baptism—and the present resident membership is 383. The church raised $558.50 for missions, and $4,608.62 for all purposes during the past year.

—B. F. Hill, who has served the church at Plattsburg, Mo., two years as pastor, has resigned in order that he may devote himself to evangelistic work. He is ready to make engagements for meetings in January, February or March. We can commend Brother Hill as an earnest and faithful evangelist, who has proved successful in evangelistic work. Address him at Plattsburg, Mo.

—E. R. Black has been called to continue indefinitely in the pastorate of the church at New Castle, Ind. One remarkable feature of the church under his pastorate has been the "overflowing treasury." There have been thirty-one additions during the year, about $500 has been given to missions and there is a midweek Bible class of eighty, besides all the regular societies and departments of church work.

—James W. Zachary sends us tidings of one J. K. Bosdoyannes, an educated Presbyterian minister residing at Canea, in the island of Crete, who has espoused the position of the Disciples of Christ and is now doing independent missionary work in that island. He has published a little book on "The Baptism of Infants" in the Greek language. A copy of it will be sent to any one for 15 cents. Address as above.

—Our home board reports that two editions of the Boys, and Girls' Rally Day exercise have been exhausted, and the third edition is now on the press. All supplies are sent free of cost. If your school has not ordered, do so at once, addressing Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, O. Give number of scholars in your school aside from the primary department. The date of Rally Day is the Lord's day before Thanksgiving.

—We call special attention to the report of the committee on the World's Fair Exhibit, to be found elsewhere in this issue, together with an appeal from the committee appointed at Detroit to take charge of the matter of erecting a building and preparing an exhibit for additional subscriptions to this fund. Let all who will help in this worthy enterprise send their subscriptions through this office or direct to J. H. Allen, 104 South Main St., St. Louis.

—Mrs. M. M. Purdy, of Bristow, I. T., writes that they have a Christian church there consisting of 84 members, but that they are in need of a vigorous, energetic young minister, whom they can employ for half his time at a fair salary. No doubt the other part of his time can be employed in the region round about. Young preachers who desire to go into this rich and promising field may write to Sister Purdy, clerk of the church, giving proper reference or testimonials.

—P. W. Harding, of Mexico, Mo., writes from Jacksonville, Ill., that the church at the latter place under the pastorate of Russell F. Thrapp is in splendid condition. The church has a membership of about 1,200 and is thoroughly organized for effective work. The large and flourishing Bible-school is ably superintended by Brother C. L. Depew. Brother Thrapp is a vigorous preacher as well as an energetic worker and has been preaching some ringing sermons against the prevalent evils of our day—intemperance and gambling.

—A very delightful conference of Pastoral Helpers and other workers was held during the Detroit Convention, in which a national organization was formed with Mrs. Nettie McCorkle, Cleveland, O., president, and Miss Mary Johnson, Warren, O., secretary. M. L. Bates, of Warren, O., and P. H. Welshimer, of Canton, O., both made strong talks in favor of the Helpers, having had such workers in their churches for the past eighteen months. Other pastors and laymen spoke in the highest terms of the work done by the school. The next term of work opens Jan. 5, 1904. For information write A. M. Harvout, Cincinnati, O.

—"The Y. P. S. C. E. of the First Church at Quincy, Ill., have been enjoying a most prosperous year. Our meetings are attended by about one hundred persons usually, and the prayer-meeting committee is ever alert to make the meetings interesting. On Oct. 18 we had a "gospel song service" at which the whole hour was taken up with singing and anecdotal accounts of how some of the famous hymns came to be written. On last Sunday evening, Oct. 25, we presented Bro. W. W. Burks with a fine teacher's Bible, and his wife with a bouquet of roses. We sincerely regret their departure for Mason City, Iowa.—J. J. WILLIAMS."

—"On Thursday evening, Oct. 29, there was organized in New York an association to be known as "The Disciples Club of Columbia University." There were a score or more attending the university this year and the organization was intended to bring them into social and religious fellowship. It was found in the first meeting that there were representatives from the following colleges: Eureka, Oskaloosa, Drake, Kentucky University, Texas Christian University and Hiram.

Meetings will be held from time to time during the year for the discussion of topics of special interest among the Disciples. The next meeting will be held Nov. 24, and the topic, "Do Disciples Need a Great National University," will be discussed. The club promises to be a very attractive and interesting feature of university life in old Columbia for the Disciples in attendance.—J. P. LICHTENBERGER."

—Jesse P. McKnight has resigned from the church at Oskaloosa, Ia., on account of the serious condition of his wife's health and will take her to southern California as soon as arrangements can be made. Several months ago Mrs. McKnight was taken to Texas, but the change was not as beneficial as could be desired. Brother McKnight has been pastor at Oskaloosa nearly four years, and during that time has built up the church both numerically and spiritually, and has greatly endeared himself to the hearts of the people. We speak from a close personal acquaintance with him when we say that it would be impossible for him to remain that long anywhere without doing great good and making a host of friends. Under the circumstances the congregation could not protest against the resignation, but the loss will be deeply felt. His resignation takes effect Nov. 15. Brother McKnight will settle at some point in southern California and will probably do evangelistic work for a time before accepting a pastorate.

An Exhibit at the World's Fair.

The committee appointed to report to the Detroit Convention on an exhibit at the World's Fair at St. Louis next year, submitted the following report, which was unanimously approved:

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EXHIBITS AT THE LOUISIANA PURCHASE EXPOSITION.

We, your Committee on the Louisiana Purchase Exposition Exhibit, submit the following report:

We believe it to be the duty of the church to avail itself of every opportunity afforded it in the providence of God for disseminating the light and the saving power of the gospel. It is not only the duty, but it is the part of wisdom for any religious movement, holding a dispensation of truth which the world needs, to utilize every great historical event which may be made the occasion for impressing its message on mankind.

The celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the Louisiana Purchase by a World's Fair, in the city of St. Louis, April 30, to Nov. 30, 1904, which is to excel in its magnitude and scope any previous Exposition in the world's history, is an event that is attracting the attention and interest of all nations. It is destined to draw thither millions of people from all the peoples and countries of earth, and to record the highest mark yet reached in the world's material and intellectual progress. Why should it not exhibit also the highest and best conception of Christianity—the most perfect revelation of God, and the only universal religion? Since Christianity is the basis and inspiration of all that is best in our civilization, it would seem self-evident that it ought to have a prominent place in any Exposition which purports to be an exhibit of the world's progress. And yet in all that magnificent group of buildings which constitute the "Ivory City," some of which cover fourteen acres of space, there is not one dedicated to the religion of Him whose advent into the world has made all this progress possible. Nor is there any room in any one of these mammoth structures for an exhibit of tracts, pamphlets, books, etc., setting forth the teaching of Him for whom there was no room in the inn at Bethlehem when he was born. For this fact the Exposition authorities are not wholly, perhaps not chiefly, to blame, but it is the fact itself with which we have to reckon.

In view of this fact, it seems to your committee that a positive and aggressive type of Christianity, such as that represented by this convention, ought to act independently, since cannot have the co-operation of others, in erecting on the Fair Grounds a unique but inexpensive building that would serve the double purpose of affording room for such an exhibit as we may be able to make, and serving as a sort of headquarters and bureau of information for brethren visiting the Fair. A reproduction of some historic building, such as Alexander Campbell's Study or the Cane Ridge Church, would attract attention because of its historical character, and need not be costly. Such a building, properly labeled and equipped with maps, charts, pictures of college and church buildings, and of the great historic leaders who under God inaugurated the movement and gave it its original impulse, together with tracts, leaflets, books, papers, etc., setting forth the history, principles and achievements of our Restoration Movement, would, we believe, prove to be a most profitable investment.

We, therefore, recommend that a committee of five be appointed by this convention to plan for the erection of such a building, and to arrange such an exhibit, provided a sufficient amount of money be subscribed to warrant such an undertaking. And in no case are the expenditures for this purpose to create any debt against this or any other of our missionary societies. We think it would be wise to begin this subscription at this convention.

Of course, there are hundreds of people throughout the country who will wish to have a hand in this exhibit. There should be tracts in all the principal languages of earth for free distribution during the seven months of the Fair. There should be files of all our religious journals, pictures of our colleges and leading men of the past and present. And then what a delightful meeting-place of friend with friend, through all these months! It is the greatest advertising opportunity, too, we have ever had.

The persons whose names are undersigned were appointed a committee to take charge of this matter, in pursuance of the report adopted. J. H. Allen, 104 South Main Street, St. Louis, of the Allen-West Commission Co., has consented to act as treasurer, and will receive and credit all pledges sent to him. But just now additional subscriptions are needed, and these also may be sent direct to the treasurer, or to any of our religious papers, in order that the amounts may be published and the brethren may know how the enterprise progresses.

The pledges should be made as promptly as possible that the committee may know how to plan its work.

Whereas, the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has given much valuable space in its columns to the publication of the reports of Berkeley Bible Seminary in its defense against the unwarranted and unjustifiable attacks which have been made against it; and

Whereas, in addition to the foregoing, Brother Garrison has ably defended the seminary in the editorial columns of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and has, at all times, stood manfully and unflinchingly for the cause of truth, justice and righteousness;

Therefore, be it resolved, that we, the board of trustees of said seminary, do hereby acknowledge with deep gratitude, the valuable service that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has rendered to the seminary, as well as to the cause of Christ on the Pacific Coast.

Resolved, further, that the foregoing preamble and resolution be spread upon the records of the seminary, and a copy thereof be sent to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for publication.

When the Plague Comes to Town.

In the three years that I have been in India, I have heard a great deal and read a great deal about plagues, but it has only been recently that the missionaries of Harda have had opportunity to see the disease at close quarters. We are now having an epidemic of the terrible malady, and the sufferings and afflictions of the people are terrible to witness. Lord Lytton, in one of his books, Rienzi, I believe it is, describes the plague as it was in Italy while it was on its devastating course in Europe. As he was not an eye-witness of the things concerning which he wrote, he had to draw on old writings and his imagination for the materials for his description. The picture he presents is terrible. And were it not that, thanks to the British government, we have a strong government here in this country, the condition here would be as bad as anything he pictures.

The first case occurred here about seven weeks ago. For some days the disease seized upon but few others, so that people had ample time to flee, and many of them took advantage of the opportunity, so that to-day, out of a population of 16,000, it is doubtful whether more than 2,500 remain. In the time mentioned, we have not had less than 600 deaths in the town, according to the official figures while probably not less than another hundred have contracted the disease and died outside of the municipal limits after running away from here. Practically all the people who remain are those who are dependent for employment, either directly or indirectly, on the government or the railroad. Among them the proportion of seizures is now about one per cent daily.

Of course, the schools and all missionary work except relieving the sick had to be closed—in fact, closed itself. And at first the people would have nothing to do with medical aid. Plague is a new thing in India. Cholera and small-pox have been with them for many years, and they understand something about them. But as their ancestors knew nothing about plague, it was easy to make the people believe that the government, by the spreading of powders, was spreading the diseases in order to decrease the population. This belief unscrupulous people did not hesitate to spread among the ignorant. Hence the people not only violently opposed all preventive measures, but also would not go to the dispensaries for medicine. At first there was a rule that when a person was seized in a house, he must be taken to the hospital, and his house thoroughly disinfected. Care was taken that no one should suffer any loss on this account, or be put to any unnecessary inconvenience. But the very disinfectants were said to be medi-spread to produce more plague, and such a storm of opposition was raised, amounting to real riots in some places, that the government has in many parts of India abandoned strict plague measures, unless the people ask for aid. Such a method of course allows the disease to spread at will, about the only precaution which can be taken being the exercise of local quarantine against persons known to come from infected areas.

Such was the condition of things when the plague began to spread in Harda. People at once began to leave. The local governor desired to take effective measures against the disease, but was not permitted to do so. We were soon having four or five deaths every day. Then came ten days of very heavy rain, in which everything was flooded and people could not leave town. Damp and wet weather are ideal for the spread of plague. The death rate mounted up. Soon we were having fifteen or twenty deaths a day. As soon as the weather began to clear people began to leave in larger numbers. Soon it was reported that there were not more than 600 people in the main town. But still the death rate kept climbing. Twenty-five, thirty, and even forty-four were reported in one day, nearly all of them, out of the population of 600. Meantime two remaining sections of the town, containing about 3,000, which, owing to their isolation from the rest of the town, and their refusal to allow the town people to enter, had so far kept free from the disease, now became infected. But as the number to take the disease had become so much less, and there had been a marked improvement in the weather, the death rate has again begun to go down, so that there are now fifteen or twenty deaths a day, not including those of people who are dying in their poor, little, hastily constructed huts just outside of the town.

Dr. Drummond was not in town when the plague first broke out. On his return he immediately began the treatment of plague cases. At first he had but few calls, as the people were very much afraid of all doctors and all medicines. But now he is treating nearly or quite fifty plague patients daily. There is a government doctor here too, but he finds very little to do, and doubtless is glad of it, for all Hindus—and many Europeans as well—are very much afraid of the disease.

The condition of the few people who remain about the town, and especially that of the European and Eurasian employees of the railroad, is most unpleasant, and in some cases quite pitiful. Many of the natives have moved outside the town and are living in little huts which consist of some bamboo matting or a few pieces of cloth thrown over a pole. Water is at a distance, and food is hard to obtain. The bazaar is closed. The grain dealers have fled, and the little grain that is obtainable is probably plague infected, and is being sold at high prices. As the rains are not quite over, the people in the huts suffer much from showers. The railway people who have remained in town suffer much from the running away of their servants, and still more from the scarcity of milk, which has caused much suffering to the small children.

But it is, of course, in the houses and in the families where the disease has been worst that there is the most distress and the most dreadful sights. In some cases whole families have been taken away. And in some cases unnatural scenes have been enacted. One man's mother was taken sick. He shut her up in the house and left her. But the magistrate heard of his action and compelled him to take care of her. Dr. Drummond was attending a sick man who was being cared for by his mother. One day the doctor went to see his patient, who was showing signs of improvement, and as he did not see the woman, asked where she was. The sick man, who was only partly in his right mind, answered that he had not seen her. But he asked the doctor to open the door into the next room, as the place was dark. He found the woman lying there dead. She had been seized with plague in the night, and died. The death was reported to the municipal authorities, that the body might be removed. But when the doctor went the next day the two were still in the house, the living man alone in one room, and the dead woman in another. There have been other similar cases. This morning three dead bodies were found in as many different houses. The people had gone in and locked the doors at night, but had been seized and died before morning. When they failed to put in their appearance, the police first knocked, and then broke the doors in and found the corpses. A man fled from an infected part of the town and put up a tiny hut about 200 yards from our bungalow. The next day three of his children—all he had—died there. In some cases wood for burning the corpses can not be obtained, and the bodies are merely thrown into the river. The homeless and the wanderers, too, are affected, and two have died on the verandas of the mission schools. The whole scene is one of death, death, death.

But for civilized peoples the plague can never again have terrors. Even with the disease all around them in this country, thousands dying on every side, the mortality among the European, and even the Eurasian, population is quite low. Their very servants

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health; sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

perish, yet somehow they escape. And in a country where sanitary measures are understood and enforced by public sentiment, where quarantine, hospitals and disinfection do not produce riot, there is no doubt but the disease could never spread.

Honor to Whom Honor is Due.

One of the common faults of the present generation is to forget the achievements of the preceding generations. There comes ever and anon the "king that knew not Joseph." It seems to me that our brethren have forgotten—in fact some of them never knew—the long and difficult labors of Bro. Thomas Munnell along the line of educating and organizing our brethren in church and missionary work. I was very intimately associated with him when he was corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society. His efforts to solidify our missionary work and enkindle the enthusiasm and develop the generosity that would crown it with success, were simply heroic. The elements necessary to the highest and best success were well-known to him.

Take up his reports and you will find the fundamental things, such as the well-organized church with its God-fearing elders and deacons and well-trained pastor; the indispensable Sunday-school; a financial system that provides for local maintenance, and liberal missionary offerings, systematic co-operation in support of home and foreign missions; generous support and patronage of our colleges; special funds for building houses of worship, and schools for educating a colored ministry. In fact, everything we have to-day was in the fertile brain of the indefatigable Munnell. We had not reached a period of development when all these elements of power could be organized, harmonized and vitalized. He was working to establish unity and strength—an organization in which the men and women of the church would work together and avoid the necessity of separate organizations for men and women, and for the different ends to be accomplished. "Our plan of co-operation," said he, "so simple and yet so comprehensive, is admired by others for the oneness of its operations—the one organization, capable of working our missions, Sunday-schools, colportage, church edifice building, locating unemployed preachers, supplying destitute churches, and whatever else we might do as a people without having the machinery of a separate society for every good work."

"This is why he did not advocate the organization of the Foreign Society, nor the Christian Woman's Board of Missions. And yet he fell in heartily with both, hoping they would enkindle a missionary spirit that would, in the end, lead to this very unity."

In 1872 he recommended, and the convention adopted, the recommendation, that to an organized band of sisters in Indiana be committed the Jamaica mission. "He said, 'Under the circumstances, our treasury being empty, we have canvassed this matter, both privately and in the Indiana State Convention, and are satisfied, from the spirit manifested there, that these sisters would undertake the work as their special care.'"

Three years afterward, in the report of 1875, touching the C. W. B. M., he said: "We thank God without ceasing for the enterprise of our sisters in the common faith, whose present undertaking we so earnestly recommended in our report three years ago." That Secretary Munnell canvassed this subject before the sisters time and again for more than three years, is well-known. Indeed, many times, as far back as 1870, he called attention to the great work being done by the sisters of other religious bodies. Long before the C. W. B. M. was organized, Brother Challen called attention to the "noble example" set for our sisters "by the woman's boards of certain denominations, one of which is supporting thirty-two missions in Asia."

So the C. W. B. M. was not only suggested in Brother Munnell's reports, but was helped into being by the "noble example" of other sisters not of "our fold." The fact is, for a long time in our history we were so afraid of becoming a sect that we would not follow any of even the good practices of the sectarian bodies. We thought "nothing good could come out of Nazareth." The Board of Managers of the A. C. M. S., in 1882—the first year of my services as corresponding secretary—is frequently credited with inaugurating the Church Extension Board. Ten years before this, the society took steps to build up a "Church Edifice Fund." Why was it not done? Simply because Brother Munnell had on hand the stupendous, and now believed to have been at that time the impossible task of unifying and solidifying all our missionary work. He was not well supported, it is true. But how could he be when the indispensable missionary spirit in half of our churches and preachers was lacking? It was like an effort to push a heavy train up the grade by attaching an engine without a good head of steam. Nevertheless his heart and head wearing labors were not in vain. Evolution is a thing of time. The missionary spirit is a thing of growth. Brother Munnell's sermons, reports and pointed articles ministered to this development. We were often impatient and wrote over these struggles, "failure," when really these efforts were not in vain. As well might the pioneer cry "failure" after one hard year's toil in clearing, grubbing, plowing and building. He has only been laying the foundation for a hundred harvests.

In 1887, before reading the annual report of the board, I remarked: "The very fact that I am expected to read this report is a sign of great weakness. The time will come, and that I trust not far in the future, when our work will be so great that we shall have to confine ourselves to circulating it in printed form, and even then in abbreviated form." That prophecy has been fulfilled, and the present published reports of all our boards are themselves a prophecy of greater things to come. But let no one say that Campbell, Pendleton, Errett, Johnson, Shackelford, Rogers, Munnell, and a host of others have not ministered nobly to bring the Disciples to this high plane of success and rejoicing.

R. MOFFETT.

As Another Saw Us.

[During the Detroit Convention the Free Press of that city contained an opinion of a local minister concerning the religious body meeting in the city. The local minister remarked on the absence of that "enthusiasm" and "aggressiveness" which marked similar gatherings of Baptists, Methodists and other Protestant bodies. These Christians also lacked "martial spirit." They might sing, "My faith looks up to Thee," but not "Onward Christian Soldiers." The local minister accounted for this "languid" characteristic from the fact that we came largely from the south and southwestern states. He had noticed, too, at our communion service "a cheerful solemnity" which he thought resulted from a too frequent observance of the institution. They were not a bad people, at all, and their preachers could really preach very well. Such was the patronizing air of the criticisms. The following reply appeared in the next issue of the Detroit Free Press.—EDITOR.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE FREE PRESS.—As a member of the missionary convention now in session in this city, I was naturally interested in your local minister's sizing up of the religious body which the convention represents. He will pardon me for saying that his sweeping characterizations based on so limited an observation as he has evidently been able to make, reminds one of some of the wholesale criticisms on the American people by some occasional visitor from the Old World who does not get further into the interior than Boston or New York.

A peculiarity of the observations—not to call them criticisms—of your local minister, is that what he points out as our weak points are what are conceded very generally to be our strong points. "Aggressiveness" is surely one of our strong points, and as to the "martial spirit" which he does not find in our conventions, it is one of the standing criticisms that we possess too much rather than too little of it. Delegates from the stirring, hustling western states have been smiling audibly at the inference that they represent a "languid" type of civilization or of Christianity. If your observer would observe a little more critically, he would find that the bulk of

CURES DEAFNESS AND CATARRH.

ONLY ONE REMEDY IS CERTAIN, AND THAT IS "ACTINA."

Deafness is the direct result, in 95 out of every hundred cases, of chronic catarrh of the throat and middle ear. The effect of catarrh is to fill up and clog the air passages with deposits, these in a short time stopping the action of the vibratory bones. Deafness ensues, and the hearing cannot be restored until these deposits are removed. It is impossible to reach the inner ear by probing or spraying, and that is the reason why the greatest aurists and physicians find their skill baffled. But science has discovered a way to reach these heretofore inaccessible portions of the head. This discovery has been named "Actina." It is a vapor current which, passing through the Eustachian tubes, attacks and dissolves the clogging catarrhal deposits, so that they pass away, and at the same time loosens up the bones (hammer, anvil and stirrup) in the inner ear, so that they immediately respond to the slightest sound vibration. Ringing noises in the head are also caused by catarrh, and are the premonitory signs of deafness. "Actina" never fails to cure this distressing affliction; we have known cases of years' standing to be cured in three weeks. "Actina" is also a certain specific for asthma, bronchitis, sore throat, weak lungs, colds and headaches, all of which are either directly or indirectly caused by catarrh. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. Write us about your case; we give advice free, and positive proof of cures. Prof. Wilson's 100 page Dictionary of Disease also sent free. our membership is in the great central west—among a people representing the most enterprising and aggressive type of our American civilization. He would find, too, that our evangelists are pushing north and east as well as south and west, and everywhere meet with success.

Your observer discovers in our communion service what he terms a "cheerful solemnity" and he thinks that this has resulted from a too frequent observance of the institution of the Lord's Supper. It is to be inferred that our friendly critic believes in a doleful "solemnity!" We do not. To us the institution is a sweet and tender memorial of Christ's death and the pledge of his coming again in triumph. It is therefore a solemn, but not a sad service. If any one who witnessed the observance on Lord's day by the large audiences of people in three large churches was not impressed with the solemnity and significance of this service it probably results from a too infrequent observance of the institution. The early church observed this ordinance, not weekly only, but daily, and it did so with "gladness"—a sort of "cheerful solemnity," no doubt.

Our religious brethren in the other churches in your city have treated us with great courtesy and kindness, which are very highly appreciated, and the good-natured criticisms, if they may be so-called, to which we have referred, do not diminish our gratitude.

Old Men and Women Do Bless Him.

Successful Methods of Collecting Missionary Money.

Almost every successful method of collecting money for missions is based on a system of definite pledges, payable once a week or once a month. The reason for this lies in the fact though small sums frequently contributed amount in the end to a surprising total, they are much more easily secured than larger sums paid at one time. Thus two cents a week is more readily promised than $1 a year, yet in reality it amounts to four cents more. And ten cents a week seems a trifling sum compared with $5 a year. Many will cheerfully give the former sum to whom the latter would seem an impossibility.

Two cents a week. The simplest of all pledge systems is known as the two-cents-a-week plan. It has been widely and successfully used as a starting point in systematic giving by women's organizations and young people's societies, and its vindication lies in the enormous sums that have been paid into the treasury as a result of its use. The giving of a penny a week—two cents in our money—was first proposed by William Carey in his famous Enquiry, published in 1792. It is a pitifully small sum, yet largely in excess of the average amount given for missions. "The churches, whether by themselves or by societies," says Dr. George Smith, "have yet to organize themselves up to the level of Carey's penny a week."

Five times two is ten. An enlargement of the two-cents-a-week plan, devised by Mr. W. L. Amerman, and successfully used by many Christian Endeavor societies, is known as the five-times-two-is-ten plan. It is based on the principle that the best way to interest people in missions is to put them to work for it, and that the best results in giving come from the collection of small contributions regularly from many people. In the five-times-two-is-ten plan each person takes a pledge to give two cents a week himself, and collect a like amount from four other persons, preferably those who are not already giving to missions. Ten collectors constitute a division, and are assigned to a division treasurer, who thus becomes responsible for ten times ten cents—a dollar a week. "The first year we tried it," says Mr. Amerman, "we had fifty members of our Christian Endeavor Society and fifty outsiders working on it—one hundred in all. At the end of the year the receipts amounted to about $500. Here were one hundred workers influencing four hundred people—a total of five hundred doing something for missions."

Proportion pledges. Societies that have already taken the first steps in learning to give, should introduce a system of pledges in which the amounts promised are proportionate to the ability of the giver. The usual method is to circulate pledge-cards with blank spaces for the name, address and amount contributed. When these are signed and returned, the subscriber is furnished with a series of envelopes, or a mite-box, in which to deposit his offerings.

Taking shares. Where the support of a missionary is assumed or other special work undertaken, it is a good plan to divide the amount needed into shares and issue certificates of stock. The value of this plan was demonstrated half a century ago, when the Congregational Sunday-school children built the Morning Star, contributing the entire cost in ten-cent shares. There are many still living who attribute their first interest in missions to part-ownership in the little vessel, and still cherish the worn and faded certificates issued to subscribers years ago. That the share plan is still workable is proved by the experience of the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church of New York City. A few years ago, being in need of $850 for the support of a missionary, a blackboard was divided into one hundred and seventy squares, each one representing ten cents a week, or $5 a year. This was displayed at the church prayer-meeting, and the members asked to take the shares. As each share was taken an X was placed in a square. In less than an hour every square was filled, the whole amount having been quickly and enthusiastically promised. In another church where the share plan was used, the unique idea was conceived of making the shares equivalent to the salary of the missionary for one day.

The treasurer. The success of every system of collecting funds depends largely upon the committee in charge. The treasurer, especially, must thoroughly understand his business. Upon him devolves the duty of keeping strict accounts, making clear and accurate reports, and preventing payments from becoming irregular. Reminding people of their obligations and keeping them up to their promise, is the most difficult part of the task. This, however, can be easily accomplished by issuing a report in which numbers appear instead of names. This plan was successfully tried in the Christian Endeavor Society of the First Presbyterian Church, Springfield, Ohio. When the pledge-cards were signed they were handed at once to the treasurer, who entered them on his books and assigned a special number to each. Sets of envelopes were then given out, bearing these numbers instead of the names. At the end of the term (the pledges called for six monthly payments) the treasurer mimeographed a report, showing what each number had pledged and paid in, and sent a copy to each member of the society. As no one knew the identity of the numbers save the treasurer and the individuals to whom they had been assigned, no exception was taken to the publicity of the published report; but those who were in arrears promptly paid what they owed.—Belle M. Brain, in Missionary Review of the World.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

Sisters, large plans are laid by all the states for the coming year. We, too, have large hopes, but we must first get right ourselves. If every woman will, by prayer and obedience to God, get her heart in harmony with His will, this will be a banner year for Missouri. Our new state motto is a long but an ideal one. Listen: "The heart given to our Father, the hand given to our brother, the life given to both, will win the world for Christ." Will you take this for your motto, incorporate it unto your life for one year? You have given your heart to God—have you? have I? Our hands—are they truly our brothers? Our lives—are they consecrated, as Christ asks them to be? No woman should feel she has begun to be a true auxiliary member until she has won a new member; not merely her name, but her interest and help. If each will do this, we can report 7,000 members for old Missouri. Shall we not do so? Will each Tidings' subscriber win one other and still retain her own?

Now is the time to prepare for C. W. B. M. day. The first or second Sunday in December is ours. We can then have an opportunity to tell our churches about our work, our plans and our great needs—and takes offerings for the general fund. Speak to your pastors early, so he may make all needed arrangements. Our pastors are usually glad to be asked to preach a C. W. B. M. sermon. Why not ask this service of them. Put into their hands plenty of information as to late details of work. We can't expect they can be acquainted with all the works of the different boards, as to details; nor can they with ours. Appoint committees to canvass all the congregation for new members, Tidings and gifts of money, to be given on C. W. B. M. day. Let the call for new won members be made that same day, and the newly won ones give their names then.

Prepare by study, prepare by prayer.

A Business-like Church Business Meeting.

and never can refer without tedious search to any past action. Blessed indeed is the church whose clerk at the business meetings is acute in the head and swift in the hand, who makes a good index to former records, who always has them with him at the meeting, who knows what is worth recording and what is to be omitted, and who does his work quietly in a corner.

Fun is an essential of the best business meeting, that "joy in the Lord" and in his work which bubbles over in an irresistible merriment now and then, and lightens the heaviest task with beautiful laughter.

Eloquence is another essential—not grandiloquence—but that true oratory of earnestness which moves others because itself is deeply moved, and persuades hearts because its own heart has been touched by the Holy Spirit.

Appreciation is a third essential. Work done should be reported by committees, officers and pastor, and praise should be freely bestowed. The most fruitful criticism is praise. Every church member should go away from the meeting full of pride in his church and zeal for her service.

And finally, the chief essential is unselfishness. Even church work may easily look in rather than out. Let us never forget that our Father's business is the saving of lost men, and that must be the main business of the business meetings of his church. If what is done at the meeting has some vital relation to the winning of men to Christ, either abroad or at home, and if it is so done as actually to lead to the salvation of even a single soul, then, and then alone, is the church business meeting truly business-like.

a holy mystery. We believe it and denominate it a supernatural, spiritual, sacramental Presence of the living Christ. The true believer feeds on Christ in holy communion. The words of the apostle are significant, "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not a communion of the blood of Christ? The bread which we break, is it not a communion of the body of Christ?" 1 Cor. 10:16.

We attach no magical power to the ordinance itself. It is only efficacious because joined to the word of God, and when partaken by faith. It is this view of the Sacrament that leads the Lutheran to attach great importance to suitable preparation in private and by an appointed public service observed in all of our churches, and as well to find in it the most blessed pledge of the Master's presence and love.

We teach that "The church is the congregation of the saints in which the gospel is correctly taught and the sacraments are properly administered." It is not a society, but a divine institution, essential alike to the salvation of men, the culture of believers and the propagation of the gospel throughout the world. The whole scheme of our Lutheran faith rests on the person of Christ and offers the gospel as the free gift of God to all men. In common with evangelical Christendom, we accept "the apostles, the Nicene and the Athanasian creeds." We lay no claim to infallibility, but we do contend that we hold the pure truth as it is in Jesus. We recognize and love to fraternize with all who acknowledge Him in sincerity and in truth.

We rejoice in the legacy God has committed to us, and we are striving to fulfill our mission.

GORDON.

Mrs. Margaret V. Gordon was a daughter of the late Colonel Lewis Green. She was born in Sumner Co., Tenn., October 27, 1826, and died in Lexington, Lafayette Co., Mo., October 1, 1903. She was married to Dr. William A. Gordon May 10, 1849. To them were born ten children, five of whom, with her husband, preceded her to the spirit world. After an acquaintance of eight years as her pastor, my judgment is that her equal would be hard to find.

FRAZER.

Arthur C. Frazer was born February 28, 1868 at Byers, Jackson Co., O., died Oct. 12, 1903, at Chicago, Ill. Was married to Miss Effie Cummings at Harrisonville, Mo., in 1889. To this union two children were born, one of whom died in infancy. Became a Christian when sixteen years of age. Was successively a member of our churches at Byers, Harrisonville, New Orleans and Chicago. As a member of the First Church he was faithful, devoted, efficient and Christlike. He was universally respected and esteemed by the congregation. Having lived a Christian, he died in the triumphant faith of the gospel. Funeral services were conducted in this city by the writer and at Harrisonville, Mo., where interment was made by Bro. F. G. Tyrrell, of St. Louis, who was an intimate friend of the deceased.

CATTERTON.

Miss Sarah A. Organ was born near Vincennes, Ind., Sept. 28, 1830; died at her home in Elba Township, Knox Co., Ill., Oct. 17, 1903. In early life she united with the M. E. Church, but after her marriage to James R. Catterton, Feb. 18, 1849, she and her husband joined the Christian Church of which church she remained a true member until her death. She was a member of the Eureka C. W. B. M., also a member of the Illinois Christian Educational Association. The funeral services were conducted from her home by Rev. J. T. Killip, a former pastor, and the interment was at the family cemetery, where she awaits the resurrection of the just.

DUTT.

Bessie, wife of Meade E. Dutt, the beloved pastor of the church at Girard, Ill., passed into the Father's house on Sept. 12, 1903, from Jacksonville, Ill. She had come here for treatment, but the severity of the case forbade recovery. In the twilight of a beautiful autumn evening she peacefully fell asleep. Funeral services were conducted by the writer in the church at Girard in the presence of a large company of people, among whom she had lived during the past two years. They all loved her because of her beauty of character. Useful in every department of the church, she has now been called to enjoy the fruitage of her labors. Brother Dutt has the promises of the Gospel to comfort him in his loneliness. His faith is strong, though his grief is intense. May the Lord sustain him.

RICHARDSON.

John Richardson, was born January 2, 1825, in Claibourn county, Tennessee, and died September 20, 1903, at Martinton, Illinois, aged 78 years, 8 months and 18 days. He emigrated with his parents to Darke county, Ohio, in the fall of the year of his birth, where he resided all his life, except the last eleven months of his life he lived with his son, Rev. T. F. Richardson, pastor of the church at Martinton, Illinois, who had taken him to his home to care for him in his declining years. The deceased was united in marriage with Mary Jones on the 22nd day of October, 1846. To this union there were born seven children, four sons and three daughters. His three daughters and two sons preceded him to the Spirit Land some years since. His wife preceded him to the Great Beyond about eleven years ago. He was a kind father, a good husband and neighbor. I was personally acquainted with Father Richardson and was called with Brother George F. Wright to officiate at the funeral services.

WM. BEAUCHAMP.

BRONAUGH.

Elizabeth Jane Hill was born in Macoupin Co., Ill., March 17, 1841. In this county she spent her girlhood. Her father died when she was a small child. At an early age she united with her mother and other members of the family in earning daily bread. March 7, 1858 she became the wife of William Bronaugh in McClean Co., Ill. This was her home until she came to Colorado in 1894 to live with her daughter—the wife of Leonard G. Thompson, our Colorado corresponding secretary and state evangelist. In her home she fell asleep in Christ after a protracted and painful illness, Friday, Oct. 23, 1903. Mother Bronaugh was a member of the South Broadway Church. In early life she became a Christian. She adorned the doctrine of Christ by an upright life and godly conversation. Three children, two sons and a daughter, survive to illustrate in their lives the Christian intelligence and devotion of their mother. One son lives in the state of Washington, the other members of the family are with us in the South Broadway Church. Mother Bronaugh loved the house of God and enjoyed the fellowship of the saints. Her end was peace. She has passed through the portiere into the other room.

ABOUT THAT COAT

You wear a coat. Why? To keep the cold out? No; to keep the warmth in. What of the body that has no warmth—the thin, poor body that lacks the healthy flesh and fat it needs?

For such we say that Scott's Emulsion provides the right kind of a coat. Why? Because Scott's Emulsion builds firm, solid flesh and supplies just enough fat to fill nature's requirements—no more. That means bodily warmth.

We'll send you a sample free upon request.

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl Street, New York.

Atlanta, Oct. 28.—Reports read at our annual membership meeting held recently, show the following results of the year's work just closed: Conversions, 27; total increase, 35; total of moneys raised, $2,128; total for missions, $300; present resident membership, 260. There is harmony and prosperity in all lines of work, and the church is going on to better things. S. S. Lappin, our pastor, has had tempting calls to other fields, but has decided to stay with us indefinitely.—W. H. MASON, clerk.

Pana, Oct. 19.—Bro. J. Fred Jones, our state secretary, was with us yesterday and preached both morning and evening. After the morning service a Christian mission, for the purpose of keeping the ordinances of the Lord's house and the fostering of a Sunday-school, was organized. This mission is to co-operate with the Illinois Christian Missionary Society in establishing a Christian church to stand identified with the people known as Disciples of Christ or Christians. These meetings were held in the Congregational Church, which place is also secured for next Sunday. M. R. Corbett and M. C. Linthicum were appointed a committee to look after this work. Sunday-school will convene next Sunday at 9:45 A. M., after which Brother Stanley, of Champaign, Ill., will preach and conduct our communion service. This is not the first attempt to organize a church in Pana, and we realize that difficulties will have to be encountered, so we solicit the prayers of the church and any other help it can lend for the success of this undertaking for the Lord. We know the Lord and feel that we know ourselves so you may look for a church in Pana as a result of this beginning.—M. C. LINTHICUM.

Pontiac, Oct. 26.—Am in a good meeting at Boston Chapel, Macoupin Co. Membership at beginning 25. There have been 12 added, 3 by letter. Christian Endeavor organized last night. Attica, Oct. 26.—On my way home from Detroit I stopped at Wallace, Fountain county, Ind., and visited relatives and friends of my boyhood days. Here father and mother were born and grew up. Logansport, Oct. 28.—I close my work here Dec. 15. Have several meetings to hold, also several calls; no decision as yet. Prof. G. N. Berry, of the church here, will receive all letters from applicants for this pulpit.—A. M. HOOTMAN.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Vinita, Oct. 29.—Just returned from Pryor Creek, where I assisted the pastor, F. H. Groom, in an 18 days' meeting. Much good was done. There were 24 added to the church. Brother Groom is a fine pastor, and is greatly loved by the people.—RANDOLPH COOK.

Attendance all that could be expected, and we look for a great meeting. Brother and Sister Shoemaker are splendid workers. Pray for us.—W. S. LEMMON, evangelist.

Blockton, Oct. 30.—We have had a very prosperous year notwithstanding the change of pastors and storms which have played their part in the year's work. The following will show what has been done: Number of additions under my preaching, 14; revival meetings, 13; dismissed by letter, 2; removed by death, 2; sermons and addresses, 102; calls made, 300; marriages, 3; funerals conducted, 4. Amount of money raised for all purposes, $1,137.46; raised on church debt, $285; minister's salary, $657; incidentals, $100.36; protracted meetings, $123.50; improvements, $69; missions, $40.—S. R. REYNOLDS.

KANSAS.—Morrowville, Oct. 29.—Revival meeting at this place is growing in interest. Brother Atwood and wife are the evangelists, and we count them among the best. Fourteen additions, and we expect many more before we close.—EDWARD CLUTTER, minister.

Kansas City, Oct. 30.—For more than three years I have been minister of the South Side Christian Church, (Armourdale) this city. During this time we improved the property and held three meetings in which I conducted the song service and did the preaching. More than 180 were added. But our recent flood brought this work to a sudden close. Am open for a few meetings. I can lead the singing, do the preaching, run the query box and will risk the financial part.—T. L. NOBLITT, A. M. M. D.

MINNESOTA.—St. Paul, Oct. 27.—We had two added by letter at Central Church Sunday morning, making eight in October. Our Sunday-school reached the highest attendance by 20 per cent than ever before. Mrs. Hattie Rose is acting as pastor's assistant till Jan. 1. The outlook for this new work is most hopeful. A year ago they had no property and met in a hall. Now they have a beautiful $8,000 house, a good Sunday-school and a thriving work. I never knew a nobler band of Disciples.—C. C. DAVIS, pastor, 89 Leech St.

MISSOURI.—St. Louis, Oct. 19.—The meetings at Maplewood closed Wednesday night, Oct. 14. O. E. Hamilton, evangelist and Frank A. Wilkinson, singer, did the church great good and kept up until the close. There were three added the last night and 71 in all. Quite a large number of these were men and women of mature minds and approaching middle life. The church will be greatly strengthened and built up by these additions. On the last night quite a liberal sum was pledged toward building a house of worship and the foundation is now being built for a new church. The congregation was delighted

YOUR PHYSICAL SALVATION.

Never neglect constipation. It means too much misery and piling up of disease for all parts of the body. Death often starts with constipation. The clogging of the bowels forces poison through the intestines into the blood. All sorts of diseases commence that way. Most common complaints are dyspepsia, indigestion, catarrh of the stomach, liver complaint, kidney trouble, headaches, etc. The bowels must be relieved, but not with cathartics or purgatives. They weaken and aggravate the disease. Your physical salvation lies in using Vernal Saw Palmetto Berry Wine instead. It is a tonic laxative of the highest order. It builds up and adds new strength and vigor. It assists the bowels to move themselves naturally and healthfully without medicine. One small dose a day will cure any case, and remove the cause of the trouble. It is not a patent nostrum nor a liquor. Literary and Vocal Interpretation of the Bible. By S. S. Curry, Ph. D. Introduction by Francis G. Peabody, D. D. (The Macmillan Co., New York. $1.50.)

Too long has the public reading of the scriptures been relegated to the ignoble category of "introductory exercises." There are three distinct elements in public worship, aside from the music. There is man's speaking to God, or prayer; God's speaking to man, or scripture-reading; and man's speaking to man, or the sermon. It would seem that the first two ought to be the most important instead of merely "introductory" to the sermon. The decadence of public scripture-reading is largely due to the fact that most ministers do not know how, or will not take the pains, to read the Bible intelligently to their people. Occasionally a preacher is found who considers it a sort of sacrilege to read the Bible intelligently, and, as a matter of principle, applies the same monotonous "holy tone" to history, prophecy, poetry and parable. Dr. Curry has probably had more experience as a teacher of elocution to young preachers than any other living man. He has served acceptably in this capacity in the divinity schools of Yale, Harvard, Boston University and Newton. He has written this book as a practical guide to the study of the Bible with a view to reading it aloud. Throughout the book runs the thought that the intelligent public reading of the Bible demands first a religious appreciation, and second a literary appreciation of it. One cannot read the Bible properly to a congregation unless he feels that it is, religiously, a unique book. Neither can one read any part of the Bible properly unless he distinguishes between the lyric and the dramatic spirit, between the oratorical and the didactic, between simple narrative and epic recital. This is perhaps enough to convince anyone that the author handles his subject sanely as a scholar and a Christian teacher, and not as a faddist. If a further guarantee is asked that he does not call upon us to elocutionize in our scripture-reading, find it this illustration: "Imagine that you are called upon to read a letter from a mother to a son who is blind. Will you endeavor to exhibit your elocutionary powers, your fine pronunciation, your superior understanding? Will you endeavor to charm and fascinate one who is thinking, not of you, but of his mother, or seek to gain his attention by peculiar technical inflections, so as to project into the words of the mother meanings peculiar to yourself?" A man who takes this view of scripture-reading can be relied upon not to treat the subject in any superficial or unworthy manner.

The Hidden-Fortune. An Educational Story. By Colin McKenzie Pinkerton. (Shissler-Chase Co., Des Moines.)

A plain and kindly story with a wholesome atmosphere and a group of characters with whom anyone can associate without contamination. The plot is ingenious and the style in keeping with the theme.

Witnesses of the Light: The William Bellden Noble Lectures at Harvard University for 1903. By Washington Gladden. (Houghton, Mifflin and Co., Boston, illustrated, pp. 285. $1.25 net.)

The founder of this lectureship stated as his purpose to promote "the perfection of the spiritual man and the consecration by the spirit of Jesus of every department of human character, thought and activity." Within such broad limits the lecturer was amply justified in choosing to inculcate some lessons through biography. Six great men are selected who stood forth, each in his own generation and in his own sphere, as an exponent of eternal truth as he saw it. They were not all orthodox in their theology. None of them had all truth, but each had some truth of which he was a pre-eminent exponent. The secret of profitable study of biography is to learn how to learn from men in spite of their imperfections and errors. The characters whom Dr. Gladden selects as, in their several ways, witnesses of the light that lighteth every man coming into the world, are Dante the poet, Michelangelo the artist, Fichte the philosopher, Victor Hugo the man of letters, Wagner the musician, and Ruskin the preacher.

Savonarola, or The Reformation of a City, and other addresses. By E. L. Powell, LL. D. (Sheltman & Co., Louisville. $1.)

This volume contains sixteen papers and addresses, four or five of which, including the one which gives its title to the book, were originally published in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. Some of the others are patriotic addresses delivered during the Spanish American war. They are all well worthy of being preserved in permanent form. The first paper on "The Province of the Preacher" gives the keynote for the whole collection. The preacher is to be a man with a message, and that message must concern the most vital things. He is to deal in concrete realities, not in vague abstractions or super-subtle generalities. "Every day is his day of opportunity; every realm is his field of service and duty." With this large view of his calling, the author, as a preacher, feels justified in dealing with questions of patriotism and civic righteousness. The effectiveness with which he does it is, after all, the best justification that this course could have. Christian citizenship will be strengthened, and uplifted by such addresses as these.

The Christian Science Delusion. By Rev. A. C. Dixon, D. D. (W. H. Smith, 25 Stanhope St., Boston. Paper, pp. 52. 10 cents.)

Dr. Dixon's little book, which is a recent issue in the series of "Dixon's Sermons" which are being published monthly, is a hard hit at Christian Science. It can be read and studied with profit by those who have leanings in that direction or have to deal with those so afflicted.

A Missionary's Book Review.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON: I am afraid I have shown scant courtesy in the matter of acknowledging the receipt of "The Fundamental Error of Christendom." I do not have much time for reading, and have to take books in turn. I have now had time to read this, in part, three or four times, and the "Moral and Spiritual Aspects of Baptism," also.

As to the latter, I am well pleased. I have not imagination enough to appreciate all the author's subtleties of presentation, some of which seem to me a trifle fanciful. But the whole attitude, the tone, the treatment seem to bring an element into the baptismal question which it has sadly needed. I should be glad to feel that the spirit which pervades the book was to any considerable extent representative of "us." I am sorry to offer a single criticism. I wish the one mention of ourselves could have been left out. I wish the book were strictly catholic. I wish my neighbor might read it without a hint of local color. Take the argument for what it is worth in itself.

Now as to Dr. Moore's book. In reading it through more or less carefully three or four times, I have found no place where it seemed to trip, or where the argument seemed inadequate. If there was need of a convincing and overwhelming argument, it is surely found here. I might not fully agree with some of the doctor's exegesis, but I don't fancy he would be much disturbed by that. Exegesis is a wide field in which youth seems to add to one's certainty.

I have the feeling, however, that this presentation is too overwhelming. It seems too convincing. One cannot but feel that there is no room for escape from his conclusions. What, then, of those who do escape? Are they incompetent to grasp the truth? Or are they not honest enough to act up to their intellectual convictions? I do not like either horn of the dilemma. I do not get the impression of a judicial spirit in the book. Perhaps it was not written with that in view. Now, being fully convinced on all the points at issue, I want to know what is the mental and spiritual attitude of all those scholarly and godly men who do not see at all as the doctor does. By what process do they persuade themselves to go on, for example, sprinkling babies? If this book is really as convincing as it seems to me to be, why are not honest scholars outside our own people impressed by it? In short, it seems to me that the most one can say is that it is a very strong, compact contribution to the controversy, in an age when men more and more refuse to be won by a partisan argument. As a popular presentation of the truth for our own use, I can only commend most highly. As a dispassionate discussion of the subject, based on all the evidence, from the standpoint of the student of Christianity, it seems too unanswerable to convince. I am afraid you will see that my criticism is more a statement of what I would like than an opinion of what Dr. Moore has written! I am sending the book to a friend who is an immersionist closely affiliated to the Anglicans. If he gives an opinion I will send it to you.

I want to thank you again for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. If ever we needed the grace of quietness and large-heartedness, it is now, and aside from the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, I am afraid our people get little enough in that line.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN GRAFTON MCGAVRAN,

Damoh, C. P., India.

[The question which this criticism raises—if the baptismal question is so clear to us, why does not our argument carry conviction to all honest, intelligent people who wish to know the will of the Lord?—is one which often arises with fair-minded people. Perhaps the solution is to be found in the fact that we do not all occupy the same point of view. With us, if the evidence is clear that immersion is what Jesus Christ commanded, and what was practiced in New Testament times, that settles the question as to what we ought to practice. Not so, with many able religious leaders. This does not at all follow according to their logic. They claim the Church has the right to make any change as respects the action or subject of baptism, which it may deem advisable. Until we can reach common ground as to how far Christ's authority binds us in reference to the ordinances, we are not likely to settle the baptismal question. But there are many Pedobaptists who claim that their practice is sustained by New Testament teaching, and who could not otherwise continue their practice. These may be benefited by such books as those mentioned above.—EDITOR.]

November Magazines.

The Century opens with a descriptive article on the New York Stock Exchange as seen from within. What promises to be an exceptionally attractive group of articles and pictures is Edith Wharton's series on "Italian Villas and their gardens," with superb colored illustrations by Maxfield Parrish. The current installment of Andrew D. White's "Chapters from my Diplomatic Life," recounts his recollections of Bismarck.

The World's Work this month gives a more than usually interesting survey of the past month's events—perhaps because it has been a month full of events worth thinking about. The post-office scandal, the Macedonian trouble, the financial situation, the labor question, are all treated in excellent articles.

Country Life in America takes up, in its leading article, the very practical theme of "How to Make a Living Out-of-doors." An article on dairy-farming is the first in a series under this general head. Particularly seasonable is an article, which tells how to raise chrysanthemums.

Everybody's has an article on a theme which ought to be carefully pondered in this generation: "Successful Men Who are not Rich." What! Can a man be successful and not rich? A startling suggestion, but a very pregnant one.

"Inspired Scripture."

EDITOR OF THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—In the number of your paper June 11, containing Sunday-school lesson for June 21, is Paul's Charge to Timothy. In 2 Tim. 3:16, 17 is some explanation I do not understand. To begin with, what is Scripture? Secondly, what authority have you for saying that King James' translation is a perversion and that the revised version is correct? You say that all Scripture is not inspired. What authority for that? To me that which is not inspired is not Scripture. I have always considered King James' translation on this quite good enough and plain, as I know of nothing I call Scripture except the inspired kind. Paul says all Scripture is given by inspiration. You say it is not, but there is an uninspired kind as well as an inspired. By this you confuse my mind, for I begin to ask what is inspired and what not? How am I to know?

Watson, Ill., Oct. 10.

A READER.

[The above misrepresents Paul and it misrepresents us. Paul did not say "all Scripture is given by inspiration of God," and we did not say that some Scripture is uninspired. The reason for preferring the rendering of the Revised Version in this passage is that it is simply a question of translating Greek into English and the Revised Version represents the best scholarship. Paul wrote certain words in Greek. The question is, What do those Greek words mean, and what English words will express the same idea? The answer must be given by those who know Greek. It is not a matter of our private likes and dislikes, but of honest and accurate translation. The Revised Version represents, beyond a doubt, the very best scholarship. As between two translations of a passage giving essentially different meanings, no one has a moral right to choose the one which best fits his own notions without inquiring which best represents the author's meaning. We may be very sure that all Scripture (i. e. all the Bible) is inspired; but we have no right to put that sentiment into the mouth of Paul when, as a matter of fact, he was discussing quite another point. To determine what is inspired and what is not, is a problem which has indeed given the church much trouble, but it is not to be settled off-hand by forging Paul's name to any statement which he never made. The word "scriptures" means writings. In these verses in the letter to Timothy, Paul assumes the undisputed fact that some writings are inspired by God, he passes over for the present the question as to what writings are inspired, and proceeds to a positive statement of the usefulness of the inspired writings. If Paul were asked his opinion of the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures (including the canonical books of the Old and New Testaments) we have no doubt but that he would say all these Scriptures are given by inspiration of God. But that is not what he does say in 2 Tim. 3:16, 17, and whoever bases his argument for the inspiration of the whole Bible upon this passage is leaning upon a very weak prop.—EDITOR.]

After protracted deliberation I have determined to resume the ministry and labor among the Disciples of Christ. You are acquainted with the fact that I once labored among your people and afterward united with the Congregational Church. It seems to me not necessary to enter in detail into the reasons for that change. In a general way I may say that I was not satisfied with the stress then placed on the organ question, and did not sympathize with the anti-progressive spirit that was then so much in evidence. I found a pleasant home among the Congregationalists, and think my association with them was most profitable to me.

After watching the drift of criticism "higher" and lower I think I see a distinct tendency toward more particularly Biblical preaching in the last few years, and a pronounced emphasis on Jesus of Nazareth as the all-sufficient Savior and sole authority in matters of faith and obedience.

I recognize the vantage ground occupied by the Disciples, as well as a growing tendency among the leading minds to deepen the spirituality of their membership. With this growing tendency is seen an enlargement of educational and missionary enterprises without which there could be little hope of progress.

The battle between belief and unbelief has been settled in the field of scholarship as I think in favor of belief. After we accept the book that contains the revelation from God the most important quest is the key or explanation of that Book. The whole Protestant world is becoming pronounced every year in the conviction that Jesus, the Christ is the preacher's only message.

As the scrapping spirit has subsided the spirit of affiliation has grown among the different religious bodies, and "Jesus only" remains after the other prophets have taken their departure.

The spirit of unity among the people of God was never so apparent as now, and it seems to me that the Disciples of Christ stand to-day at the open door of a wider influence than they have known since the opening days of Alexander Campbell's splendid triumphs.

We are just entering the third step toward religious liberty. Persecution the first, toleration the second, appreciation the third, these three, but the greatest of these is appreciation.

Instead of hunting for differences to wrangle over the Christian world is looking for agreements in which to join hands and heart for service. It is because I think the consecrated workers of the Christian Church offer me my busy field for Christian service as a minister of the gospel that I am coming back to the church of my father and mother.

If any brother anywhere has any grievance against me for things either said or done, I stand ready to explain or amend any wrong if I can see any ground for it.

CHAS. H. CATON.

THERE IS GREAT DANGER IN CATARRH.

If Left to Run its Course Unchecked, it Often Causes Death.

Catarrh scatters its poisons throughout the entire system. The stomach and Lungs are affected by the droppings that fall into the throat and are swallowed during sleep. Dyspepsia, inflammation of the stomach, bronchitis and consumption are the results. The blood also becomes contaminated and carries the poisons to all parts of the system. Frequently in the more advanced stages, the bones of the head become decayed and the air passages are a putrid mass and create a stench so foul and offensive as to be unbearable. The expression, "rotten with catarrh," is not overdrawn or exaggerated.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets strike at the root of this terrible odious disease and eradicate it from the system. They are a constitutional remedy that cleanses the system thoroughly of all poisons and purifies the blood. Under their influence the head becomes clear, the discharges at the nose and droppings into the throat cease, the lost sense of smell is restored, the eye brightens, the foul breath becomes pure and sweet and the odious, disgusting disease is thoroughly expelled from the system.

A Cincinnati man says: "I suffered the misery and humiliation of catarrh for twelve years. My case became so aggravated that it seriously interfered with all my business relations. The disease became so offensive that I would not venture into any one's presence unless it were absolutely necessary. I tried every remedy that I could get hold of. Some helped me temporarily, but as soon as I ceased taking them, I would relapse into the old condition.

"Finally a friend told me of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and insisted that I try them. I had about despaired of ever finding help, but bought a box anyway. I began to notice the improvement within twenty-four hours after I began taking them. Before the first box was gone I felt like another man. I kept up the treatment till I had taken three boxes and was entirely cured. I have never had a recurrence of the trouble from that day to this. My head is clear and well and none of the offensive symptoms of the disease ever trouble me. It has been two years since I stopped taking them."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cts. a box.

The Quiet Hour

As the hart panteth after the water brooks, So panteth my soul after thee, O God.

When one reaches this stage of religious experience, in which the soul thirsts for the living God and finds its highest satisfaction in him, then it is far easier to be religious than otherwise.

The practical error from which we need to warn the inquirer, is that coming to Christ is getting up an impetuous feeling. Faith in Christ is not a process of forcing one's self up to a certain pitch of feeling and excitement, and then, having accomplished that, to be done with the whole business ever after; no more than marriage is a thing to have done, and then to be done with it. Coming to Christ is coming into loving, eternal union with the "chiefest among ten thousand."—John Hall.

God is ever with me, ever before me. I know he cannot but oversee me always, though my eyes be held, that I see him not; neither is there any minute that I can live without God. Why do I not, therefore, always live with him? Why do I not account all hours lost wherein I enjoy him not?—Joseph Hall.

There is such a thing as hidden power. It is a quiet, yet moving force. It is the result of communion with God. It lies back of speech and actions. It has a calming and sustaining virtue. It is the grace of God in the soul, which overspreads and vitalizes the entire being. It has an eloquence more potent than words. It makes itself felt. Men who come in contact with those in whom it resides, more or less recognize it. There is something about them which says they have been with Jesus and have learned of him. The possessors of it may not be conscious of its effect, as they go to and fro through life and mingle among their acquaintances, but it is none the less influential on this account.—Presbyterian.

Let our temper be under the rule of the love of Jesus. He cannot alone curb it—he can make us gentle and patient. Let the vow, that not an unkind word to others shall ever be heard from our lips, be laid trustfully at his feet. Let the gentleness that refuses to take offense, that is always ready to excuse, to think and hope the best, mark our intercourse with all. Let our life be one of self-sacrifice, always studying the welfare of others, finding our highest joy in blessing others. And let us, in studying the divine art of doing good, yield ourselves as obedient learners to the guidance of the Holy Spirit. By his grace, the most commonplace life can be transfigured with the brightness of a heavenly beauty, as the infinite love of a divine nature shines out through our frail humanity.—Andrew Murray.

Grant unto us, Almighty God, in all time of sore distress, the comfort of the forgiveness of our sins. In time of darkness give us blessed hope, in time of sickness of body give us quiet courage; and when the heart is bowed down, and the soul is very heavy, and life is a burden, and pleasure a weariness, and the sun is too bright, and life too mirthful, then may that Spirit, the spirit of the Comforter, come upon us, and after our darkness may there be the clear shining of the heavenly light; that so, being uplifted again by thy mercy, we may pass on through this our mortal life with quiet courage, patient hope and unshaken trust, hoping through thy loving kindness and tender mercy to be delivered from death into the large life of the eternal years. Hear us of thy mercy, through Jesus Christ our Lord Amen.

Tell Her So.

Amid the cares of married life,
In spite of toil and business strife,
If you value your sweet wife,
Tell her so!

Prove to her you don't forget
The bond to which the seal is set:
She's of life's sweets the sweetest yet—
Tell her so!

When days are dark and deeply blue,
She has her troubles, same as you;
Show her that your love is true—
Tell her so!

There was a time you thought it bliss
To get the favor of one kiss;
A dozen now won't come amiss—
Tell her so!

Your love for her is no mistake—
You feel it, dreaming or awake—
Don't conceal it! For her sake,
Tell her so!

Don't act, if she has passed her prime,
As though to please her were a crime;
If e'er you loved her, now's the time—
Tell her so!

She'll return, for each caress,
An hundred-fold of tenderness!
Hearts like hers were made to bless!
Tell her so!

You are hers and hers alone;
Well you know she's all your own;
Don't wait to "carve it on a stone"—
Tell her so!

Never let her heart grow cold—
Richer beauties will unfold;
She is worth her weight in gold!
Tell her so!

The Winning of Jim.

By Miss May Everett Glover.

"I just think it is too mean!" Ethel Cameron exclaimed, coming hastily into her brother's office and leaning against the desk where he was writing.

"Why, Pussy, what is wrong?" he asked looking up. "Did the taffy burn, or have the people not gotten through with the last lot of all-day suckers?" he asked teasingly.

The Sunshine Society had been working hard for two months to raise money to send little crippled Bessie Haines away to a great doctor who it was thought could cure her. It was a large sum of money for them to attempt to earn; but as Frank Lane said, when they had decided to undertake it, "that all they needed was, Git up elbow grease," they had gone to work. Frank had set the example by starting the next day to peddling vegetables, out of school hours, with a book tucked down in the corner of the cart so that he could peep at his lesson in odd moments. Some of the boys had regular customers for whom they cut kindling, carried water and ran errands. The girls tended babies, made fancy work and anything they could get to do, and at each meeting they were delighted to find how the money was growing. Ethel and Susie Winters, had been making taffy and sugar candy and selling, and the twelve dollars they had, represented a good many arm aches and burnt fingers.

"Come, Pussy, don't worry. I will see that you do not have any left on your hands," her brother said, after waiting a few moments for Ethel to tell the cause of her trouble. He liked to tease, but he always helped her all he could, even to taking a lot of the taffy and selling to every one who came into his office.

"We don't have any to sell," Ethel said at last; "Susie and I had the finest taffy that we have ever made, and we had more than we usually do. We wrapped it in tissue paper and set it out on the big stones to get real cold, just as we always do before selling it, and when we went to get it, basket and all was gone. That Jim Fargo and his breaker gang had slipped in and stolen it. It was too late to make more; and we haven't as much money as we had this morning, for we spent for the materials. We wouldn't have had a bit of trouble to have sold every bit of it to-day. We had over two dollars' worth."

"Are you sure that Jim Fargo took it? Might it not have been someone else? I never knew Jim to steal?"

Her brother had a class in the Sunday-school composed of boys who picked slate at the mines, and he had considerable trouble to get Jim Fargo to attend; he was interested in the boy, as he was much brighter than the usual breaker boys, and was the recognized leader among them.

"Oh, he took it! We went down street to see if we could find out anything about it; and there was Jim and several others sitting on the grass outside of old Mr. Gordon's eating it. They denied taking it, even when they had their mouths so full that they could scarcely talk. I wish they had choked so badly that they would never want to steal any more taffy. They said that they thought that taffy must be growing on trees, and that it was time for it to be ripe, as theirs had fallen to them, and a lot more of such nonsense. Then I got cross and told them what I thought of them. Jim Fargo got up, he had his mouth empty by that time, and straightened himself up, and brushed the dust from his old ragged coat sleeve—you know he says he is going to be a lawyer like you, that is his whole aim—well, he straightened himself up and said in what he thought was a very dignified tone:

"I will admit, Miss Cameron, that the evidence against us is rather strong." Ethel's tone was such a good imitation of Jim's, that her brother leaned back and laughed. "But every one is entitled to a doubt, and is not guilty until proven so. We did not steal your taffy; and as it seemed to be growing on the trees and falling to the ground, we saw no harm in eating it, as we do not often get a chance to taste things of this kind. Allow me to congratulate you on your ability to make excellent taffy. And if what we have been receiving is a sample of the sunshine your society scatter around—why—beg pardon, Miss Cameron, I don't think that I would want any of your thunder storms. You may tell your brother that I will not be at Sunday-school to-morrow."

"He tipped his old ragged hat and turned down the street as if he had been president of the United States, instead of ragged Jim Fargo. Then the rest of his gang got up, tipped their hats just like him and followed him down the street, looking the picture of injured innocence. I couldn't help getting cross after the way we had worked and all the money we lost."

Ethel looked in her brother's face. "Oh, Rob, do you really think he will stop Sunday-school? It will just about break up your class, for the others do just as he says. I am so sorry, and you have worked so hard to get those boys," she said anxiously.

"I think that I can get them back. It does look suspicious, but I never caught Jim in an untruth. Don't worry, Pussy, it can't be helped." Ethel knew that he cared more than he wanted her to know.

It was quite late that evening that Ethel was startled by a long ring at the bell, and she heard someone inquiring for Miss Ethel Cameron, and a very large old man came bustling into the room. It was old Mr. Gordon, who lived in a fine old place with his house-keeper, and a very largemonkey, which seemed to be the only thing he cared for, and it was known that he did not like children or young people.

"Miss Ethel Cameron," he said gruffly, stopping in the center of the room, "I want to know what you put into that trash that you made this afternoon. I believe you call it taffy; it ain't fit for anyone to eat, let alone a monkey; but I didn't come to discuss that."

"Your monkey!" Ethel exclaimed, "Did he steal our taffy? Then Jim Fargo didn't take it after all."

"Excuse me, Miss Cameron, my monkey does not steal. I presume that he saw the taffy as he got loose this afternoon, and being of an inquisitive turn of mind, wanted to investigate it; and so took the basket that you had carelessly left out of doors, as I learnt from some boys, as he threw a lot of the taffy to them, and seeing them eating it, got to eating it himself, and now he is very sick, as he ate too much, or there may be something poisonous in it."

"Oh, there is nothing in it to hurt him! It is just sugar, a little vinegar and soda. There was over two dollars worth in the basket, and we thought the boys took it."

"Two dollars! Hump! It would be worth ten dollars to me if he was not sick. Made of sugar,—a little vinegar and soda. I'll tell the doctor; no wonder he is sick after such a mess," and the old man hobbled out of the room, muttering half aloud, "Sugar, a little vinegar and soda. Trash—trash!"

Half an hour afterward Ethel stood in the poorly furnished little house which Jim Fargo called home; for she had declared to her brother that she could not sleep a wink until she had told Jim Fargo that she was mistaken. Jim was surprised when she entered; he listened quietly to her apology, for her angry accusations had hurt him more than she ever dreamed, then he suddenly looked up, the tears were in his eyes, and his voice trembled for a moment, then he was his old self again.

"Of course I do not blame you, Miss Ethel, it is all right now. I know that it did look as if we had taken it, and I should have told you where we had gotten it, but—you must excuse me, but you took it so for granted that we had stolen it, that it made me angry, and I thought it did not matter what you did believe. I am sorry now, and I hope you will forgive me for speaking to you the way I did. It was not a gentlemanly thing to do, and not many would have bothered to come and—and explained it to me as you have. I will never forget it," and he took the hand extended to him in a warm, boyish clasp.

"You will see me to-morrow at Sunday-school, and I will have the other boys there," he said, meeting Rob's eyes with a new expression in his own. "You can depend on me now, Mr. Cameron."—New York Observer.

The Young Teacher.

An inspector visiting a Canadian school was annoyed by the noise of the scholars in the next room. Unable to bear the noise any longer, he opened the door and burst in upon the class.

Seeing one boy rather taller than the others talking a great deal, he caught him by the collar, carried him to his own room, and banged him into a chair, saying:

"Now sit there and be quiet!"

A quarter of an hour later a small head appeared round the door, and a meek little voice said:

"Please, sir, you've got our teacher."

The Legend of the Dipper.

There is a story which tells how the seven stars came to form a dipper.

Once in a country far away, the people were dying of thirst. There had been no rain for months. The rivers and springs and brooks had all dried up. The plants and flowers had withered and died. The birds were so hoarse they could not sing. The whole land was sad and mournful. One night after the stars had come out, a little girl with a dipper in her hand crept quietly out of the house and went into a wood near by. Kneeling down under a tree, she folded her hands and prayed that God would send rain, if it were only enough to fill her little dipper. She prayed so long that at last she fell asleep. When she awoke she was overjoyed to find her dipper full of clear, cool water.

Remembering her dear mother was ill and dying of thirst, she did not even wait to moisten her parched lips, but, taking up her dipper, she hurried home. In her haste she stumbled, and alas! she dropped her precious cup. Just then she felt something move in the grass beside her. It was a dog who, like herself, had almost fainted for want of water. She lifted her dipper, and what was her surprise to find that not a drop had been spilled. Pouring out a few drops in her hand she held it for the dog to lick. He did so, and seemed much revived; but as she poured the water out the tin dipper had changed to one of beautiful silver.

Hurrying to her home as soon as possible, she handed the water to the servant to give it to her mother.

"Oh," said her mother. "I will not take it. I shall not live anyhow. You are younger and stronger than I."

As she gave the servant the dipper, it changed to shining gold. The servant was just about to give each person in the house a spoonful of precious water when she saw a stranger at the door. He looked sad and weary, and she handed him the dipper of water. He took it, saying:

"Blessed is he who gives a cup of cold water in His name."

A radiance shone all about him, and immediately the golden dipper became studded with seven sparkling diamonds. Then it burst forth into a fountain, which supplied a thirsty land with water. The seven diamonds rose higher and higher until they reached the sky, and there changed into bright stars, forming the "Great Dipper."

And so while we recognize that this is only a parable, yet it shall give us a sweet association with that constellation in the sky, and when we look up at the "dipper" as it points us to the north pole, this sweet story will point us to a pole star of usefulness.—Unidentified.

Water.

"I'll organize a trust," he said;
" 'Tis my financial dream,
Of course, some water I must have
To float my little scheme."

"The earth is two-thirds water,
As scientist agree.
What's good enough for this old earth
Is good enough for me.

"Water, water everywhere!"
He murmured, "All is well.
Everybody wants to buy,
And no one wants to sell."

But when the boom had vanished,
He murmured with a sigh,
"Everybody wants to sell,
And no one wants to buy.

"I'm sorry for the people
Who sadly watch and wait.
But that's a way that water has—
It will evaporate."

Contempt of Court.

Perhaps the Irishman in this anecdote was really guilty of contempt of court, but he was certainly very quick-witted, and it is not strange that the onlookers enjoyed the joke on the judge.

An Irish witness was being examined as to his knowledge of a shooting affair.

"Did you see the shot fired?" the magistrate asked.

"No, sorr, I only heard it," was the evasive reply.

"That evidence is not satisfactory," replied the magistrate, sternly. "Stand down!"

The witness proceeded to leave the box, and directly his back was turned he laughed derisively.

The magistrate, indignant at this contempt of court, called him back, and asked him how he dared to laugh in court.

"Did you see me laugh, your honor?" queried the offender.

"No, sir, but I heard you," was the irate reply.

"That evidence is not satisfactory," said Pat, quietly, but with a twinkle in his eye.

And this time everybody laughed except the magistrate.—Selected.

Forgetful of God's Blessings.

Think and thank. And when we stop to think, how much occasion we all have for thanksgiving. We have read of a father who, one winter's night, was walking along, hurrying toward home, with his little daughter at his side. Suddenly she said to him: "Father, I am going to count the stars." "Very well," he said, "go on." By and by he heard her counting—"Two hundred and twenty-three, two hundred and twenty-four, two hundred and twenty-five. O, dear," she said, "I had no idea there were so many!" Just so, fellow Christian, have you never said within your soul: "Now, Master, I am going to count thy benefits," and soon found your heart sighing not with sorrow, but burdened with goodness, and you saying to yourself, "I had no idea there were so many!" We are all too much prone to forget God's benefits. We have excellent memories for all our trials and sorrows and losses, but fail to recall our blessings. It seems that the very abundance of God's favors and their ever unbroken flow tend to make us more forgetful of the giver of them all.—Ex.

He Had not Thought of That.

Our position in life depends upon what we do, not on what we can do. A shabbily dressed young man discovered that when he applied to the manager of a large department store for employment.

"What can you do?" asked the manager abruptly.

"Most anything," answered the applicant.

"Can you dust?"

"Yes indeed."

"Then why not begin on your hat?"

The young man had not thought of that.

"Can you clean leather goods?"

"O, yes."

"Then it's carelessness on your part that your shoes are not clean."

The young man had not thought of that, either.

"Well, can you scrub?"

"Yes, indeed," was the reply.

"Then I can give you something to do. Go out and try your strength on that collar you have on. But don't come back."—Sel.

Promised Never to Pray.

One Sunday morning the Rev. Henry Higginson was passing along a road which was divided from some gardens by a hedge. Being a tall man—six feet four inches—he looked over the hedge and saw a man digging in his garden. Calling to the man, he shouted: "Eh, sirrah, come here!"

The man walked up to the hedge, when Mr. Higginson asked him if he ever prayed. The man after a little consideration, said no, he never did. "Well, then," said Mr. Higginson, "I will give you five shillings if you promise me you never will." The man promised and took the five shillings, and Mr. Higginson went his way.

The contract he had entered into soon began to make the man feel uncomfortable, so much so that he had to leave off digging, and went into the house and sat down. Noticing his gloomy look, his wife asked him what was the matter. He told her what the man had said and done, saying he thought it must be the devil. His wife asked him what kind of a man he was, he described him as a big, tall man all in black.

"Why," she replied, "I have no doubt it will be that Methodist preacher, and he is going to preach at the little chapel down the road. If you like, we will go and see."

So it was agreed, and they went. Being a little late they sat on the benches near the door; but they had not been in the room long when the man nudged his wife, saying: "That's him! that's him!"

They stayed till the close of the meeting, when the man went up to the minister and gave him back his five shillings, saying that he would not have it. "Then you mean to pray?" asked the preacher. The result being that the man became a changed character.

Too Greedy.

Carnegie saw a poor peasant thatching his roof.

"Why do you not put on a slate roof?" he asked,

"I haven't the money," the peasant replied.

"How much will it cost you to put on a slate roof?"

"Forty dollars," said the peasant.

"Here's a check for $40. Now put on a slate roof."

The peasant told his wife of the good news, and the wife replied:

"You should have told him that a slate roof would cost $60. You might just as well have had $60 as $40."

The simple-minded peasant then went back to Carnegie, saying:

"I have discovered that the roof will cost me $60, and not $40, as I first said."

"Let me see the check I gave you," said Carnegie.

The peasant handed Carnegie the check, which the rich man tore up, telling the poor peasant that he would give him nothing. Thus do the greedy oftentimes lose everything.—The Lutheran.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

Simpson Ely, Clearfield, Iowa: We are all delighted with the work of the Advance Society, but the suggestion about supporting an orphan is the best of all. We leave to you who the orphan shall be, and how the matter shall be arranged. A man who can originate the Advance Society and keep it going, has sense enough to manage this orphan business. Lois A. Ely incloses with her second quarterly report, 40 cents. We would be glad to send more, but the calls upon our pocket-book are multitudinous. If you should lack, however, let me know, and I will see what more can be done." (As yet, I cannot tell how the plan will be received by the children. It seems to me when they realize that by their contributions, they are giving a home and happiness to a little orphan, and that in a sense the orphan is theirs, and depends upon them, they will send me their money. If the plan does succeed, how sorry those will be who do not have their names on the list of the founders of the Advance Society Orphan Fund! Now is your chance by paying ever so little, to be one of the organizers. Haven't you a nickel to spare? Have you more for our purpose? I am going to give you a little more time in this matter. At first I thought I would end it at once, but the fate of some homeless child is such a serious consideration, I can't give up our hope of caring for one of such, even if the matter drags somewhat. Anyway, here's forty cents, and kind words from my dear friend, Bro. Ely.)

Clarence Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich.: "Inclosed, find $1.50 from my brother Carl and me, for the Advance Society Orphan Fund. As for me, I prefer paying this amount for such a purpose, to spending it for a pin or badge." (Clarence and Carl, you will remember, were in the Newsboys' picnic, described on this page some time ago.) "I have just been selling the 'Saturday Evening Post' and have sent in my order for 30 papers. I am going to try for 100 customers. I expect to make more money that way than by selling the Evening Press, and possibly will have to give up my route on the Press. I wish you the greatest success in your undertaking." To this letter there is the following postscript from A. Per Lee; "Being an orphan myself, and knowing how to sympathize with other orphans, I will add 50 cents to the amount sent by Carl and Clarence, making it $2." (So here we have $2.40, and as I write this, I haven't heard from the rest of the society. If you will go into the matter like these newsboys, how we should flourish! Can you not do as well as they? Is it as hard for you to get your money? Do you work for it as faithfully and as ceaselessly? Do you not spend more for candy and peanuts or for something else which is just as perishable? But if you will spend some of your change for our orphan, every cent spent will be saved for you, and your happiness will be greater from a consciousness of the good you are doing. What about those peanuts you bought last summer? Doing you mighty little good now, aren't they? Suppose you had used that nickel and other nickels just like it, in preparing a home for an orphan. It is true your money would be gone, but its blessing would be still with you.)

Melvin Ledden, Osprey, Ill.: "I will write about our vacation. In August we had a Chautauqua in a park called Weldon Springs. There are 40 acres in the park with a lake covering 16 acres. There are many springs and forest trees. There were 250 tents. We were among the tenters. It was great fun besides the speeches." (I tented at a Chautauqua three years ago.) "It rained a good deal." (Yes, so it did on me.) "Among the best speakers were Rev. Anna Shaw, Sam P. Jones, John B. Gordon, the confederate general, Madame Tsilka, the Macedonian lady who was taken prisoner with Miss Stone by the Turks, A. W. Hawks, called 'the laughing philosopher,' and Dr. Eaton, the astronomer—I got to look through his telescope. W. J. Bryan came to our county fair in September. His subject was the 'Value of an Ideal.' He said he was tired of making political speeches, and was glad to stand before the people in his true life as a farmer. He said he had always wanted to be a farmer, and by the unanimous consent of the American people, he had been allowed to become one. He spoke an hour and a half. It rained most of the time, but who cared for that?" (As I was not there, I cannot answer this inquiry.) "Since school has begun I do not have much fun except on Saturdays to go nutting. Not long ago mamma invited about a dozen of my cousins to come up and go nutting. We went in two buggies, and had fun picking nuts and fording the creek. Tell Mary Rice I took the Central examinations and passed with an average of 83. I am working hard for the Final, so I can go into high school. If I was Grace Read, I could use the raspberries while I was picking them, but I don't know about the dishes. I am glad old gold and blue won. Did you tie your blue ribbon around Felix? If you have a Felix." (There is something in the skeptical half of that sentence that simply appals me. If I have a Felix! After all I have written about him! If you fed him, you would think you had him!) "I have no pets." (That's no sign I haven't. I have one. His name is Felix.) "I have had many dogs." (I have had three dogs at different times; Shep, Jack and Jim. Each was poisoned by eating meat which he found in somebody's yard. They were strays, and once a stray always a stray; it was their straying that put an end to their lives.)

Maco Chasteen, Pawnee, Okla.: "It has been a good while since I wrote, and I am almost ashamed to, now. I kept the rules about two weeks, then something happened and I forgot them, but I am going to try again. The Pawnees had a big dance not long ago. Now don't you say anything against Oklahoma! Don't you dare! You talk about Missouri girls climbing fences. I don't like that either, as my mother was a Missouri girl, and, I know that she didn't climb so many fences." (It is strange what ideas people have about mammas! Even the mammas get to believing these ideas themselves. Don't you know mammas are nothing but little girls in long dresses? Mammas used to be spanked for making too much noise, and scolded for not getting their lessons, and for playing in the dirt; and they climbed every fence they had a chance to. They needn't look at me, cold and correct, with a grown-up air and a reserved expression of wisdom and experience, as if they would like to be a copybook, with everybody sitting around with pen and ink, copying! Maco inclosed a little present to me; it was a rubber fastened on a wire, and in the rubber was twisted a little square pasteboard, so when you open the package it rattles and jumps and unwinds, and you think it may bite you. I understand it is called "a kissing-bug." Maco wanted to scare me, and did. I do not think it was very good to me to make me jump that way; it was an unkind trick. I have tried it on a lot of people since it came and it is amusing to watch them jump. The mail has just come, bringing more money for our orphan fund, and a letter from a little boy in Japan, and another telling of a little girl we might adopt. I'll explain next week. Do send on your money!)

It is a dynamic and moral rather than a doctrinal faith that Mr. Garrison has in view. Doctrinally holding to conceptions currently styled "liberal orthodox," he lays little emphasis on beliefs or creeds, but much on personal allegiance to Jesus as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." At the same time various points of intellectual difficulty with certain doctrines are incidentally touched in a way to relieve the difficulty. Still more might have been done in this line, and the conception of faith in Christ for salvation from sin needs expansion into the thought of faith as a looking to and following him as our "Captain" in a soldierly service.—The Outlook, Oct. 31, 1903.

The Chinese Story-Teller, or the Changed Story, by Wm. Remfry Hunt (Foreign Christian Missionary Society). Author of "Facts About China," with a foreword by W. P. Bentley, M. A. This is a handsome cloth bound volume with seventeen illustrations, and contains 167 pages. The price is 75 cents.

"This is an interior view of China and of Chinese life. It breathes the spirit of orientalism. It is a thrilling story of a heroic life. Evangelist Shi Kwei Piao, the Chinese story-teller, is a most interesting character, a genius in his way, an orator of native ability, and a shining illustration of the power of the gospel to redeem and purify human life. Mr. Shi was a Chinese story-teller, wandering from village to village, and a victim of the opium habit, who had experienced all the misery and wretchedness of that worst form of slavery. The gospel story touched his heart, aroused his better nature and led to a death-grapple with the opium habit in which, through prayer and struggle and conflict and defeats, he came at last to complete victory and to freedom, and is now a wise, able and consecrated preacher, laboring successfully in connection with our other missionaries in China. His picture, which is the frontispiece of the book, indicates a strong character. Incidental to the story of this remarkable life, there is much of Chinese history, customs and characteristics. The book is illustrated with pen drawings, is handsomely bound in yellow, and is one of the most valuable contributions to our foreign missionary literature. It is the latest book from the press of the Christian Publishing Company, and deserves a wide reading from the brethren in this country who wish to know how their brethren in China live and labor, and what is the outlook for their work. The author dedicates his work to 'Dr. W. T. Moore, M. A., LL. D., from whom I first learned to interpret the story of the Christ.'

THE BETTER GIFTS.

By Thomas Curtis Clark.

I ASK not, Lord, to bring the light
To eyes by darkness sealed;
I ask not power to open ears
And bid them music yield;
I ask Thee but to make me strong
To give the light of love,
To bring to hearts in discord bound
The music from above!

I seek not, Lord, to know the cure
For wasting leper's spot;
I seek not power to raise the dead
In triumph from his cot;
I care for knowledge but to save
The weak from spot of sin;
I ask but power to open hearts
And let thy love-life in!

Nor care I for the gift to speak
In tongues of mystery,
Nor sight to see the future years
Unfold their history;
Give me but strength to speak the word
Of tender sympathy;
Give but the power to see My Lord
Crowned in Eternity!

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

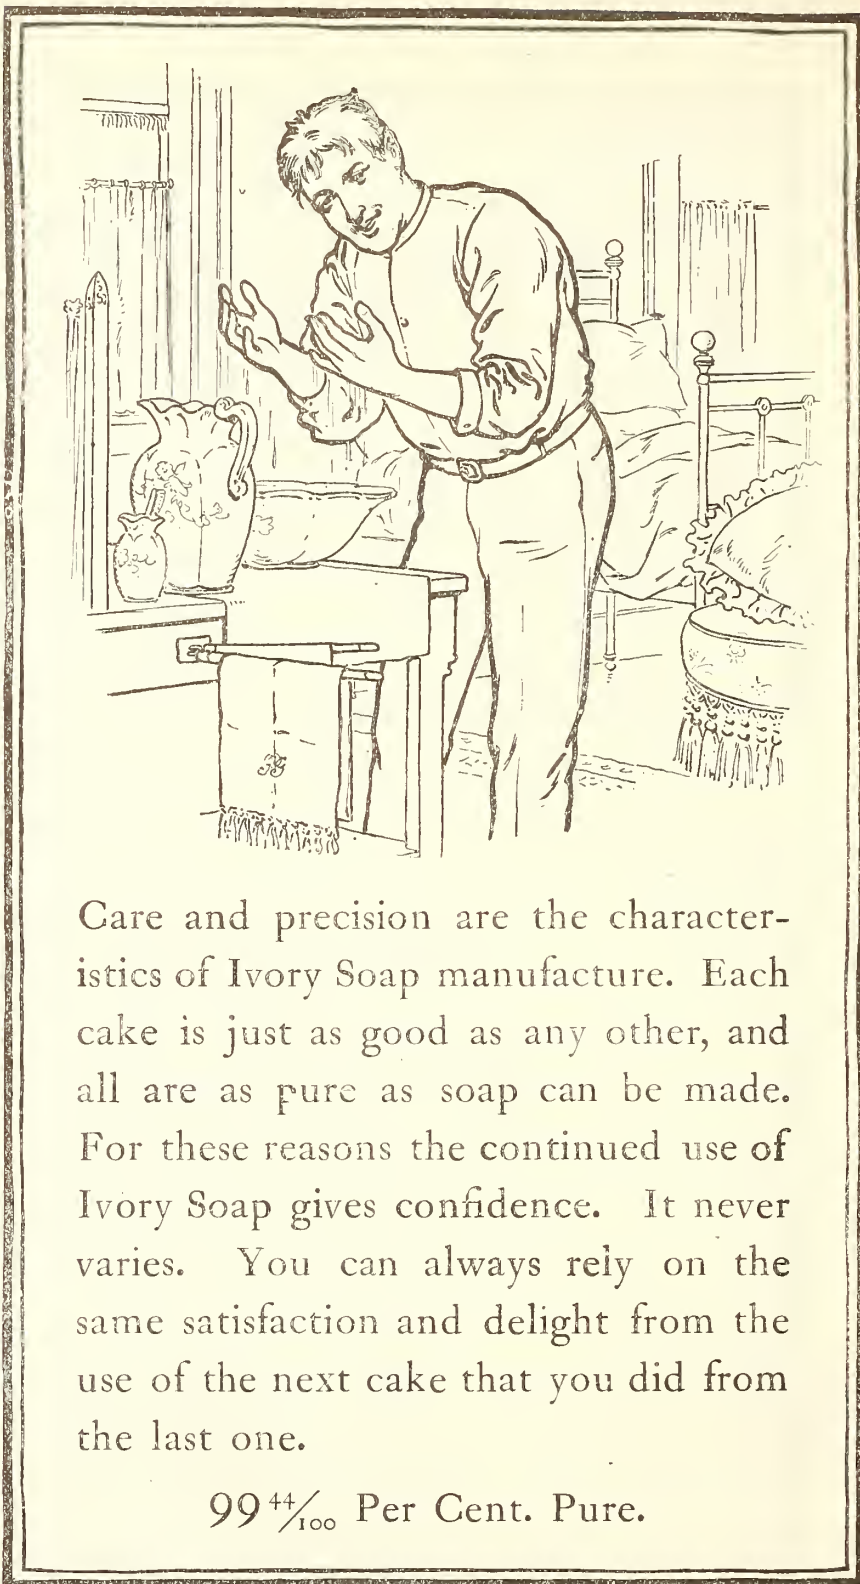

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

Care and precision are the characteristics of Ivory Soap manufacture. Each cake is just as good as any other, and all are as pure as soap can be made. For these reasons the continued use of Ivory Soap gives confidence. It never varies. Why She Left New York.

"I am going to leave New York for good and all, next week," said a well-known woman the other day. "There is no place for me here to live my life. I'm not stout enough to stand against the stampede to the lee side of the deck. If I stay here I shall conform more, and feel that I must have more and more money to spend for new things.

"So I'm going away to some isolated place where I can live with my books, and with my ideas, and with the friendly trees. And I shall bring up my babies with a sense of the resources that may be inside of them. I don't know a young man of thirty who has saved his spring and vivacity. Business and rich men's sports have eaten up his soul. He rushes about in his automobile; he rides his horse; he allots so much time to his yacht; he does his dinners and his dances—but I fail to find the strenuous young business-man who has any real spontaneity. He has already lost something, a kind of glory, an open vision.

He is rich and clever all in one line, but he is awfully incomplete as a man, and I call that poverty. So I'm going."—From "Successful Men Who Are Not Rich" in Everybody's Magazine for November.

About the Bible.

The Bible is a library, and where it enters into the fabric of a man's character it makes him truly cultured.—F. B. Meyer.

Do not put mere snatches of time on the Bible, when your mind is dull, and then ask why it is not interesting. Give it a fair chance with other books; give it even the time you spend on your newspaper and see what it will yield.—Wilbert W. White.

Though assailed by camp, by battery, and by mine, the Holy Scriptures are nevertheless a house built upon a rock, and that rock impregnable; the weapon of offense which shall impair their efficiency for aiding in the redemption of mankind, has not yet been forged.—William E. Gladstone.

Tammany wins again in New York. Two years is apparently longer than the metropolitan mind and conscience can keep its indignation screwed up to the voting point. In 1901, Low defeated Shepard by 30,000. This year McClellan defeated Low by nearly 64,000. The circumstances which we cited last week as lending great uncertainty to the outcome of the election, nearly all proved to be favorable to Tammany. Devery took practically nothing from the Tammany vote. Many Republicans for personal reasons refused to support the Fusion candidate. The falling out of Grout with the Citizens' Union was chiefly injurious to the latter, for Grout was not only elected, but ran well ahead of his colleagues on the Tammany ticket. Thousands of Democrats who supported Low two years ago, lapsed back into the support of the straight party ticket, not because they approved the political morals of Tammany, but because, after shivering for two years in the clear, cold atmosphere of non-partisanship, they longed to warm up again at the party camp-fire. The feeling that a Democratic defeat in New York would drive the last nail in the coffin of Democratic hopes for next year's presidential campaign, won many good Democrats to the support of Tammany's ticket, and the hitherto good record of the Tammany candidate made it easier for good men to support him in spite of his vicious backing. The fight was a great personal victory for Murphy, the leader of Tammany Hall.

The newly elected mayor of New York, George B. McClellan, is the son of the general who bore the same name. He was born in Dresden, Germany, is a graduate of Princeton, has the culture of a cosmopolitan and speaks four languages—besides the political dialect of Tammany. He has been an energetic and hard-working member of Tammany Hall ever since he attained his majority, has held public office continuously for the past thirteen years, during nine of which he has been, as he is now, a member of Congress. Not many men acquire so much political experience before they are thirty-nine. It is to be most fervently hoped that he will develop both the will and the strength to keep his record as clean as it has been in the past. But it is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a candidate elected by Tammany votes to disown the power that made him and act according to his own convictions of right. Van Wyck was mayor of New York, but Croker ruled. Now who is to be really the next mayor of New York—McClellan or Murphy?

One interesting result of the McClellan victory is that it suggests a new and unhackneyed name for a possible Democratic presidential nominee in 1904. Several papers have already hailed this suggestion with glad acclaim. But then, Mr. McClellan had the misfortune to be born in Germany.

Eleven states held elections last Tuesday, some for governors and legislatures, some for minor state officers. In Ohio, Tom L. Johnson's gubernatorial hopes went down before a 125,000 majority for Myron T. Herrick (Rep.), and a legislature was elected so strongly Republican that Mr. Johnson's senatorial expectations are equally frost-bitten. The election of Warfield (Dem.) in Maryland is counted a victory for Senator Gorman, who lead the campaign and made "white supremacy" the prominent issue. Governor Beckham (Dem.) was re-elected in Kentucky by 15,000. Governor Bates (Rep.) of Massachusetts was re-elected, a notable feature of the returns being a falling off of about twenty-five per cent in the Socialist vote, although a very large increase had been expected. Iowa re-elected Governor Cummins (Rep.) by an undiminished majority, showing that the "Iowa tariff idea" has ceased to disturb the harmony of the party in that state. Mississippi went Democratic en masse and re-elected Governor Vardeman. By a narrow margin Governor Garvin (Rep.) of Rhode Island was re-elected. New Jersey elected a Republican legislature. The proposition to widen and deepen the canals of the state so that 1,000-ton barges can traverse them, was submitted to the voters of New York and was approved by a majority of 200,000. The scheme involves an expenditure of over $100,000,000. The Fusionists gained ground in Nebraska, but Barnes (Rep.) was elected Justice of the Supreme Court over Judge Sullivan. Schmitz, the Union Labor mayor of San Francisco, was re-elected. Colorado elected Judge Campbell (Rep.) Justice of the Supreme Court by 7,000 majority on a very light vote. The election in Denver was characterized by frauds even more outrageous than those perpetrated at the charter-amendment election a week earlier. The police force was used as a tool by a corrupt political ring. Ballot-stuffing was practiced wholesale with police protection. A prominent citizen of Denver, a lawyer, who belongs to the political party whose local ring is responsible for these conditions, says: "We seem to have no remedy. The courts turn a deaf ear. Our officials are nearly all active participants in the fraud." As a sample of the methods of conducting an election in Denver, two ministers of the gospel (one of them a grandson of Samuel Rogers of Kentucky) were hustled by roughs and arrested by the police for no other offense than standing across the street from the polling-place in one notoriously crooked precinct and watching.

Mr. Gorman's success in leading the Democratic forces in Maryland through a doubtful campaign to victory on the issue of "white supremacy," entitles him and his chosen issue to increased consideration in national politics. Mr. Gorman is never a negligible factor in any situation in which he pleases to play a part, and in next year's presidential campaign he pleases to play as large a part as possible. He is shrewd to the last degree, bold to the point of rashness, and unembarrassed by any of those encumbering prejudices touching the rightness and wrongness of political conduct, which sometimes hinder good men from the realization of their ambitions. But we are inclined to think that, with all his shrewdness, Mr. Gorman overestimates the availability and desirability of the race issue as a paramount issue for a national campaign. We will concede everything he says about the necessity of maintaining "white supremacy." But that problem is too grave and difficult to be settled in the heated atmosphere of a political campaign. A solid South might be rallied about that issue, but a solid South, solidified on a question which is predominately sectional, means also a solid North; and on such a division the North wins by sheer weight of population and electoral votes. Moreover, we doubt whether either party alone has wisdom enough to handle this question alone. The Republican party tried it after the war and made anything but a success of it. In the improbable event of a Democratic victory on the race issue, that party would be in little better condition to handle the problem adequately than the Republican party was in early reconstruction days. The more persistently the negro question is kept out of politics, the more surely will the negro himself drop out of politics in so far as he is a menace to white supremacy.

The provinces of Panama and Chauca have, by a bloodless revolution, severed their relation with Colombia and declared their independence. The movement differed from most South American revolutions in being swift, successful and without violence. The coup d'état had been carefully organized. The plans were kept secret until the movement assumed such proportions that secrecy was no longer possible. The arrival of a few hundred Colombian troops at Colon precipitated the revolution, which would otherwise have been delayed a few days longer. Three thousand armed revolutionists took peaceful possession of Colon. The troops offered no resistance but seemed to be rather sympathetic toward the movement. The Colombian gunboat "Bogota," bombarded Panama without serious results. The U. S. gunboat "Nashville," landed marines at Colon and three ships of the Pacific Squadron were ordered at once to Panama. The immediate and ostensible object of any action taken by our government will be the preservation of peace on the isthmus so that traffic between the oceans may not be interfered with. To this end the transportation of troops on the isthmian railway has been prohibited and the "Bogota" has been warned to suspend its futile but annoying bombardment. But inasmuch as the revolutionists are now actually in possession, the strict preservation of order will be equivalent to protecting them against any efforts which the Colombian government may hereafter make toward putting down the rebellion. The Colombian officials have all left the isthmus, and the only existing government there is the provisional government which the revolutionists have organized. The United States and Italy have recognized the de facto government, and it is believed that all the leading European powers will soon do likewise.

Has our government acted correctly and honorably toward Colombia in this matter? That is a question which cannot yet be confidently answered except by those who are willing to answer before the data are all in. How much our government may have had to do with this revolution is not yet known. As we have said before, it would certainly be an act of bad faith and a most censurable procedure for our government to foster and encourage a revolution with the intention of getting from the new government a canal concession which it could not get from the old. On the other hand it is not clear that we are obliged to go out of our way to help Colombia to put down a rebellion, the success of which would doubtless be a real advantage to the world by making possible the construction of an isthmian canal. The New York Times says we have reached "the point where we must either withdraw at once from the miserable business, or, shutting our ears to the voice of conscience and to the reproaches of civilized mankind, plunge on in the path of scandal, disgrace and dishonor." But this is only the prelude to an argument for dropping the Panama route and taking up Nicaragua again. The people who favor the Nicaragua route are certain to consider the government's attitude in this matter very objectionable. The London Times says that the course of the United States government has been "studiously correct" and that Colombia has been guilty of "wanton procrastination" quite sufficient to justify Panama in seceding so that it may take the canal business into its own hands. If the revolution results in the permanent establishment of an independent Republic of Panama, it will probably be easy to negotiate a treaty with the new government for the people of Panama are eager to have the canal built. It is possible, however that further legislation by our Congress may be necessary to empower the President to treat with this new republic. The bill passed by the last Congress authorizes him only "to acquire from the Republic of Colombia" the necessary canal rights, or if that were impossible to take the Nicaragua route.

The Fifty-Eighth Congress met on Monday, Nov. 9, for its opening session, in accordance with the President's call. Joseph G. Cannon, of Illinois, was elected speaker of the House, as already decided months ago by the Republican caucus. The special session was called to consider the Cuban reciprocity treaty, but many other important topics will claim attention. A resolution has already been introduced calling on the President for full information as to the relation of our government to the Panama revolution. The first bill introduced in the House was a statehood bill for New Mexico. The second was a bill for the restoration of the army canteen, introduced by Mr. Bartholdt, of Missouri, who, backed by the brewers and distillers and other like-minded exponents of temperance, and opposed by such hardened enemies of righteousness as the W. C. T. U., the International Reform Bureau and the Christian people of the country generally, wants to elevate the morals of the soldiers by making it easy for them to get liquor. The new committees in the Senate and House have not yet been announced, but it is said that Senator Morgan is to be succeeded by Senator Hanna as chairman of the committee on isthmian canal. If we are going on with the Panama project, it will be just as well not to have the Senate committee headed by a man who is thoroughly and unalterably committed to the Nicaragua route, as the Senator from Alabama is. The President's message is to be presented to Congress on Tuesday.

The American Anti-Saloon League is bringing pressure to bear to secure the passage of the Hepburn bill at the present session of Congress. This bill, which was before the last Congress but failed to pass on account of the filibustering at the close of the session, is designed to make prohibition effective in those states which have adopted it. To this end it gives the state law full jurisdiction over all liquors shipped into the state both before and after its delivery to the consignee. Hitherto the law has been evaded in many cases by a transparent device which gives to what is practically retail liquor trade a semblance of interstate commerce, and thus demands for it the protection of the federal laws. The bill should pass both the Senate and the House at this session.

Brevities.

The Czar of Russia visited the Kaiser at Wiesbaden last week.

A fire in the Vatican last week threatened to consume a great quantity of the accumulated treasures of the popes.

The Indiana Manufacturers' Association has decided to make contracts directly with the employees hereafter, and not with the unions. No discrimination is to be practiced against members of unions.

Commenting on the stirring words of the President's Thanksgiving proclamation, the Congregationalist says that, while Emperor William is sometimes called a minor poet, President Roosevelt is a major prophet.

The court has decided, in the Bryan-Bennett will case, that the charge of undue influence is not proved. It is also held that the "sealed letter," containing the provision for giving $50,000 to Mr. Bryan and his family, cannot be admitted to probate as a part of the will.

The trial of State Senator Farris, of Missouri, charged with accepting a bribe in the interest of baking powder legislation, resulted in a hung jury. The prosecution depended chiefly on the testimony of former Lieut.-Gov. Lee, and the defense put forth its strongest efforts to impeach his testimony.

Zeal According to Knowledge.

Paul bore witness that his Jewish brethren had "a zeal for God," but its serious and fatal defect was that it was "not according to knowledge." Zeal and knowledge are both excellent qualities, but they need to be conjoined in order to be profitable. Many a good cause has failed for the lack of the union of these two essential qualities in its advocates. It does not suffice for some to have zeal without knowledge, and others to have knowledge without zeal, for these two classes do not readily coalesce, but tend toward division rather than to unity.

As we try to look into the future of our own religious movement and calculate its chances for accomplishing successfully its mission, two conditions seem to us to stand out prominently as essential to the highest success of the work which we feel that God has committed to our hands. One of these conditions is that we shall have a true and worthy conception of the nature and purpose, the principles and aims, of the movement inaugurated by our fathers and committed to our hands. The other is that we shall appreciate, at their true value, these principles and purposes, so as to give ourselves with undying devotion and unflagging energy to their promulgation. Or, uniting these two conditions into one, we may put in it Paul's phrase and say, the essential thing is zeal according to knowledge. For the purpose, however, of a clear understanding of what the phrase imports, we may consider the two elements separately.

First in order, it seems to us, is knowledge, a right understanding of the spirit, principles and objects of our religious movement. It is only as we have a correct knowledge of these principles that we can have an intelligent zeal for their propagation. Ours is a religious movement conceived in the broadest and most catholic spirit, as any movement must be that looks to the unification of Christendom. It must be as broad and irenic in its temper and teaching as the New Testament itself, if it is to prove a useful factor in promoting the unity of a divided church. It was in such an atmosphere and in such a spirit that the current reformation was conceived and born. He who thinks worthily and truly concerning it, therefore, must conceive of it as a unifying and not as a divisive force in the religious world. Its exaltation of Christ to the supreme place of authority in the church and in religion; its central and unifying creed affirming his Messiahship and divinity; its repudiation of the binding authority of all human creeds and confessions of faith, and its affirmation of the right of each individual, who is in Christ by virtue of his faith in and obedience to Him, to accept or reject any doctrinal opinion or dogma, so long as he maintains a Christian character; its emphasis of the evils of divisions among Christians and the need of unity; its reproclamation of the conditions of salvation as taught in the New Testament and illustrated in the Acts of the Apostles; the equality of all believers in Christ, and the manifestation of the life of Christ in purity of conduct, nobility of character and unselfish service to our fellow-men in all the relationships of life,—these are truths for this age and for every age until Christ's prayer for the unity of his followers has been realized. No one can thoughtfully consider the features enumerated above without feeling their importance and seeing their adaptation to the needs of our times.

But it is not enough to see clearly, and be able to state convincingly, the great cardinal features of our religious movement. If this vision of the fair outlines of a great religious commission which has been given to us, does not beget an earnest zeal for the defense and propagation of these principles, we shall not be obedient to the heavenly vision. In other words we will not, without such zeal, make the necessary sacrifices for carrying forward this restoration movement to ultimate success. This is what we mean by the necessity of knowledge and zeal—a clear conception of the principles and objects of our movement, and a corresponding zeal for their promulgation and their ultimate triumph in the religious world.

This zeal according to knowledge, applies to the methods of our propaganda as well as to the matter. A zeal untempered by knowledge often resorts to methods that are injurious, and that stop the ears of the people and prevent the acceptance of the truth which is sought to be conveyed. It often follows the line of greatest resistance, instead of least resistance, thereby making needless enemies for the truth. A knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus, a knowledge of human nature and of the motives which influence men, will not only prevent the use of false and injurious methods of promoting a good cause, but will assuredly lead to the adoption of methods commensurate in character and magnitude with the cause which they are designed to advance. The truth will never gain the triumphs that it ought to gain until we can bring the same liberality, daring enterprise, business sagacity and largeness of plan to its propagation, that we see in the commercial world.

Given this true and worthy conception of the spirit and principles of our religious movement and of the proper methods for propagating them, and a corresponding zeal or devotion to these principles, and the future of our religious movement will be one of increasing triumph and blessing to the world.

There is need that the younger generation of our members be thoroughly instructed in the things for which we stand, that their zeal for this cause may be equal to the demands that will be made upon them.

Our Next Educational Tasks in Missouri.

There are two things which stand out clearly and distinctly in the line of our duty to Christian education in Missouri, and they are both pressing and urgent obligations on the Missouri brotherhood. We should help Christian University, at Canton, to pay for its new building, replacing the old one which was burned, and then give it sufficient additional endowment to insure an income that will meet the pay roll of its teachers. We should also erect a suitable building for the Missouri Bible College at Columbia, which is already partially provided for, and increase its endowment to $100,000.

We do not say there are not other educational needs in the state, for there are, but those mentioned are the most pressing because they have been most neglected, and we must look to them to supply our educated ministers in this state. No one acquainted with our cause in the state needs to be told that more than anything else our churches need a larger supply of educated and consecrated men who have been specially trained for the work of the ministry and set apart to it. The Missouri brotherhood is too large, numerically and in its financial resources and, we trust, in public spirit, to be dependent upon other states to educate and train ministers for her pulpits. We are able to help ourselves. We have men at Canton and Columbia who, by age, experience, ability and education, are well fitted to train young men for the ministry. What they need and what they must have, if we are longer to hold up our heads with other states, is a sufficient endowment and adequate equipment in the way of buildings, libraries, etc., to enable them to do their work successfully.

There is no division of sentiment, so far as we know, worth mentioning, as to our educational interests in Missouri. When the building of Christian University burned down, it was our opinion, as stated at the time, that it would have been wiser to have removed the school to a more central place in the state, where it would receive a larger patronage, or perhaps to unite with the Bible College at Columbia. But for what seemed good and sufficient reasons, it was decided to rebuild at Canton. From the date of that decision we have had only words of encouragement for the enterprise and best wishes for its success. We do not know of a friend of the Bible College at Columbia who does not wish success to Christian University and to the able and self-sacrificing men who constitute its faculty. On the other hand, we do not believe there are any true friends of Christian University who cherish any feeling of opposition to the Bible College at Columbia. There is plenty of work for these two institutions to do, and there is no occasion for any rivalry or any friction between them or their friends. They are both engaged in doing the very work which needs to be done in the state of Missouri. For ourselves, we shall rejoice in every success attained by either of these institutions, and our columns are at the service of both of them alike, as well as to every worthy institution among us.

We have before us then, in Missouri, a simple educational duty—to help put these two institutions on a solid basis and equip them for doing a noble work. We are united, we believe, as never before, on that program. Let us then proceed to do something worthy of the Missouri brotherhood in behalf of Christian education.

We need not say that we are deeply interested in, and proud of, the success of our noble female institutions such as Christian College at Columbia, William Woods College at Fulton, and the Female Orphan School at Camden Point. These are doing well, and they have additional claims on the brotherhood which we have no doubt will be duly recognized. We have simply aimed to present our most pressing educational needs in the state.

Downfall of Public Men.

Whatever skepticism people may have about the fall of Adam and Eve, no one questions the awful reality of the fall of public men in our own time. We have had some notable examples in our own state and city, of late, which may well cause sober-minded people to pause and ponder the meaning of such events. A man standing high in political and social position and respected and honored as a citizen, or as a public official of probity and uprightness of character, suddenly falls from his high pedestal, until there is none so poor as to do him reverence. What is the meaning of such a phenomenon?

We have spoken of these downfalls as sudden and appalling to the public mind; so they are in appearance and to public knowledge. But as a matter of fact it transpires in every such case that there has been a secret undermining of the foundations of character, going on, in some cases, many years. No man plunges suddenly from a position of honor and responsibility into dishonor and shame. The transition has been gradual within himself, however it may appear to the public. He has tampered with his conscience; he has stultified his moral sense, little by little; he has been untrue to the light which he possessed; he has stifled the protests of conscience by his greed for gain and position; he has sinned against his moral judgment within the forms of law, until at last he becomes so morally hardened that he dares to violate the law, in the hope that it may not be found out. When it does come to light then the public is astonished, and looks upon it as a sudden collapse, whereas the man has only reached the culmination of wickedness which has been going on for years.

Of course the lesson from all this is that every man, and especially those in places of public trust and responsibility, should watch closely the motives which influence their action, and be on their guard against any tendencies to moral laxity. The man who fails to bring, not only his outward acts, but his inward motives, to the bar of his own conscience for scrutiny, is already on the down grade and is in danger of moral shipwreck. These startling disclosures of corruption and dishonesty in public men, who have been honored and trusted, ought to serve to quicken the public conscience, and to stir up every man to look more carefully into the moral character of his own acts, and of his private and public life. It should also stir up the press, the pulpit and the teachers of religion and morals, to probe the conscience, and to emphasize the necessity of purity of heart and loyalty to one's convictions of duty in order to safeguard character against the stealthy encroachments of sin. At the bottom of all these defalcations, embezzlements, forgeries and bribes, there is a false estimate of the things which make up human life and character. Positions of profit and responsibility, wealth and the luxuries it secures, are vastly over-estimated, while a good conscience, peace of mind, self-respect, truth and righteousness, are greatly under-estimated. By all the agencies possible, and especially from the press and pulpit, must we accentuate spiritual values, until we make men understand that a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth, nor in a vain show or display, but in a character conformed to the highest ideal.

"Baptismophobia."

Under the above title Rev. W. H. Berry contributes an article to the Cumberland Presbyterian, in which he says that the above manufactured word "indicates that strong dislike that many Presbyterian preachers have to the subject of baptism." The writer goes on to say that "many of our people and some of our preachers are shamefully ignorant of Bible teaching concerning this ordinance. The commission under which these preachers profess to preach, not only requires baptism, but also enjoins 'teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you,' and yet from year to year these preachers do not open their mouths relative to this command of Christ."

That is a rather strange fact, if it be a fact, among a religious people so evangelical in their faith as our Cumberland Presbyterian brethren. Experience has taught us, however, that people who are very intelligent concerning the Bible teaching on many subjects, know very little about its teaching on some other subjects. The matter of baptism is one of the things about which a great many people are ignorant, because they think it too unimportant to be worthy of any careful study. That the correspondent from which we have quoted above, has himself studied the subject of baptism to but little purpose, is evidenced by his reference to "the superstitious, man-made practice of immersion," which he declares "is a practice proclaimed in every community as a truth of God, and the minds of our people are unsettled."

How would it do for our esteemed contemporary, the Cumberland Presbyterian, to print in its columns all the New Testament passages bearing on this subject, and leave its readers to draw their own inferences as to the meaning of these passages? This question will never be settled until it is settled in a way that harmonizes with the simple teaching of the New Testament. To charge baptism with being too unimportant to be seriously and conscientiously investigated, is to charge Jesus with commanding and his apostles and other New Testament writers with the folly of giving large space to a matter of no importance. We hope Brother Berry will succeed in stirring up his brethren to study this subject in the light of New Testament teaching.

Questions and Answers.

MARGARET R. MOFFETT.

Kansas City, Mo.

Referred to our readers for answer.

I have an anti-brother in the church for which I preach. He is a good man in most respects, but is dead set against missionary societies, Christian Endeavor, etc., believing them to be sinful innovations. What can I do with him? E.

Be patient with him. Give him good things to read—things that will cultivate breadth of vision and spiritual life. Men are seldom argued out of such moods; they must grow out of them. Here is a letter just at hand from a brother who writes: "I started in the work a confirmed anti and the process of my emancipation has been slow and painful, and but for the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST I suppose I never would have learned the way more perfectly." But he probably would have learned it from some other source if he had not had access to the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, though the paper has no doubt helped him. A good man is apt to outgrow false and narrow views. Kindness is better than logic with such men.

Will you allow a preacher's wife to ask if it would not be better for the churches, the preachers, and those outside the church, if preachers were permitted to remain longer in one place. To me it seems a sinful waste of time, energy, money and influence, for a preacher to spend so much of his time looking for a new location, and the church for a new preacher. How does it seem to the editor?

(MRS.) LULU BURNER.

Just as it seems to you, sister. If the Lord is going to hold us responsible for the wisest use of our time, means and energies, we do not know how churches and preachers will vindicate their course, who are responsible for these frequent changes of pastors. We are glad to say the tendency is toward longer pastorates, but there is much to be desired yet in this direction. Fidelity and adaptation to the field on the part of the preacher, and patience, piety and more practical wisdom on the part of the churches, will do much to remedy the evil. Meanwhile preachers' wives have our sympathy.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST—Sixty years ago all the sermons I heard were full of allusions to everlasting and eternal punishment of the wicked. Texts were taken and arguments made to justify eternal punishment. Sermons always closed with pictures vivid with the horrors of hell. Now no allusion is made to it, either in religious journals, or the sermons of any Protestant denominations. Is this because your and other denominations have changed your belief? If you yet believe in it why not say so—and quote the passages of Scripture to justify it, and, if on the other hand, your views have undergone a change why not so state; a full and complete reply would gratify an old OUTSIDER.

No doubt there has been a change in the degree of emphasis placed upon the subject of future punishment within the time mentioned by our querist. This is the result, however, of that general change in point of view which has come over most of the religious world. It is only one of many changes which have occurred in the matter of emphasis. When God's sovereignty and kingship were the chief attributes emphasized, it was natural that punishment for disobedience would be relatively prominent. The fatherhood of God, while it has by no means abolished the essential relation that exists between sin and punishment, has changed the aspect of the whole question. Future punishment is now regarded more in the light of a result—an inevitable result—of sin, and not as a penalty arbitrarily inflicted by the offended deity. God's chief characteristic to-day is love, but love does not abrogate justice, but justice is now seen to be only an aspect of love. It is better for the whole universe that sin should be followed by disastrous consequences. It is a part of the gospel message to point out what these consequences are, and to show that in the nature of things they must be as lasting as the cause which produces them. We cannot get away from the idea of retribution for sin as long as we accept Christ and the New Testament, or even the facts of our own experience and observation. The truth of this proposition is too apparent, we should think, to justify any one in continuing, even in old age, to be an "outsider."

Editor's Easy Chair.

There is only one thing better than a day in the woods during such glorious autumn weather as we have had of late, and that is two days in the woods. That is what the Easy Chair enjoyed last week. It is like leaping from slavery to freedom to throw off the editorial harness and hie away to the land of the Ozarks, to climb its hills, breathe its intoxicating atmosphere, drink of its crystal springs and float down one of its winding waterways. A clear, bright day, save as the sun's beams are softened by the haze of Indian summer; the breeze which is blowing out of the west is almost balmy, but there is a touch of the autumn in it; a flat bottom boat, not easily turned over, and two stout oars; a fishing-rod and a shot-gun within easy reach, and we float lazily, leisurely, down the blue, winding Meramec. Majestic bluffs rise, now on this side, now on that, and on the hills and along the shores, the brown leaves are falling, loosened by last night's frost. They float down through the air, some of them lighting upon the stream to be borne far from the place of their birth. The red-bird in the thicket along the banks, sings the same sweet song it sang in the spring-time, and far over head the crow wings his leisurely flight through the air, uttering his solitary, unmusical note, Caw! Caw! as he goes to join his fellows in some pow-wow, perhaps, relating to the oncoming winter.

Alone, amid such scenes and under such circumstances, one feels the very presence of the invisible Spirit, and instinctively lifts up his soul in adoring homage. As he gazes meditatively into the depths of the azure, as the sky is outlined above the distant hills, he feels that he is in the temple of the Infinite, and that just beyond the limits of the human vision there lie the plains of peace, where are encamped the invisible hosts of God. The oars lie idle for the most part, save as one is used ever and anon to guide the boat, the matter of speed being left to the current to determine. From time immemorial, poets and moralists have likened human life to a stream down which we mortals are floating to the sea of eternity. And surely there is much to suggest the simile. All rivers run into the sea; all human life runs its measured course and passes on into that immeasurable duration which we call eternity. There is change of scenery, and in the current and depth of the stream; but if we float upon it, we must take these as they come. Life has its deeps and its shallows, its rapids and its whirlpools. Some days the stream of life leads through majestic scenery, with bending trees and singing birds. On other days it winds through dismal lowlands or monotonous deserts. But the main thing is not what scenery skirts the stream which bears us on its bosom, but whither does it bear us? What of the destination?

The other day was spent on the hills and in the hollows with gun and dogs. These make a good accompaniment for a long stroll through the wild and rugged woodlands, whether one bags any game or not. They help to furnish motive for the tramp. One does not enjoy nature less because he has an eye open for the squirrel, the rabbit, the wild turkey or the covey of quails. A dog never appears to so much advantage or so essential to man as on a hunt. A trained dog is a marvel of intelligence, skill, industry and fidelity. He has as keen a scent for game as certain scribes have for heresy, howbeit, like his prototype he sometimes makes more noise than the size of the game, or the probability of bagging it, would seem to justify. But, as a rule, he is a faithful guide and his bark means business. When "Zip" said, in his canine language, that he had a squirrel up a tree for us, we learned to rely on his word. "Tim," who is "Zip's" master, would as soon think of doubting the word of his wife, if he had one, as to doubt Zip's report of what he had found. But the game was incidental. How glorious are these forests! How majestic these everlasting hills of the Ozarks! From some of the highest of them we had commanding views of wide-stretching landscapes, including the green wheat-fields in the valleys, the graceful curves of the Meramec, whose serpentine course is marked by the white-armed sycamore, and far-away ranges of hills that rim the distant horizon.

Few of the poets have succeeded so well in catching the spirit of autumn as James Whitcomb Riley, the Hoosier poet, in his "A Dream of Autumn:"

"Mellow hazes, lowly trailing
Over wood and meadow, veiling
Somber skies, with wild fowl sailing
Sailor-like to foreign lands;
And the north wind over-leaping
Summer's brink, and flood-like sweeping
Wrecks of roses where the weeping
Willows wring their helpless hands.

Flared like Titan torches flinging
Flakes of flame and embers, springing
From the vale the trees stand swinging
In the moaning atmosphere;
While in dead'ning lands the lowing
Of the cattle, sadder growing,
Fills the sense to overflowing
With the sorrow of the year."

And yet it is a sweet "sorrow," half peace, that steals upon our senses with healing power, reconciling us to a world of change and decay, as a prelude to that fairer realm where flowers do not fade, and where there are joys forevermore. Therefore the poets will poetize, the moralists will moralize, and the musers will muse, on Autumn, as long as the seasons roll and as often as leaves fade and fall, and Nature heaves her melancholy sighs.

Spiritual Invention

By N. J. Aylsworth

In a recent editorial, the New York Independent argues for a cultivation of the inventive spirit in the church of to-day. "One of the functions of the church," it says, "is to discover new duties, to develop new and startling extensions of old ethical principles, to apply them and to teach them to the world as a whole. In business circles the man who fills this office is called the promoter. What the promoter is to the business world the church is to the ethical world." Of work of this kind which the church has done it instances: the inauguration of the many humane and charitable reforms, such as the care of the sick and permanently disabled; buildings for the blind and deaf, and asylums for the insane; hospitals, reformatories and humane prisons; numerous fraternal and benevolent societies, whose idea and inspiration were first derived from the church; also, the work of the church in preserving the old literatures through the dark ages, and the fostering of learning.

All this is true and suggestive, but it fails to notice the large opportunity and need for invention in the direct line of the church's work. The church has two great objects—the conversion of the world, and the spiritual education of its membership. In both these there is ample opportunity for spiritual invention.

John Wesley was a preacher of much power, but far more than this, he possessed spiritual genius of a high order, and what he left to the world was worth much more than what he did during his life. He inaugurated a great pietistic movement, and, whatever may be thought of the circuit system, there can be no doubt of its effectiveness for the time, and long after. The Methodist "class" was a skillfully designed piece of spiritual invention, adapted to the age and time, to develop and keep alive spirituality in its membership, and has probably been the forerunner of the modern social meeting. John Wesley's greatest work was devising and leaving in the world methods adapted to the age, for evoking and sustaining spiritual life.

The Sunday-school, although so simple a supply of a manifest need as to lay no great tax on inventive genius, nevertheless stands forth as an individuality—a spiritual contrivance for reaching and schooling the young in religious truth.

Beyond his faith and great earnestness, Mr. Moody possessed enough of spiritual genius to give us a new method of evangelism, which during the last generation was attended with remarkable success; and, although evangelistic work is now generally much less prosperous than it was then, the decline is due to quite other causes and the gospel singer is still in demand as one of the most effective forces in revival work. This method has been worth much more to the church than all Mr. Moody did individually.

One of the most notable examples of spiritual invention in modern times is that which originated the Christian Endeavor movement. Mr. Clark saw clearly the situation—the vast resources of spirituality latent in the young people of the church, which were not being adequately reached and developed by any method yet discovered, and he addressed himself to the solution of the difficult problem. What he brought forth was a spiritual contrivance no less happy in its kind than such inventions as the steam engine and electric telegraph. It was a triumph of spiritual genius, and its workings have been almost magical. It looks like a very simple thing, but not more so than printing, one of the greatest inventions of all time. The movement is a young giant of tremendous uplift, and is the most powerful ally of Christian union.

To ask what the church would do without the Sunday-school and Christian Endeavor, is to ask what she would do without spiritual inventors.

The inventions that have so wonderfully augmented the power of the church, are not all of the distant past. Christian Endeavor is younger than the electric light and the telephone, and there is every reason to believe that other spiritual inventions are to follow. These are pressing questions that have not yet been solved. The evangelization of the cities is a problem that has already called forth the institutional church and the social settlement,—both valuable inventions—but the master stroke of spiritual genius is yet to come, which shall take this mountain of difficulty and cast it into the sea. There is no more reason to believe that there will be triumphs of physical invention in the future than that there will be similar triumphs of inventive genius in the spiritual realm. An invention is a wonderful thing, second only to the miracle in its wonder-working; and if we keep our faith and earnestness, we have a right to put this in our future. But we must remember that there can be no spiritual genius when there is no spiritual life.

We have thus far spoken of those distinct inventions that have added to the power and effectiveness of the whole church, but there is also large room for inventiveness in the conduct of local church work. There are conditions in the individual congregation and community that are peculiar, and the preacher who only does what it is usual to do, will fail to reach these peculiar conditions. The routine man cannot be an efficient man. An important difference between the master workman and the journeyman tradesman, is that the former is resourceful (inventive), while the other does what he has been taught. Moreover, each preacher brings to his work a particular kind and degree of ability, and with this he must do what is to be done. Both the work and the working force thus conspire to make the problem a new one, not to be solved satisfactorily by routine methods. The question becomes, What can I do with this situation? And the appeal is to inventiveness. A young minister found that he could not have good prayer-meetings. He learned all he could from others, but, as David could not wear Saul's armor, he could not use their methods with success. He finally grappled with the question independently, making experiments and studying conditions carefully, with the result that the prayer-meeting eventually became one of his most satisfactory services. In another case a minister who had been happily successful in one place, moved to another, where his formerly successful methods flatly failed. The field was confessedly a hard one, and his friends shook their heads. He studied and experimented for a whole year, and then devised his plan of work, which proved entirely successful. Strange to say, this plan proved inapplicable to any subsequent field of work. His success in this difficult field was due to inventiveness.

There is no quality in the minister's equipment of more value than inventiveness. The great preachers of the world have been inventive (resourceful) men. There is no more reason why we should continue to plod in the old ways, feeling ourselves helpless to do anything out of the beaten track, than why our fathers should have continued to cart their grain to market with oxen. This paralyzing conservatism is withholding us from many successes. We need a new daring of faith that shall believe in great possibilities and drive toward them with the freshness of originality. That wicked man who has long resisted the gospel, can be converted. Do it. That poor prayer-meeting can be rejuvenated. Undertake it. Necessity is the mother of invention. Make these things necessities, and you will find a way to do them. Dare to undertake great things and they will come to pass, for invention is twin-brother to miracle.

Look Beyond.

Is the sky before you threat'ning?

Then look beyond.

Back of those fearful clouds gath'ring,

Doth shine the sun.

Those clouds which look so dark and gray,

Will gather soon and roll away,

Then a bright and glorious day,

A Call to a Deeper Spiritual Life

By W. C. Bower

The call to a deeper spiritual life is as old as the messages of the prophets of Israel.

Though calculated to beget and foster the highest spiritual ideas, the worship under the Jewish order of necessity devoted much attention to the forms in which it was embodied. On this account there was early manifested a tendency to exalt the outward form, which soon reduced the elaborate worship to mere formalism. It was only by the most strenuous efforts on the part of the prophets that the spirituality of the worship was preserved among the nobler spirits in Israel. Some of their most trenchant passages deal with the formalism of their times. In turn Amos, Isaiah and Malachi seek with words of burning eloquence to restore the spiritual element of their religion, without which no worship can be acceptable to God.

The last utterance of prophecy was a call to deeper spiritual life, in the burning message of John the Baptizer, who proclaimed in the spirit and power of Israel's first great Reformer that a renewed spiritual life was the absolute condition of fellowship with God, and an adequate preparation for the reception of the coming King. He laid the axe at the root of national hypocrisy, and proclaimed the advent of a new kingdom, which should stand in spiritual power.

The call to a deeper spiritual life was next heard from the lips of our Lord. He found the leaders of the nation confirmed in their heartless formalism, having superadded to the Mosaic law the traditions of the Rabbinic schools. As to the externals of religion, they were like to beautiful whited sepulchers, but within they were full of the decaying bones of loathsome spiritual death. Against the spiritual declension of his times Jesus hurled the most scathing philippics that ever fell from the lips of man. In those incisive rebukes of the Sermon on the Mount and the 23rd of Matthew, Jesus not only rebuked the lack of spirituality of his day, but set up the standard for his church for all time to come.

Ever since the days of our Lord, that call has been needed, and at intervals in the history of the church has been heard with prophetic clearness. The kingdom has always suffered at the hands of those who either failed to apprehend its spiritual nature or to maintain its purity. A multitude have followed him for the loaves and fishes. Many since Simon Magnus have sought to traffic with its benefits. In the first century Paul had to stoutly contend with those who would bring it under the fleshly ordinances of the Jewish covenant. It was the mistake of Constantine, when he unsheathed his sword and sought thus to bring the kingdom of God in the hearts of men.

The failure to rightly apprehend and maintain its spiritual character was the error of Romanism. Gradually the body of the church lapsed into the fatal error of the leaders in Christ's time. More and more of importance began to be attached to the external forms of worship. The spirit of true religion had all but failed. In those dark days, when the light of the Renaissance was dawning upon the world, that prophetic voice awoke all Europe from its sleep of spiritual death. Again the axe was laid at the root of a lifeless, external religion, and salvation through a living, spiritual gospel proclaimed. The essence of the Lutheran Reformation was the restoration of the spiritual element to a decadent Christianity.

That voice was heard a second time in Europe when the church was lapsing from its spiritual power, and John Wesley called it to a renewal of its spiritual life.

Yet again that voice was heard in its prophetic clearness on this continent when the church had fallen prey to countless divisions, subversive to vital spiritual power. Protestant America was startled by the cry, "To the law and the testimony!" The current reformation, instituted by the Campbells and their coadjutors, was yet another appeal for the restoration of the vital and spiritual element in Christianity.

In the present days, the call can be heard with no greater profit by any people than by those pleading for the restoration of New Testament Christianity. As pleaders for the restoration of the apostolic faith and practices as against many errors that had crept into the church through departure from simple New Testament teaching, the first work of the Disciples was that of the iconoclast. These errors were, in the judgment of the reformers, insuperable barriers to unity. The plea necessitated the trial of all practices and doctrines by the teaching and practice of the New Testament church. On this account, controversy came prominently into view. It is not to be wondered at that for a time the emphasis must be placed upon doctrinal correctness. This must needs be the first step in the development of the plea for unity and restoration.

For several years, however, the center of gravity among the Disciples has been seeking a point midway between doctrinal correctness and a sound spiritual life. This is the natural and logical program. Now that the propositions advocated by the fathers have been established, emphasis is rightly coming to be placed more and more upon the culture of the highest type of spiritual life. To be doctrinally correct satisfies only a part of the requirement of religion, though this is an absolute condition. With it must go a spiritual life as deep and sound as the doctrine. Acceptable worship must be in "spirit" as well as in "truth."

From this central position we may command a view of the two essential phases of religion, lacking either of which, only a partial view of Christianity can be had. Lacking doctrinal soundness, religion becomes a prey to all manner of error, and may descend into the worst fanaticism; but lacking spirituality, it may descend into the most offensive forms of pharisaism. Safety and power, then, will lie in that middle course which will not be content with anything short of absolute truth and the highest type of spiritual culture.

Nor will anything short of the soundest spiritual life satisfy the demands of our plea. It calls for the restoration, in regard to faith, ordinances and life, of the Apostolic Church. A restoration of the doctrine and ordinances of that church without its spiritual power, would only be a partial restoration. There is a "spiritual side" to our plea which will not be satisfied until it has witnessed the depth and the power of the spiritual life of the New Testament Church. This must occupy a large part, as it doubtless will, of the attention of the Disciples in the future.

This call has its message to the going, working church. The Lord's commission to his church embraces two distinct fields of labor. The first consists in evangelism; the second in spiritual culture—"making disciples," then, "teaching them." The first has to do with the extension of the kingdom; the second with the deepening and broadening of its communion with God and its possession of his life. The commission is both extensive and intensive. Acts and the Epistles give a view of the apostolic conception of the commission. The apostles established churches in as wide a territory as time permitted; but upon these churches they bestowed a vast amount of labor, that they might be perfect and entire, thoroughly furnished unto every good word and work. When Paul had established the churches in Asia Minor and Europe he thought it wise that he should confirm them with many visits and letters. Having entered the church, they were now taught to leave the first principles of repentance, faith, baptism and eternal judgment, and go on to perfection, learning the mysteries of godliness and possessing the fulness of God's life in their own. There is but one document giving the history of their evangelization; but there are twenty-one giving the history of their spiritual training.

And such should be the program of

Washington Letter

By F. D. Power

The national capital has been in the hands of the Episcopalians, Universalists and Spiritualists. All three of these bodies have been simultaneously in convention here. The first were having their Pan-American Congress of bishops, and the others were in their national conventions. Of course the first had the advantage in point of ecclesiastical dignity and ceremony with its bishops and lord bishops, the second dealt chiefly with the practical matters of religion, and the third introduced the spooks.

The most prominent question with the Episcopal Congress was that of divorce. Many are in favor of incorporating in the canons of the church a section which shall forbid the clergy uniting in wedlock any party who has already been married. They would have the absolute prohibition of divorces. Another party is unfavorable to such action for a number of reasons including ethics, policy, and methods. The conservative wing seemed to have largest representation on the program. Bishop Doane, of Albany, N. Y., read a vigorous paper of which the following is a summary:

First. That the marriage relation, being at the foundation of the family, which is the foundation of the state, is the fundamental principle of all civilized and national life.

Secondly. That the alarming increase of divorce has become a serious threat to morality, decency, and social stability in this country and this age.

Thirdly. That the canons of this church today set a higher standard than is set by the civil law of the states, or by the law and practice of any religious body except the Church of England.

Fourthly. That, judged either by its effect or by the authority on which it rests, it is not stringent enough.

Fifthly. That there is no doubt in this church as to this point, viz.: That divorce with remarriage can possibly be allowed only in the one instance of what is called the innocent party in a divorce suit for adultery.

Sixthly. That it is impossible for any one to affirm that the language in the nineteenth chapter of the gospel, according to St. Matthew, on which this sole exception is founded, is absolutely certain either in its authority or in its interpretation.

Seventhly. That this record is not only different from, but seems at variance with other statements of our Lord upon this same subject as recorded in the other evangelists, especially with our Lord's acceptance of the original law of this primeval institution, viz.: That "the twain are of one flesh," and that "man may not put asunder what God hath joined together."

Eighthly. That St. Paul's statement, both in the epistle to the Corinthians and the epistle to the Romans, clearly shows the position of the Apostolic Church and his own definite teaching learned from our Lord himself that only death dissolves the marriage vow.

Ninthly. That for the first 300 years of the primitive church no such thing was known as remarriage after divorce.

Tenthly. That the Church of England, from the time of the Norman conquest to the present day, forbids such remarriages by her canon law.

Eleventhly. That the whole spirit of the marriage service of this church maintains and presupposes the indissoluble sanctity of the marriage bond.

Twelfthly. That to call this a hardship does not prove that it is not right; and it is no greater hardship than the prohibition of divorce with right to remarry for insanity or life-long imprisonment.

Lastly. That where there is any least doubt upon a question of this vital importance, moral, religious and social, the act of mercy is to safeguard the sanctity of marriage against any possible desecration, to keep man or woman from the possibility of the sin of a marriage otherwise than as God's word doth allow, and to leave the door open for penitence even after this gravest sin, to find pardon and reconciliation.

As illustrative of the extreme dignity of this body, one of the pages, a bright lad, who approached the secretary to ask: "Where this man is?" was rebuked for alluding to these personages as "men," and not speaking of them by their titles. The page remembered the lecture, and the next time he came with a card, which happened to be for Bishop Kinsolving, of Texas, he enquired of the secretary: "Where is the king of Texas, please?"

Missions were discussed, family worship, Lord's day observance, adaptation of the church to twentieth century intellectual difficulties, education, political and commercial morality, and kindred themes. There was no deliverance on the temperance question, but the brethren felt it necessary to set forth the attitude of the church toward "churches subject to Roman obedience," and also toward other Protestant "communions." It is of interest to read these expressions from the highest authority of a religious body whose claims to apostolicity are so close akin to those of Rome.

The bishops of the Anglican communion in America, who are assembled in the all-American conference of bishops at Washington, have considered, among many important matters, the subject of its relation and attitude toward the churches of the Roman obedience.

Assured of our rights and responsibilities as a true and a living part of the holy Catholic church, with unbroken succession and authority from our head through his first apostles, we feel that our attitude should be that of clear and outspoken consciousness of our Catholicity alike in the maintenance of the ancient creeds and in our possession of apostolic order.

That, while no witness can be borne for truth without antagonizing error, whether of excess or defect, this earnest contention for the faith once delivered to the saints should be with unlimited charity to the Roman Catholic clergy and people, rather in the spirit of maintenance, defense and proof, than of controversy and attack.

That the right of this church to enter countries where there are churches subject to the Roman obedience, such as the Philippines, Porto Rico and Honolulu, Cuba, Mexico and Brazil, rests partly on the necessity of ministering to its own people in these countries, and partly on the duty to give the privileges of the church to Christian people deprived of them unless they submit to unlawful terms of communion.

That we should be more ready and outspoken than we have been in teaching our young people in our congregations as to the important matters on which there is difference between the Roman church and ourselves, and in guarding them against being misled.

That we most earnestly urge that, in the case of marriages between members of our own church and those of the Roman church, our own members should be warned by no means to promise, as they will be asked to do, that their children shall be brought up in the faith and worship of the Roman church."

This seems quite clear. "In the spirit of maintenance, defense, and proof" means, we will stand our ground. The present attitude shall continue. As to the "Protestant communions," the position taken is somewhat vague.

Resolved, the bishops present in the all-American conference held in the city of Washington, having had under discussion the attitude of the church to which they belong toward the Protestant communions around them have been aroused anew to the manifold evils of that unhappy condition of disunion within the church of Christ with which we are everywhere confronted to-day.

We would also affectionately commend this whole most grave subject anew to the consideration of these Protestant communions, and ask them to consider it seriously with a view to arriving at inter-communion and possible union of them and us, through the compromise of some of the differences and the recognition that others do not constitute sufficient reasons for creating or continuing a rupture of that visible unity of the church for which our Lord Jesus Christ prayed.

We are very thankful to believe that, notwithstanding differences between Christians, yet because of the wide acceptance of the underlying basic principle of baptismal unity there is good hope of the fulfillment of our blessed Lord's high priestly prayer, which calls for constant thought and prayer and conscientious effort on part of his disciples for the accomplishment of reunion throughout Christendom.

It is a hopeful sign when so conservative and exclusive a brotherhood will even go so far as to discuss the question of union and hint at its possibility. It would be far more encouraging if in their practice these brethren would show a more irenic and co-operative spirit. If any people earnestly desire the unity of Christians, they will surely be ready to recognize the parity of believers and to lead in the manifestation of the spirit of unity. We may condemn divisions and preach the great need of a closer fellowship among the people of God, but unless we practice the things that make for peace, and enter as far as may be into actual and vital union with the disciples of our common Lord, our professions must appear very hollow and meaningless. Cardinal Gibbons, in giving his views on the reunion of Christendom said: "In separation from the see of St. Peter, the center of Catholic unity, I can see only discord. In all this broad land, there is no one who longs for truly Christian union more than I do; no one would labor more earnestly to bring about such a happy result." This is the idea of all narrow sectarians—the plan is for everybody to join the sect to which they belong. Such sectarianism is the greatest barrier to union. Longing for union will avail but little. Loving our brethren, living up to our professions in this matter will mean vastly more.

Methodism and Church Federation

By L. H. Dorchester

Pastor Lindell Avenue M. E. Church,
St. Louis.

Any Methodist who will not unite in reasonable federative church movements betrays a lamentable lapse from the example of our illustrious founder. We could easily fill several pages of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with utterances from John Wesley showing that he inculcated and incarnated the spirit of Christian Catholicity and unity.

Wesley's Desire for Federation.

It is little short of marvelous, considering the religious bigotry and coffin-like narrowness of the eighteenth century, that one should express such a sentiment as this from Wesley, "I desire to have a league offensive and defensive with every soldier of Christ. We have not only one faith, one hope, one Lord, but are directly engaged in one warfare. . . . Come then, ye that love him, to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty." What better summons could be uttered calling us to Christian co-operation and church federation!

Opinion and Fellowship.

Wesley's definition of a Methodist leaves no room for uncertainty regarding our propriety in joining in federative movements. Respecting opinion and fellowship he says, "The distinguishing marks of a Methodist are not his opinions of any sort. His assenting to this or that scheme of religion, . . . his espousing the judgment of one man or of another, are all quite wide of the point. . . . And I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that we be in nowise divided among ourselves. Is thy heart right, as my heart is with thine? I ask no farther question. If it be, give me thy hand. . . . Dost thou love and serve God? It is enough. I give thee the right hand of fellowship." Consistent with these sentiments Mr. Wesley, though an ardent Arminian, joined heart and hand with Whitefield, an avowed Calvinist, in all aggressive Christian work. He allowed no differences of theological opinion to divide them in the great cause of Christian evangelism.

Christian Catholicity.

John Wesley was particularly anxious to guard his followers against all narrowness, and showed surprising breadth when he proclaimed these terms of admission to the Methodist societies. "Let them hold particular or general redemption, absolute or conditional decrees; let them be Churchmen or Dissenters, Presbyterians or Independents, it is no obstacle. Let them choose one mode of baptism or another, it is no bar to their admission. The Presbyterian may be a Presbyterian still; the Independent or Anti-Baptist use his own mode of worship. So may the Quaker; and none will contend with him about it. They think and let think. One condition and one only is required—A real desire to save their soul. Where this is, it is enough; they desire no more; they ask only, "Is thy heart herein as my heart? If it be give me thy hand."

Accentuating this remarkable sentiment is the no less remarkable fact that John Wesley, himself, notwithstanding all his Methodist activity remained a member of the Church of England to the hour of his death. While it is true that he was not so cordially treated by the established church in the eighteenth century as he is to-day, nevertheless he was so Catholic and Christian that he could join with all sincere Christian people to advance the Redeemer's kingdom. He seemed to have understood, what we have been slow to comprehend, that the church is subordinate to the kingdom. Indeed, he anticipated the great doctrine of the kingdom, so ably unfolded in Josiah Strong's book, "The Next Great Awakening," the essential principle underlying all federative church movements.

Now, as to the attitude of twentieth century Methodists upon this matter, so far as our church creed and law are concerned, there has been no departure from Wesley's rule, for his writings are our standards of doctrine. To be sure we have not always lived up to that rule, but we have not renounced it. Furthermore, in this year of bi-century observance of Wesley's birth, some of the things we point to with greatest pride are these broad fundamental principles of the kingdom which Wesley taught. Indeed, Christian Catholicity is one of the distinctive messages of John Wesley to all church people of the twentieth century.

Christianity Simplified and Intensified.

Another message, however, has come to us from Wesley, to which we have been loyal, and which bears directly upon the subject in hand. It is not enough that Christians be charitable and tolerant toward one another. Much modern liberalism is as shallow as the waters of a salt water marsh, never deep enough for navigation, its principle yield being coarse grass and mosquitoes. Depth as well as breadth is required to be truly Christian. If Mr. Wesley simplified the terms of religion he likewise intensified upon the essentials. He placed tremendous emphasis upon the vitalities of Christianity. He said, "What I want is holiness of heart and life;" and again, he "attempted a reformation not of opinions, but of men's tempers and lives, of vice in every kind; of everything contrary to justice, mercy or truth."

He made much of the doctrine of Christian perfection, summed up in "the loving the Lord our God with all our heart, and serving him with all our strength."

Perhaps the most notable utterance of Wesley's in this connection is the following:

"I will not quarrel with you about your opinions. Only see that your heart is right toward God, that you know and love the Lord Jesus Christ, that you love your neighbor and walk as your Master walked, and I desire no more. I am sick of opinions, I am weary to hear them. Give me solid and substantial religion, give me a humble, gentle lover of God and man, a man full of mercy and good fruits, a man laying out himself in the work of faith, the patience of hope, the labor of love. Let my soul be with these Christians, wheresoever they are and whatsoever opinions they are of. Whosoever thus doeth the will of my Father in heaven, the same is my brother and sister

The Methodist Position and Disposition.

So far as formulated statements go, Wesley's words constitute the Methodist position upon federation; all that remains to be considered is our disposition. Perhaps this phase could be treated more fairly and with greater propriety by others than by us. As with the brother who was asked if he had become sanctified, who answered, (Continued on page 639.)

COULDN'T FOOL HIM

Doctor Was Firm and Was Right.

Many doctors forbid their patients to drink coffee, but the patients still drink it on the sly and thus spoil all the doctor's efforts and keep themselves sick. Sometimes the doctor makes sure that the patient is not drinking coffee, and there was a case of that kind in St. Paul, where a business man said:

"After a very severe illness last winter which almost caused my death, the doctor said Postum Food Coffee was the only thing that I could drink, and he just made me quit coffee and drink Postum. My illness was caused by indigestion from the use of tea and coffee.

"The state of my stomach was so bad that it became terribly inflamed and finally resulted in a rupture. I had not drank Postum very long before my lost blood was restored and my stomach was well and strong, and I have now been using Postum for almost a year. When I got up from bed after my illness I weighed 98 pounds, and now my weight is 120.

"There is no doubt that Postum was the reason for this wonderful improvement, and I shall never go back to tea or coffee, but shall always stick to the food drink that brought me back to health and strength." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

China's Mediaevalism.

By W. P. Bentley.

The China of to-day greatly resembles the Europe of the Middle Ages. We often think of her as being 'behind the times,' but we had not realized that her lagging in the rear amounted to many hundreds of years. As a matter of fact, we must go back to the eleventh and twelfth centuries to find a parallel.

Residents have heard of the exorbitant rates of interest charged in China—something like two per cent a month. And the Classics set forth an elaborate defense of this, claiming that it keeps the people on the land, because as land only produces a moderate return, no one with money would think of investing in land, therefore land is cheap. So we find that in the thirteenth century in Europe the rate of interest was from twelve to twenty per cent per annum.

Then we have all observed with what deliberation one Chinese village will wage war against another. There is an endless succession of these clan and neighborhood quarrels in China. This corresponds largely to the 'law of reprisals' in vogue in Europe during the reign of Edward I. and Edward II. During that time it is said that the Cinque Ports were in a state of constant hostility with their opposite neighbors. In France, if a man was plundered by the inhabitants of another town, his own magistrate gave him authority to seize the property of any other person belonging to it, until the loss was compensated.

Chinese official corruption has become a proverb. All writers agree that judicial perjury was almost universal in Europe during the Middle Ages. While at the same time they practiced proofs by ordeal and trial by combat, and various kinds of torture were used. Growth in humanitarianism and benevolence has forever banished these from the west, while the magistrates of the Celestial Kingdom still declare various forms of torture to be indispensable in their courts.

Again we see in what low esteem the Buddhist and Taoist priests of China are held, for on account of their vices and ignorance every term of contempt is heaped upon them. So history informs us that the licentiousness of the monks of the Dark Ages was hardly concealed by their cowls of sanctity.

China lies under the curse of age-long superstitions. The days of her children are full of apprehension, and their nights of terror, from fear of the dreaded unseen. So it was with us a few hundred years ago, when in the shadows of universal ignorance a thousand superstitions were propagated and nourished.

The parallel might be drawn out indefinitely; but our chief purpose is to indicate that, as Europe had her Revival of Learning and with it social and moral rejuvenation, so must we believe China is to have her Renaissance when, largely by the aid of extraneous helps, she will be launched upon a career of advancement corresponding to that of modern Europe. And if we at times should get impatient, let us remember that our own progress is counted by centuries and not by years.

And as purified Christianity made modern Europe possible, so to-day the ambassadors of the Cross would transform China's mediaevalism into a Christianized modernity.

The Divine Trinity.

By C. H. Wetherbe.

It is difficult for me to understand how anyone who accepts the Bible as an authentic revelation from God, and who is familiar with the contents of the Bible, can deny that it clearly sets forth the great truth that there is a divine Trinity. I accept this truth, not because I was taught it by the ministers whom I heard preach during my early life, nor because some theological teacher stated the truth to me, but simply because, even during my boyhood days, I very plainly saw that truth in the Bible. Plainly enough the Bible speaks of the Father, and Christ spoke of him as "my Father." Of course, it need not be said that Christ was and is a divine being, the Son of God, on an equality with the Father. Equally plain is the truth that the Holy Spirit is a distinct divine personality, for Christ often spoke of him as a person, as when he said, "When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all the truth." Human language could not more plainly declare the personality of the Holy Spirit and also that of the Father and Son.

And yet, right in the face of such exceedingly plain truths as these, there are those who, though having read the Bible for years and professing to have studied it thoughtfully, say that they do not believe in a divine Trinity. Even professed ministers of the gospel make such a declaration. This is astounding, and I can account for it on no other ground than a perversity of sheer unbelief.

Some tell us that the doctrine of the Trinity is a "theory." If this were true, then it is perfectly proper to say that the Bible statement that Christ is the Son of God, co-equal with the Father, is a theory. Is it a mere theory that the Holy Spirit descended from heaven to earth on Pentecost day? By no means. Now the statement is made that one can deny the truth that there are three persons in the Godhead and still be true to the Bible. I unqualifiedly assert that such is not the case. Christ spoke of the Father as a person, and he also as distinctly spoke of the Holy Spirit as a person, and for anyone to deny that there are such persons is to deny Christ, because, to deny Christ's words, is to deny him. One cannot impeach Christ's statements without impeaching him. This is by no means a matter of theological speculation; it is a question which vitally relates to the fundamentals of divine revelation.

"Going, But Can't Tell Where!"

By J. H. Wright.

(A wealthy man of Putnam, Conn., has had his tomb and a marble bust erected in the local cemetery. Beneath the bust is the inscription, "Going, but can't tell where!"—N. Y. Tribune.)

Going to the grave with steady tread;
Going swift as day and night are sped:

Going out from toil and care,
"Going—but I can't tell where!"

Leaving life, its mingled joy and woe;
Leaving earth and all I love and know;

Leaving wealth that goes not there;
Leaving for—"I can't tell where!"

Sinking sun, for me to rise no more?
Sinking sands, and tread no farther shore?

Sinking hope, no Christ o'er there?
Sinking soul, "I can't tell where!"

Silent tomb! Dread thought in marble told!

Silent bust, with seal-ed lips and cold!

Silent guardian, watching there,
Silent to the soul's "somewhere!"

Sad there's nothing better thou canst say;

Sad there shines no light upon thy way.

Sad, when One thy load would share;—

Sad to go, not knowing where!

Christian faith beholds a home on high;

Christian hope grows bright as years go by:

Christian love breathes trusting
prayer;

"Going HOME, and Christ tells where!"

The American Man's Religion

What has become of the American man's religion? Is it lost or has it simply changed its form and become independent of church relationship? Has he become a mere moralist, or is he content to struggle with the world year after year, without a thought of the time when the lights must be rudely extinguished and the curtain drop on the whole scene?

He seems, indeed, to be so busy trying to provide the proper food and raiment and social conditions for his family that he has no time or attention to give to anything else. So he attends strictly to business and tells his friends that his wife keeps up the "social and religious end" of their family affairs. It seems like a very fair division of labor, after all, and we have come to accept it as quite the proper arrangement.

Women More Religious than Men.

We have always been told so, and we have accepted the idea which is apparently sustained by the fact that the church and all charitable and missionary organizations find their support and their membership among women. In regard to the membership there can be no doubt, but in regard to the support, the real, substantial support of these things, if an accurate investigation could be made, we might find that the average American man is not only generous, but that his support of these institutions has in it as much of personal responsibility, as much of unselfishness and self-sacrifice, as could be found among their feminine membership.

We cannot wonder that church membership is common among women. We know that it is to them an easy and acceptable matter. A woman's sympathies are ever active and easily aroused. She has a religious sentiment, if we may call it so, peculiar to her mental constitution. She pledges allegiance to any cause more quickly and more lightly than does her brother. Her reason gives her less trouble than does his. The poetic, sentimental, æsthetic element of Christianity appeals strongly to her, and she is in danger of allowing it to take precedence of the sturdy virtues of sincerity, honesty of purpose and action, and a conscientious discharge of her duty to herself and the world, not as a church member only, but as a Christian woman.

The ideas of charity and philanthropy are rightly attractive to her, but she is prone to forget that "Justice is the foundation of the temple of charity; you cannot have the top without the bottom." If she is unjust to her own better nature, and to those nearest her, in order that she may be active in organized church and charitable work, she makes the greatest of mistakes.

By Olive A. Smith

The American Man is Practical.

He is so extremely practical in his religious ideas that he is sometimes cynical. He has concluded, perhaps, that church membership, with all its apparent duties, is, after all, "only a matter of business." He "used to think there was something in it," but he has learned better. He knows, perhaps, that his wife is gaining constantly in church prominence, and he also knows that she is losing proportionately in every true quality of womanhood. This undercurrent of thought is one of which he is hardly conscious, but it has its effect upon his ideas and his life.

I think the poets and their co-workers, the preachers, are somewhat responsible for the idea that a man instinctively looks to women for spiritual qualities superior to his own. If he does, is it not time that he cease that search in which he seems frequently to be disappointed, and turn his attention to the development of those qualities in himself?

He Should Explain His Position.

The American man does not clear up the question of his own personal, religious life as it is his privilege to do.

If he ignores the church, but believes that there is a spiritual kingdom and a spiritual life which must be the only real life—the life which is to endure after our change comes to us; if he is satisfied that this life may exist independent of church or creed, organization or form of any kind, then he ought to make his position understood. If he believes that it is necessary to be a citizen of the spiritual kingdom, he ought to know whether he is a citizen or not. Positivism has ever been the curse of religions as it is the curse of everything else. The truly reverent soul is slow to say that he knows anything, but will rather say with the poet:

"Behold we know not anything;
I can but trust that good may fall
At last—far off—at last, to all,
And every winter change to spring."

Yet there are things which we may know as far as our limited, earth-bound vision will permit us to know anything. There is a knowledge which we may gain from the world of revelation, the world of nature, and from a world within us, which we cannot describe, but which is none the less real; nay, it is more real, for it is the unseen things which are eternal. The only reason that the spiritual world is not as real to us as the material world is because we have not conquered its mysteries, learned its laws, lived its life. Little by little we are learning to do these things, and if a man's feet are on the rock in a spiritual sense, he ought to learn to know it, even as he knows it in a material sense. He knows that he lives and breathes, and he ought to know if he lives and breathes the air of the spiritual world.

If he feels that the thoughts and desires of his heart place him in communion with the heart of love which rules the universe, he knows that he is a son of God in the true sense. This feeling of communion and nearness, this heart knowledge of God, is not a vague fancy; it is prayer; the privilege and joy of the Christian life.

These are tests of life, and they may be applied to the heart and the mind.

It is time for the American man to assume more of his rightful power in the spiritual realm; time for him to put to flight this old idea that from the beginning heaven has been dedicated to femininity.

AN OLD TIMER

Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum Food Coffee since it came upon the market 8 years ago, knows from experience the necessity of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a steady brain.

She says: "At the time Postum was first put on the market I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum and got a sample and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use, and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly. I persuaded him to shift to Postum, and it was easy to get him to make the change for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate or depress, and does not stimulate but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach. To make a long story short our entire family have now used Postum for eight years with completely satisfying results as shown in our fine condition of health and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Increased brain and nerve power always follow the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner.

News From Many Fields

Indiana.

News from the November offering throughout the state, for the first week, is very encouraging. Nearly all of our representative preachers and churches are pushing the matter. Some completed a very generous offering. Others began and will complete later. The offerings so far, run from $170 down. Let every preacher and church that loves old Indiana lend a generous hand in this offering, and let it be worthy of this great brotherhood.

I will send a revised copy of the Indiana preachers list to the Central Passenger Association Dec. 1. Let every preacher who has changed his address during the past year, or who will change before Jan. 1, send the new address to T. J. Legg, field sec., 1402 Pleasant St., Indianapolis, at once, so as not to be delayed in receiving your railroad clergy certificate for 1904. This regardless of any previous notice. Important.

Indiana Sunday-schools, 379 in number, gave to foreign missions in June, children's day, $5,268.37. This was glorious, but it will be more glorious still, if we can give as much to home and state missions on boy's and girl's rally day. So far but 80 schools have ordered supplies. This is not as creditable as it should be. Let every school in the state—not alone those who have helped in foreign missions—but every school send at once to B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bld'g, for supplies free, to whom also send all remittances from rally day. Remember Brother Smith sends back half the money you send from rally day, to help the weak Sunday-schools and churches in Indiana, and to establish new ones. The schools of all the other states are coming up grandly on rally day. Indiana must not lag behind. T. J. LEGG.

Ohio.

The Ohio letter tries to tell the truth. In the last letter, however, there was an item that was not true. D. O. Cunningham will not go to Deerfield. He has gone to the Central Church, Findlay. This is a church of comparatively recent organization. They have leased the unused Congregational house located in the exact center of the town and feel that the outlook for the new congregation is most excellent.

Ohio has again "gone Republican." It is too early to tell the temperance complexion of the next legislature. The ward option bill will be the fight next January.

The returns from the Ohio Day offering are most flattering. It was the best day Ohio churches ever had. It is not too late to get on our band wagon. Take the offering yet, if you have not done so.

G. W. Moore, of Akron, is holding a meeting for the Glenville church. This will be an exchange affair between Moore and Ryan. The outlook at Glenville for a good meeting is excellent.

John Mullen has assumed the pastoral responsibilities at Hubbard. This is a young and flourishing church and has a good, godly man at its head. State Evangelist Geo. A. Ragan is at North Baltimore in a meeting. This is one of our state missions that is hopeful and promising.

The new synagogue at Millersburg is under roof. W. T. Barnes is leading in the enterprise and will hold a meeting as soon as the house is completed.

R. H. Dodson, of Georgetown, is preaching for some days at Hamersville. J. E. Lynn is at Hiram in a meeting with good interest at last report.

At Crestline, Ohio, Sunday night, Nov. 1, at 8:03 o'clock a cut of freight cars on the Pennsylvania railroad struck two cars loaded with dynamite. The explosion was something terrific. Fifty cars were so completely destroyed that no trace of them can be found. Every plate glass in the little city was shattered. Buildings were moved from their foundations. A hole 60 feet in diameter and 15 feet deep was made in the ground. At Galion four miles away window glass was shattered. Mansfield, 14 miles off thought there was an earthquake. What of it? The gospel is God's dynamite unto salvation! Fellow preacher, did you realize the power of the message you are called to deliver. O forsake not the preaching of the old, old story!

The Disciples at Newark are building. They will spend $12,000 on a new and enlarged building. The foundation is in. It will all be provided for before dedication day.

William Kraft is having good success in a meeting at the German mission in Cleveland. At last report 19 had been added.

Let every Ohio church arrange for a good, rousing evangelistic meeting this fall. In 1900, we had 45,000 Disciples in Ohio. In this year of grace 83,000 are reported.

This increase is mostly due to evangelistic effort. The 83,000 ought to win 10,000 by next May. That would be about 20 to the church. Will your church do it? We are planning for that and more in our bishopric.

Let the pure gospel be sounded forth, let the Christ be uplifted and he will draw all men unto himself. A. FREER.

Collinwood, Ohio.

Ohio's Capital.

Ohio Day was observed in our four churches and the mission at Linden Heights in this city last Lord's day and every church will go beyond its apportionment. On Tuesday evening, Oct. 27, we had a rousing union meeting at the Central and Brother I. J. Cahill, of Dayton, and Brother Geo. A. Ragan, state evangelist, delivered two very excellent addresses. Their presence and sermons counted no little in the results of Ohio Day.

Yesterday our pastors in the city met in the study of the Central and organized an alliance which is to hold regular meetings on the second and fourth Mondays in each month at three o'clock at the Central Church. The writer was named as the chairman and Bro. Wesley Hatcher, pastor of the Chicago Avenue Church, secretary. With the coming of Bro. J. H. Dodd to the Franklin Avenue Church, to succeed Brother Freer, who did such a splendid work in that part of the city, our churches are again supplied with regular preaching. Brother Freer went to Collinwood, Cleveland, to the regret of us all, but to Collinwood's gain.

Brother Miller who is doing such valiant service in Newark, dropped into the study this morning and reports the enlargement of their building well under way. The writer remembers well when we had no organization in Newark and now with a church of between five and six hundred, a large Bible-school, a liberal, consecrated and growing membership and a most efficient preacher, the change is most wonderful.

The writer has been with the Central Church about eight weeks, and the welcome accorded him and his family has been most cordial.

The audiences have been very good and additions have been made to the church every Lord's day except one. Brother Abberley, who preceded me, labored very successfully here for more than five years and is lovingly remembered by the whole church. It is a delight to follow such a man in the ministry.

The Central has one of the liveliest Endeavor societies I ever saw. At the recent meeting of the Franklin county union, held in the Broad Street Presbyterian church, our society captured the banner for having the largest delegation present. Bro. Wesley Hatcher, pastor of Chicago Avenue, delivered the address of the evening, a very fine one. Bro. Charles Perry, of the W. Fourth Avenue Church, one of the enthusiastic young men of that congregation, was elected vice-president; Miss Keckley, of Franklin Ave., was elected secretary—so that each one of our four churches had some honor from that meeting.

With the wonderful growth of Columbus during the past few years, estimated now as having a population of more than 175,000, we should be planning to establish more churches in the suburban districts. We hope Linden Heights will so grow into a church and then the south side ought to be looked after. We ought to have a dozen organizations in the city now. We have a fine body of business men in all our churches and we are sure they will heartily second any movement looking to the increasing of our forces in the Capital City. WALTER SCOTT PRIEST.

Columbus, O.

Maryland, Delaware and District of Columbia.

The Sunday-school at Ninth Street, Washington, held a rally day on Oct. 25, with 608 present. Brother Bagby reported two added at prayer-meeting.

F. D. Power reported the interest in Christian Endeavor reviving at Vermont Avenue, and W. L. Harris reported one baptism and one by letter at Whitney Avenue.

The Sunday-school at Boonsboro closed a four month's Sunday-school revival on Oct. 25. The enrollment increased from 47 to 137. A treat was held on Oct. 24 for the school at which there was music and feasting. We will follow it with a protracted meeting.

Assisted Bro. J. R. Gaff in a meeting at Joppa in Harford Co. for four evenings. Had one confession. He will continue the meeting awhile.

Spent one day while at Joppa calling on Avondale brethren. We hope to arrange for preaching there half the time. Some of our churches observed state day. Let it go on.

J. A. HOPKINS.

Missouri.

We were in hopes, from the number and the power of the influences working in favor of the state mission collection Lord's day, Nov. 1, prominent among which was the great state mission number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, that we would be able to report a great inrush of funds to the treasury the very first week. But the weather, Oh, my! how it did rain and rain and kept on raining till the poor day was soaked from one end of the state to the other and our expectations were all washed away. Little, very little money has come in, so little in fact that it is practically none and your board finds itself in the severest straits. Beginning the year as we did with only $7.77 in the treasury we were cramped right from the start. We wanted to plan our work in a manner worthy of our great people and the greatest cause on earth, but determined to wait for the results of the state offering.

We are not in despair—never think it for a moment—we have confidence in the great brotherhood of the state. We have asked you for $10,000 for state missions this year and we have faith that you will give it, but we need a great, big generous slice of it now. Our plans wait your actions, it is your move, a great big generous response on the part of the churches means the greatest year's work our state has ever done. Now will you not take up the matter immediately and raise the very biggest offering for state missions your churches have ever given.

The work of last year should be an inspiration for this. Bro. A. B. Jones, former corresponding secretary after reading the reports carefully says, "I have just read the 'Missouri Message' proceedings of the state convention, your board's report etc. Allow me to congratulate you on the enlargement of the work. It is time now to place first emphasis on state missions." We thank Brother Jones for his good word. Coming from one who has been in intimate association with the work in the past it is all the more appreciated. "It is time to place first emphasis on state missions." Never were truer words spoken and we must listen and heed it. Other states are realizing it and rolling in great offerings making it possible for the state boards to do magnificent work. Missouri must not be lag-gard. We have a great, grand, magnificent field for work, the harvest was never riper or more ready, let us have an immediate "long pull, strong pull, and a pull all together."

Our men are all at work, great results are coming from their work. More men are needed, greater work can be done, "Awake O Zion put on thy strength." If you did not take the offering last Sunday take it next.

T. A. ABBOTT.

Indian Territory.

The last sixty days has seen a great growth of the church in the Indian Territory, the greatest in the same time that I have known since I have been in the territory. Over 60 at Chickasha, John A. Stevens pastor, Brother Boon evangelist. Miami, Joe and Will Deatherage evangelists, 25 added. Pryor Creek, Brother Groome pastor, Brother Cook evangelist, 24 added. Purcell, Brother Chambers pastor, Bro. D. D. Boyles evangelist, 11 additions. South McAlester, home forces, Bro. I. N. Teel pastor, 16 added, and good congregations organized at Alluwe and Okema, Brother Robertson evangelist. We are at this time at Wister, a small town in the east part of the territory. We have in this community some good people, and we hope to have a church, or I should say a congregation, for many people in this country would not know what I meant if I said church, for in the territory only one in three of our congregations have houses. There is in the town a building owned by the Presbyterian people, and it has with it a good parsonage. The house is a good one for the place. All can be had for less than $500. We are hoping the church extension board can let us have $300 of this amount, and the rest can be raised in the community. Now is the time to take this country. Go from here to Poteau eight miles east. Brethren, you that have the money, make it possible for our home boards to put the money in this country, that will enable us to stand beside the great churches at work here. Have men to preach the gospel, and then build a house for every church. Give us $10,000 with which to preach the gospel and build houses for the next ten years each year, and then the Indian Territory will be able and I believe willing to build one house a week after that, and place a pastor in them as fast as they are built. What a sad thing it can't be done. This is a great country, and the people are coming. Help us to take care of them.

Get the Most Out of Your Food

You don't and can't if your stomach is weak. A weak stomach does not digest all that is ordinarily taken into it. It gets tired easily, and what it fails to digest is wasted.

Among the signs of a weak stomach are uneasiness after eating, fits of nervous headache, and disagreeable belching.

"I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla at different times for stomach troubles, and a run down condition of the system, and have been greatly benefited by its use. I would not be without it in my family. Chicago.

The summer is over and the fall campaign is on. Most of the churches are in prosperous condition. J. V. Coombs has been assisting Marion Stevenson in a meeting at Irving Park. There were several additions. The Ashland church is in a meeting conducted by the pastor. The new church recently organized at South Chicago is pushing vigorously forward. That is a very important center, and is greatly in need of a church.

The regular annual meeting of the Chicago Christian Missionary Society will occur next Monday evening, Nov. 2. At which time officers for the ensuing year will take place, and steps taken to shape the policy to be pursued. It is evident that few changes will take place as the policy adopted during the past year has worked well, and while not all that could have been wished has been accomplished yet it is the feeling of all who have been active in the work that the results are quite well up to expectations.

On Thursday evening Oct. 22 at the Jackson Boulevard Church occurred the regular quarterly banquet of the Disciples Social Union of Chicago. About 200 sat down together, made up of the earnest church workers of the city. Ed. A. Ott, pastor of the Monroe Street Church acted as toastmaster. Characteristic speeches were made by C. R. Scoville, Lloyd Darsie and H. L. Willett. W. F. Richardson, of Kansas City, came by on his way home from Detroit and made the gathering glad by his genial presence and a splendid after dinner speech. A number of visitors were present prominent among whom were: Geo. W. Buckner, of Macomb, Ill., and Will Shaw, of Charleston. The Social Union has come to be a permanent feature as well as most helpful in extending acquaintanceship in our Chicago work.

The minister's meeting was greeted by the presence of the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST recently. He read a most carefully prepared paper on, "The Message for the Minister of To-day." Luncheon was then taken together and a conference held that extended well into the afternoon. It was delightful to thus be favored by the presence of one whose grasp on the great religious problems of the day is so thorough and whose life is so earnest. It was an opportunity to make use of and it was done.

ROBERT L. WILSON.

C. W. B. M. in Missouri.

One thing I want to impress upon every auxiliary at this time. It is C. W. B. M. day. In less than three weeks December will be here. The first Lord's day is ours (if local conditions make the second more acceptable, it is all right). If this opportunity is lost, the chance to present our work is lost for a year—twelve long months. Opportunities lost, are gone forever.

If, for any reason, your plans were not perfected at the November meeting, I beg that each president will immediately call her executive committee and spend a whole afternoon in planning and praying for C. W. B. M. day's success.

1. Arrange with your pastor for a C. W. B. M. sermon, for make such a program as will best fit your locality. Have it telling and not too long. Let it end with a strong appeal for members, Tidings and a money offering from every person present.

2. Appoint such committees as will, without fail, interview every woman in the church before C. W. B. M. day, personally soliciting her name for membership and pledging her to remain a member for at least a year, also asking her for an offering. Every woman should make an offering according to her ability. Upon her who refuses to become a member of the auxiliary, this duty of giving is placed doubly strong, by the Master himself, not by us. The duty of seeing that every woman has opportunity to give is laid just as heavily upon auxiliary members by the same pierced hand. Oh, sisters, we must not stand before Him, self-accused of neglect of this duty.

3. Life members should also be solicited from brothers and sisters able to give them.

4. Tidings should be distributed and subscriptions solicited.

5. All C. W. B. M. day offerings should be sent to a general fund, undesignated, not applied to any special work. Plans for special offerings will be submitted later. Life membership taken should go undesignated, also to a general fund.

6. The year's new rally cry and aim, "Faithfulness, fruitfulness, fullness, and 5,000 women, 20,000 Tidings subscriptions and $175,000 for missions," should be rung again and again, until every Christian knows it and loves it.

7. Plans and prayers, pushed to perfection, should be marching orders for November and December.

CONSTIPATION.

Its Cause and Cure.

A person in order to be healthy must get rid of the waste products (or poisons) of the body. Nature has provided four ways to get rid of them: The Bowels, the Kidneys, the Bladder and the pores of the Skin.

If the bowels become inactive, that portion of the food which should be thrown off lies in the intestines and decomposes, causing blood, nerve, liver and kidney trouble, and closes the pores of the skin, thus creating disease in the entire system.

You can immediately relieve and permanently cure yourself of stubborn constipation or distressing stomach trouble and perfectly regulate your kidneys and liver by taking one dose a day of DRAKE'S PALMETTO WINE. Any reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can secure absolutely free a bottle by writing to Drake Formula Co., 300 Drake Bldg., 100 Lake Street, Chicago.

A FREE trial bottle alone has brought health and vigor to many, so you owe it to yourself to prove what it will do in your case.

Write the company this very day.

THE CURSE OF STRONG DRINK.—
Prov. 23:29-35.

Memory Verses: 29:32.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.—Prov. 20:1.

The Saloon.

Last week the Christian Endeavor topic was "The Sinful Saloon." That subject represents one phase of the matter. Liquor-selling is a sin, and the permitting of liquor-selling is a sin. Both ought to be stopped by positive law rigorously enforced. People object to the prohibition of the liquor traffic on the ground that "you can't make men virtuous by law." No, you can't. But prohibition does not propose to make anybody virtuous by law. It proposes only that the law shall remove this great stumbling-block from the way of those who are trying to make themselves virtuous. Law cannot make men good, but it can stop some of the forces which are at work making men bad. It is on this principle that the prohibition of the saloon can reasonably be demanded.

Drink and the Drunkard.

The standing argument against drink is the drunkard. Judged by its fruits, it is hopelessly bad. It is a wonder that the liquor-business does not die of its own villainess, with so many walking advertisements of the woes which it causes. Look at the drunkard—not in scorn or in self-righteousness, but in pity and love, for you do not know how the temptation waylaid him or by what subtlety the cords of habit were first bound upon him. But look at him as the product of an institution, the saloon; a graduate from the college of intemperance; a prophecy of the end that awaits the reckless drinker. The sage of Israel described the phenomena of intemperance as vividly and as truly as it could be done to-day. The marks are the same in all ages:

"Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions?

Who hath complainings? Who hath wounds without cause?

Who hath redness of eyes?

They that tarry long at the wine;

They that go to seek out mixed wine."

The Uses of Strong Drink.

We hear much of the beneficent uses and of the joys of drink. There is a sort of literature, both classic and contemporary, which glorifies alcohol and sings the praises of wine. We are told that it warms the hearts of men and encourages good fellowship; but nine-tenths of the quarrels and half of the murders are inspired directly by drink. A recent grand jury report in St. Louis declared that nine-tenths of the crimes of violence committed in this city are directly traceable to the saloons. They say it facilitates conversation; so it does, by dulling the power of discretion and loosening the tongue, till one talks like a befuddled fool about things concerning which one would be silent in his sober senses. They say it braces a man up and summons all his faculties to his service. Sometimes it does, if taken in small quantities, but this access of strength is only borrowed from the store of energy which belongs to the future, and borrowed at usurious interest. It gives a man courage—but the unreliable "clutch courage" of bravado and senseless indiscretion. It is so valuable as a medicinal agent—but it kills more than it ever cures and puts more into the hospital than it ever takes out, not to mention those whom it puts into the jail, the penitentiary, the poor-house, the work-house and the insane asylum. Alcohol, like arsenic, has its medicinal uses, but the man who uses it under the doctor's orders ought to reduce his temptation to a minimum by rehearsing, every time he takes his medicine, the total abstinence pledge—never to use it as a beverage.

THANKSGIVING DAY.—Ps. 33:1-22.

Most people are naturally inclined to ingratitude—not by reason of positive refusal to acknowledge their obligations, but on account of forgetfulness. We need constant reminders to help us to recall our indebtedness to those who have made us what we are. Thanksgiving Day has this value, that its annual recurrence is a reminder to us, as individuals and as a nation, that our prosperity is from God and to Him must be the praise.

How much we sacrifice, both of joy and of gratitude, by taking things for granted! The things to which we are accustomed seem to be ours by natural right. We feel no special joy in their possession and no special reason for giving thanks for them. As our fortunes rise above this accustomed level, we feel that we have reason for gratitude. But the new level soon takes the place of the old standard, and there must be another rise, and another or we cease to remember our blessing. With most of us it is only the new blessings that we think of with gratitude, and the loss of one old blessing quite overshadows all the blessings that remain and plunges us into misery and rebellion.

This is all wrong. We can never be thoroughly happy and can never gain that peace which is the heritage of the grateful soul, until we keep our blessings, both new and old, vividly before our minds.

You remember how happy you were when you just found your Savior and how, in the first days of your new Christian life, your heart overflowed with joy as you thanked God for His goodness to you. Have you kept Do you still thank Him as fervently as you did then? Surely the blessing has not grown less precious as it has grown old.

You, young man, do you remember the time when your mother was near the gates of death, and how you waited outside her door one night while the doctor watched his patient through the crisis in that hour when the scales wavered between life and death? And when he came out with a glad light in his eyes and whispered, "She will live," you wrung his hand and fell on your knees and thanked God for giving you such a mother and for giving her back in the hour of peril. Do you forget to thank Him for her still, now that she is well and strong again?

Young woman, perhaps you recall the day when your little brother met that awful accident. You forgot then how troublesome he had been to you and you prayed that he might come safely through. He did, and your heart was full of gratitude. But sometimes, when household cares lie heavy upon you and those little brothers and sisters seem a great nuisance, it is hard to be as thankful for them as you were.

And you, middle-aged man, engrossed as you are with business, surely you have not quite forgotten that sweet and far-off day when she whom your soul adored said "yes," and you thought yourself beyond comparison the luckiest fellow in the world. So you were, but very likely it is a long time since it occurred to you to think about it that way. Have you allowed that priceless joy, which you held as God's best gift to you, to sink into the dull gray of common things?

Let us make this Thanksgiving Day a time of gratitude for the blessings of every day. The new blessings will take care of themselves. We are in no danger of forgetting them. But these old gifts that should be perennially precious to us—these we must guard against indifference and forgetfulness.

Nov. 18.X. THE WISE AND FOOLISH BUILDERS.
—Matt. 7:21-29; Luke 6:47-49.

The Sermon on the Mount reaches a wonderful climax. No other preacher ever dared to make such claims for his sermon. Jesus of Nazareth stands forth and boldly declares that His sayings are vital; they are fundamental. He has laid foundations, on which men may build for eternity.

1. Practice, not profession.—It is not enough to call Him Lord. Many a man has what he considers a very complimentary opinion of Christ—as if such a thing were possible—he patronizes the church, and is quite urbane when he greets a minister of the gospel, but he is as far as Satan himself from making "these sayings" the law of his life. And it is easily possible for men with good intentions to get bewildered and become members of the church, and yet live according to the low standards of worldly prudence.

God's will must be done. If it is not, then He is not sovereign. The kingdom of God is nothing more or less than the reign of God. How can you be a citizen of that kingdom unless you obey implicitly the laws of the King? Tolstoy's bald literalism is safer far than the gilded hypocrisy which makes religion a mere matter of Sunday and the sanctuary; which says with a satisfied smirk, "Business is business and religion is religion!" and then ranges itself in the market on the side of covetous conspirators against the common weal.

2. Self-deluded.—There is no doubt whatever that a man can deceive himself. There is an entire cult now in vogue in some sections which requires of its votaries voluntary derangement of their mental faculties. And whether voluntarily or not, men deceive themselves in the commerce of spiritual things. They are full of good intentions; they yield a ready homage to religion; they even teach its truths and engage in its benevolences; they feel sure that they are approved of the Lord. But the time is coming when they will be aroused with an infinite amazement. The King will say, "I never knew you! depart, ye cursed!"

3. A sure foundation.—A foundation must bear the whole weight of the superstructure. If you are going to erect a building, look well to the foundation. Better leave off the filigree, the carved chapters and art glass, than to slight the foundation. Now Jesus affirms that these sayings of His are fundamental; that they lie at the foundation of enduring character. We are puzzled over the problems of labor and capital, of government, of finance, of a thousand things, the solution of which for our own age and for every age lies in these sayings. They deal with great principles; they reveal the hand of the Master-builder. Here is the material upon which to rest everlasting hope.

4. The testing time.—It came; it comes; it reveals every man's work, of what sort it is. Christians encounter sorrow and trouble; of course: when were they ever promised exemption from the trials of the common lot? Not exemption from trial, but victory in trial is the promise. The storms of affliction beat upon them, as upon others; the fiery hail and the engulfing flood are upon them. But they stand like some mighty light-house, at whose base the billows rage and break, so the Christian stands, immovable, a beacon of hope to the storm-driven.

"The foundations of my hope are swept away!" murmured a man of the world, remorsefully, as he lay at death's door. "Oh, strange delusion, that has destroyed my soul!" The rain and the wind beat upon that house, and it fell, and great was the fall of it. Upon what are you building?

PRAYER.

Help us, O God, to cry mightily unto thee for succor. We are confused; we are ignorant; we do not understand thy ways. Forbid Pain or dull ache in the back is unmistakable evidence of kidney trouble. It is Nature's timely warning to show you that the track of health is not clear.

If these danger signals are unheeded, more serious results are sure to follow; Bright's disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble, may steal upon you.

Swamp-Root Entirely Cured Me.

Among the many famous cures of Swamp-Root investigated by the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, the one we publish this week for the benefit of our readers, speaks in the highest terms of the wonderful curative properties of this great kidney remedy.

GENTLEMEN:—I know you do not need this from me as you are daily receiving hundreds of testimonials. However, I want to say that I think you have the greatest remedy on earth for kidney, bladder and liver trouble. I had been troubled for years, was operated on several times and spent a large amount of money and received no benefit whatever. I suffered everything and it was necessary for me to get up as many as twenty times during the night.

I gave Swamp-Root a thorough trial and it completely cured me.
J. W. ARMANTRAUT,
Sept. 12, '03. Greentown, Ind.

Lame back is only one symptom of kidney trouble—one of many. Other symptoms showing that you need Swamp-Root are, obliged to pass water often during the day and to get up many times at night, inability to hold your urine, smarting or irritation in passing, brick-dust or sediment in the urine, catarrh of the bladder, uric acid, constant headache, dizziness, sleeplessness, nervousness, irregular heart-beating, rheumatism, bloating, irritability, worn-out feeling, lack of ambition, less of flesh, sallow complexion.

If your water when allowed to remain undisturbed in a glass or bottle for twenty-four hours, forms a sediment or settling, or has a cloudy appearance, it is evidence that your kidneys and bladder need immediate attention.

In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect healer and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medical science.

Swamp-Root is the great discovery of Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist. Hospitals use it with wonderful success in both slight and severe cases. Doctors recommend it to their patients and use it in their own families, because they recognize in Swamp-Root the greatest and most successful remedy.

To Prove What Swamp-Root, the Great Kidney, Liver and Bladder Remedy, Will Do for YOU, Every Reader of the Christian-Evangelist May Have a Sample Bottle sent Absolutely Free by Mail.

Our Budget

—November has been a splendid month for that state mission offering. Have you attended to it?

—The Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is now attracting the attention of the Sunday-schools and we expect to see home missions take a long stride to the front when the schools have all made their report.

—This is going to be, from all indications, a great year for evangelism among us. Here are some telegrams that show the direction and momentum of the current:

Warrensburg, Mo., Nov. 8.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: There have been 67 additions to date—45 of them to-day; 32 by confession. There were 1,600 people packed into the church to-night. The interest is intense. Brother Denton is a splendid yoke-fellow. WILSON & McVEY, evangelists.

The above is first class for a start. The following comes from an older meeting:

Joplin, Mo., Nov. 8.

CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST: The Harlow and Ridenour meeting is now 36 days old. There have been 448 additions; 55 of these to-day. W. F. TURNER.

Joplin is getting a thorough stirring up. Bro. W. A. Moore had only recently closed a meeting on the south side with over 100 additions. It will be a great task to shepherd this large ingathering of converts, but Brothers Turner, Baker, and other consecrated workers there, may be relied upon to do their best.

—Arthur N. Lindsey is in the midst of a fine meeting with the church at Higbee, Mo.

—The church at Rocky Ford, Colo., is now occupying its handsome and commodious new building.

Jas. Connoran, Keokuk, Ia., announces that the church at that place has employed J. W. Kilburn, of Washburn, Ill., as pastor.

—The offerings to the American Christian Missionary Society for October, 1903, show a gain of $1,323.68, as compared with the same period last year.

—Nothing should prevent our Sunday-schools from participating in the fall festival of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. It will train the children in Christian patriotism.

—If Mrs. Olive Thompson, whose question was published in Questions and Answers of Sept. 3, will write Mrs. H. Matley, of Lodi, Cal., she will greatly oblige. Or kindly send her address to this office.

—The annual meeting of the Georgia Christian Missionary Convention will be held at Macon, Ga., Nov. 16-19. They have a good program and we hope to hear of a most interesting and profitable meeting.

—Edgar S. Potter, of Quincy, Ill., writes: "Your 'As Others Saw Us' in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is a gem. We are not 'languidly' singing 'Onward Christian Soldiers;' we are marching."

—Our offering for state missions is $55, the largest in the history of the church. We are enjoying the work. This is a fertile field.

D. ERRETT.

Salem, Or.

—The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is always good, but the issue of Oct. 29, is, I believe, the best of all. It is a superb number.

B. B. TYLER.

Denver, Col., Nov. 4, 158 S Penn Ave.

—The Ladies' Aid Society of the Central Christian Church, Moberly, gave a supper on the 10th inst., after which Bro. F. G. Tyrrell, of this city, lectured on "Sleepy Heads." This was designed, perhaps, to aid the pastor in keeping his auditors awake!

—The Home Board has had to print the third edition of the exercise for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. We believe it is going to be more largely observed than ever before. No live superintendent will deprive his school of the privilege and inspiration of this day.

MACBETH, on a lamp- chimney, stays there.

My Index tells what chimney fits your lamp. If you use that chimney, you get perhaps twice as much light, and save a dollar or two a year of chimney-money,

I send it free; am glad to.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

—The Missouri Sunday-school Association, being the interdenominational organization for Sunday-school work, holds its annual convention in St. Louis, Dec., 4-6. D. R. Wolfe, of this city, is president and is hoping for a large and profitable convention.

—If you have not yet ordered your exercises for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, do so at once. Do not neglect this home and state missionary training of the school. The future church should love and support home missions far more than we do now.

—We are asked to announce a debate on the music question at Henderson, Tenn., between J. Carroll Stark, of Illinois, and James Warlick, of Texas, beginning on the 24th inst. This is not an announcement of something that transpired twenty-five years ago, but of an actual, impending event.

—Frank J. Nichols, pastor of the West End Church, this city, asks us to announce that, owing to business engagements, it became impossible for Bro. J. F. Merryman to deliver his lectures at that church during this month as had been arranged. New dates will be announced later.

—A letter from Meade E. Dutt, who has charge of the church at Girard, Ill., brings us the sad intelligence of the departure from this life of his beloved wife, Oct. 12, in Jacksonville, Ill. Her death was the immediate result from a surgical operation. Brother Dutt has our sincere sympathies in his sad bereavement.

—W. A. Moore, writes: "I have just closed a three weeks' meeting at Centralia, Mo., with 114 additions. Have never labored with a more excellent congregation and have seldom if ever known of a man held in higher regard by all than E. M. Smith, the pastor. Will spend a couple of weeks in Putnam county and may be addressed at Lucerne."

—Let us carry the enthusiasm of the National Convention home with us. At Detroit, every one who heard the address of H. D. C. MacLachlan on "The Lion, the Lamb and the Child," resolved that hereafter we would certainly observe the proper training of our children in home missions. Let us do so by the proper observance of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day.

—F. O. Fannon recently closed a meeting at Stanford, Ky., with 28 additions. While Brother Fannon's work is especially adapted to cultivating the religious life of the membership, he never fails to have a good ingathering from without. In a personal note he says: "I feel more and still more the great need there is for meetings of this kind. When the church is better acquainted with Christ, and more thoroughly indwelt by Him, men and women in great numbers will be born into the kingdom daily." This is the true idea of New Testament evangelism. Brother Fannon has begun a meeting at Clinton, Mo., where Brother S. P. Hillman is pastor.

—Dr. Lowber has just completed his 16th annual course of lectures in T. C. U. His subjects were Luther, Calvin, Wesley, Campbell and their reformatory movements. Students and teachers were all highly pleased. He stated that he had never before seen such a large and mature body of students at T. C. U. The University is preparing for some large developments in the near future.

FRANK MARSHALL.

—As an indication of the readiness of churches to entertain our National Conventions the following responses to a paragraph in last week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST are published: "We note what you say about the movements of the National Convention and this is to notify all concerned that Little Rock, Ark., is in the field for the convention when it turns southward, say in 1906 or 1907."

J. N. JESSUP.

Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 6, 1903.

As to your statement in the "Our Budget" in this week's CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST that the National Convention "ought to swing back somewhere near the center in 1906," I think Columbus will be a candidate for that year. Before that time we will have a magnificent auditorium on Broad Street, we have plenty of hotel and restaurant accommodations. Columbus is the capital of that state which raises large sums for all our missionary enterprises. Do you say "Columbus 1906?"

WALTER SCOTT PRIEST, Central Church.

Columbus, O., Nov. 7.

—Prof. D. R. Dungan, of the Bible department of Christian University, has placed at the disposal of Drake University, his old homestead in Des Moines, consisting of eleven acres, which is to be platted into lots and sold at public auction Nov. 10, 1903. One-third of the proceeds of this sale goes to Drake University. Here is a good opportunity for making a good investment, helping a good institution and incidentally benefitting a good man, all in one.

—The quarterly report of the First Christian Church at Sedalia, Mo., shows that the church, under the leadership of Bro. J. M. Rudy, is moving along successfully in all its lines of work. We notice that in a membership of from 550 to 600 the number contributing to current expenses during the quarter covered by this report, was 149. This is about the proportion, we think, that obtains in a large number of our churches, and indicates a great defect somewhere in the financial training of our membership.

—J. Murray Taylor has resigned his work at Madison, Ind., after a ministry of three years. The resignation to take effect on the last Lord's day in December. During his ministry more than 200 have been received in the church, most all by baptism, and nearly all at the regular services. The church has completed its house of worship and has paid every dollar of its indebtedness. It has advanced along all missionary lines, and the church and minister worked together harmoniously. He writes: "My successor, who is not yet chosen, will find a delightful field in which to labor, and a better set of men and women will be hard to find than compose the membership of this church. An able man wanting a good field may address W. A. Barber, clerk."

—Comparative statement of receipts for October, 1902 and 1903:

	1902	1903	Gain
Contributing churches	472	403	31
Am. rec'd from " "	$4,776.11	$5,474.10	$697.99
Individuals	2,128.68	1,358.13	770.55x
Totals	$6,904.79	$6,832.23	$72.56x
Note.	x less than the same month last year.

It will be noticed there is a falling off of $72.56 this year as compared with October, 1902. There is a healthy gain from the churches, but a falling behind in individual receipts, due to the fact that $500 was received on the Annuity Plan last year in the month of October and no similar gift this year. Churches that have promised to take the offering should not fail to remit early in November, and there are many other churches that have not yet had fellowship in this work who should send an offering before the close of 1903. Remit to G. W. Muckley, Cor. Sec., 600 Water Works Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

—Thinking perhaps there are many of our readers who are unacquainted with the Old People's Home and its needs, we take this means of assuring them we would greatly appreciate contributions from individuals or congregations. In packing your boxes put in anything you could make use of in your own homes; wearing apparel, especially underwear, for our old ladies, bed clothing, towels, table linen, dishes and eatables. Fruit is better packed in barrels. Send all articles, freight or express prepaid, to Old People's Home, Grave Street, Jacksonville, Ill. Be sure to mark plainly and send name and address of donor to Ethel D. Hayden, corresponding secretary, 344 W. College Avenue, Jacksonville, Ill.

—John A. Stevens has changed his address from Chickasha, I. T., to 315 Main St., Dallas, Tex. He writes: "I am engaged in city evangelism in the southwest. We have bought a lot in East Dallas for $2,100 and have erected our tabernacle, which, when completed, will cost us $1,000. Within six weeks from beginning we will have bought lot, built tabernacle, organized church and Sunday-school, Ladies' Aid Society, etc. Such is the work we are doing under the direction of the American Christian Missionary Society. When this work is safely on its feet, we will go to another city and help them to do likewise." That is certainly doing the Lord's business, and in a very apostolic fashion. This is the kind of work you are helping when you are contributing to home missions.

—Elsewhere will be found a communication from the secretary of the new Board of Evangelism, to which we call attention as the beginning of a work which promises large results. All the unusual steps will be noted with interest. In a personal letter from the chairman of the board, Bro. H. O. Breeden, he speaks most hopefully of the outlook. The plan for the present, at least, and we think it is a wise one, is to rely on personal contributions from men of means and of liberal hearts for the support of the evangelists who are to be sent into needy and promising fields to hold meetings and organize churches. This would be an important department of our home mission work. A sort of "flying-wedge" for our church militant. We trust our business men will put themselves in touch with this board and give it means of accomplishing great work the coming year.

—Elmer Ward Cole has tendered his resignation as pastor of the church at Falls City, Neb., which he has served a whole year. His resignation is to take effect Jan. 31, 1904. He resigns to accept a call from the church at Hutchinson, Kan. In his letter of resignation, published in the Falls City News, he expresses the highest appreciation of the kindness he has received from the church and his deep concern for their future welfare. The condition of the church is entirely satisfactory, and he hopes it will succeed in securing his successor before he leaves. The local paper, referring to his resignation, says: "That this gifted young man will leave Falls City, will be regretted by every man, woman and child in town. Mrs. Cole, who has contributed much to her husband's success, often filling the pulpit in his absence, is a tireless worker and a most popular lady."

—I. N. McCash, pastor of the University Place Church at Des Moines, has resigned his pastorate there on account of declining health to take effect Dec. 1, provided satisfactory arrangements can be made for supplying the pulpit by that time. In his own letter to the official board and members of the University Place Church, he speaks tenderly of the harmonious relations that have existed between himself and the church during the more than ten years he has been with them. "No inharmonious chord has been struck, no fractious spirit bred, and only good will and brotherly love have blossomed and borne fruit during these happy years. Declining health, perceptible for almost a year, and for the past month sufficient to incapacitate me, compels me to take this step. Upon thorough examination of physicians, assurance is given that the recent attack of bronchitis and pleurisy, renders change of climate or change of position imperative." The Des Moines paper containing the pastor's letter, of which the above is a brief extract, adds that Brother McCash may enter the service of the anti-saloon league in the state for time being, in the hope that a change of occupation and rest from pastoral labor will bring needed restoration. Brother McCash's numerous friends will join us in the sincere wish and prayer that his health may soon be restored, and that he may be able to resume the work of the ministry in which he has been so greatly blessed.

—We invite attention to Dr. Dorchester's interesting article on Methodism and Federation. It is a noteworthy fact that every great reformatory movement in the church has had its birth in a broad, Catholic spirit, and a generous openmindedness to truth. The movement may, and probably always does, undergo a change in that respect, and become narrower, gradually hardening, in some cases into a sect; but in the beginning it was not so. As every true reformation has for its object a return to original Christianity, so every attempt to "reform the reformation" must seek to revive the spirit and aim of its originators. Methodists are, most of them at least, ready for federation with other churches in promoting the general interests of the kingdom, but they, no less than the Disciples, would refuse to enter into any sort of federation that would bind them to any course of action that would be contrary to their convictions of duty. But nobody proposes any such federation.

—The American Institute of Sacred Literature desires to announce the publication, Nov. 15, of an address by President William Rainey Harper, of the University of Chicago, on "Bible Study and Personal Experience." The address was delivered in October, 1903, before the Young Men's Christian Association of Chicago and the Illinois Association of Baptist Young People. The institute wishes to make this address, which embodies the strongest possible plea for Bible study as a factor in the growth and development of the personal religious life, accessible to as large a number of persons as possible. It therefore offers the pamphlet at the actual cost of publication to all ministers, Bible teachers and others interested in the theme which it presents. The distribution of copies of this pamphlet in any church or community ought to increase the number of Bible students and deepen the desire for growth in the religious life by the eminently practical process of the word of God. Address, The American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

—On Oct. 4 M. L. Bates, pastor of the Warren Church of Disciples of Christ preached his second anniversary sermon upon "Our One Hundredth Year." On Sept. 3, 1803, the Concord Baptist Church was organized. A few years later, it passed without change in organization into a church of the Disciples. The year's report was encouraging in growth in numbers, in offerings and in spiritual life. The additions for the year were 263, the net gain being 190. The roll of active resident members is about 960. The average attendance in Bible-school for the year was 394. A mission Bible-school has been organized in the south part of the city. The total amount of money raised for all religious and philanthropic work was about $7,850. The missionary offerings included in the above amount were almost 2,000, enabling the church to assume the support of three missionaries, one each under the foreign, American and state boards. A lot has been purchased for a new church on the west side of the city. An assistant for the pastor has been kept all the year. The new year has begun with promise of greater blessings from God upon his work in that city.

—J. H. Mohorter has severed his relations with the church at Boston to accept the pastorate at Pueblo, Colo. This step has been necessitated by the serious condition of his wife's health, and greatly to the regret of both pastor and people. It was one of these happy unions which might well last a lifetime, but for such unforeseen facts as we have mentioned. Brother Mohorter has not only won the esteem of the church to which he ministered, but has made for himself a large place in the social and civic life of Boston. A few days ago the Good Citizenship Movement, in which he has been an active worker, gave him a farewell reception. A large company assembled to do him honor, among whom were several distinguished men of Boston, who not only bore cheerful testimony to his work among them, but presented him with a fine dress-suit case in behalf of the Reform people of Boston. We sincerely trust that the church at Boston may succeed in securing a pastor who will carry on the work which has been so greatly prospered under Brother Mohorter's administration. The church at Pueblo is certainly to be congratulated on securing a pastor who is so able to lead them in larger usefulness. We sincerely trust that Sister Mohorter may regain her health as the result of this removal and change of climate.

Baltimore, Md., Notes.

Harlon Avenue will have a week of rally. The idea will be to get the local pastors to assist in the rally. It is a fine idea; it has a two-fold meaning. 1. It will revive the church. 2. It brings the churches closer together.

Peter Ainslie is now hustling his new church building. Peter makes things go around him. In a short time he will have a fine new building, and at the same time he is going to keep the old building in service.

We are having good times at the Riverside Park Church. Money is coming in on nearly every mail. Come now, brethren, and help us raise the one thousand by Thanksgiving Day. I take pleasure in reporting the following amounts: Gov. F. M. Drake, $25; Miss Mary Pryor, $5; Mrs. Weillip, $1; Mrs. Emig, $5; a friend, $1; Mr. McMillian, $1. I also have a letter from a gentleman, who is not even a member of the Christian Church, who says: "Go on and raise as much as you can, and I will give you ten per cent of all you raise. This man lives right here in the city, and gives because this is a good work. I pray that our brethren will send in the amount. One thousand by thanksgiving is the watchword. This means that the church is well established.

Send all money to J. O. Shelburne, 1531 Belt Ave., Baltimore, Md., P. S.

Have just received a letter from Miss Ada Gorman, saying she will give us a contribution on this work. Miss Gorman, the daughter of Senator A. P. Gorman, has given considerable before. Keep coming.

We commenced our meeting yesterday (Sunday, Nov. 1). I am doing my own preaching. We had two confessions in the morning service and three at the night service, all of them heads of families. We will continue the meeting over three Sundays, perhaps longer. We are expecting great results. This is the third meeting I have held in the church with home forces. We had about 100 confessions in the first two. We hope for better results in this meeting.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the announcement of Wilfred Smith & Co., American Tract Building, New York, in this issue, offering to supply church societies with souvenir paper weights containing pictures of their church building or pastor or both at 12 1/2 cents each in gross lots. They can readily be sold at 25 cents each, leaving the handsome sum of $18 profit to help pay running expenses or the interest on your mortgage. It furnishes the members with a much desired opportunity of securing a most acceptable souvenir in lasting form of their church and pastor. Business men readily contribute to your work in this way by buying a dozen or more of the weights, as it gives them a souvenir that is both attractive and useful. Many of our churches having tried this plan have found it so popular that they have ordered a second and third gross in order to supply the demand. We heartily recommend this proposition to our readers and believe it would be well to write for their handsome booklet, giving full description of their plan for supplying the souvenirs.

New Church at Champaign, Ill.

The University Place Christian Church, Champaign, Ill., was dedicated on October 11, 1903, J. H. Gilliland, of Bloomington, officiating. Of the sermons it may be said that when Brother Gilliland was through the people knew that the Disciples have a message, and they also understood its nature and object.

The new house is modern and up to date in its location, structure, and equipment, having been planned and builded with strict reference to business Christianity. The accompanying cut gives a correct external view of the Springfield Avenue and Wright Street sides. It is with pleasure that we report the building dedicated free of debt, and with an overplus of between two and three thousand dollars, so that no money was asked for on dedication day, other than a free will thank offering; the surplus funds are to be devoted to the placing of a new organ.

Besides the main audience and Sunday-school rooms, the house is provided with minister's study, parlors, committee rooms, kitchen and dining room. When all bills shall have been settled, the total cost will not be far from $25,000.

Too much praise can not be given the building committee, Messrs Vennum, Robeson and White, for so successfully carrying to completion the work committed to it. It is no more than simple justice to mention the names of recent ministers whose faithful labors have led up to, and have made this success possible. E. C. Stark, Dr. Ross, and W. P. Shamhart each did excellent and necessary work preceding J. W. Knight, under whose ministry the building was commenced and continued until his death in early summer in Redlands, California, to which place he had gone in the hope of regaining his health. Under the labor of the present pastor, Stephen E. Fisher, the house has been brought to its completion, and the congregation now feels that, equipped as it is, a great work can and must be done for the Master.

At the communion service in the afternoon both the congregation and many friends from neighboring churches participated; it was indeed an inspiring service; a new communion service, a gift from former pastor Shamhart and family, was used for the first time in this service.

At 3:30 in the afternoon a fellowship service was held in which almost all of the ministers of the Protestant churches of Champaign and Urbana participated; kindly words were spoken of the work done and of the outlook; these were not only complimentary, but truly encouraging. With gratitude for God's blessings in the past and with hope in His leadership for the future, we press onward, and for whatever success may come, His shall be the praise.

Boys' and Girls' Rally Day.

It is frequently the case that in communities where there is no resident preacher, there are many good Christians who would like to have Thanksgiving services upon the national observance day. We would suggest to such communities that the exercise for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day could be used upon that day with great enjoyment and profit.

The Boys' and Girls' Rally Day exercise would make a fine program for the observance of Thanksgiving Day where there is to be no preaching service. It may be had free by writing to the corresponding secretary of the American Christian Missionary Society at Cincinnati, O. We advise our churches and schools so situated to write for it.

The money received from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is used in establishing new churches, strengthening the weak points and building up the cause generally in America. One-half the proceeds is returned pro rata to the states contributing, to be used in the state work. So the children are being trained for large usefulness in state and national home work and the Sunday-schools are playing an important part in making this Immanuel's land. We hope every school in our state will observe Boys' and Girls' Rally Day in November.

Fifteen thousand dollars could easily be raised by the Sunday-schools of the Disciples for home missions this year. We are glad to see the home board asking this much, at least. There is no doubt about it, the missions of the future must be supported by the boys and girls of to-day. Plans for the future are more than doubled every year. The proper enlistment of our children is the wise movement for to-day.

More Sundays-schools have enlisted in the home mission campaign by ordering supplies for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day than ever known before. This is a healthy sign that the establishment of the Master's kingdom in our own land is esteemed of first importance. Certainly our unprecedented growth as a people presses upon us the necessity of taking rank with the most liberal givers in the Lord's work. It is coming to be known as a truism that the live schools are the mission-

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels; it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

ary schools, and equal stress is laid upon all branches of the missionary work as never before. We would advise all our schools to order supplies for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day at an early day.

The office of the American Christian Missionary Society is busy filling orders for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, the children's fall festival for home missions. It is a matter of congratulation that our Bible-schools are becoming stronger supporters of home missions every year.

The exercise for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day is simpler than usual this year, though quite as attractive as any previous issue. This celebration is annually becoming more popular and is becoming as much an event in the life of the Bible-schools as Children's Day in June.

We feel like urging our Bible-school workers to take up the observance of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day this year. Our schools gave nearly $7,000 to home missions last year. We ought to raise $15,000 for that arm of the service for next year. This year's observance, it should be remembered, is counted in 1904, because the fiscal year closes Sept. 30.

Christian Church, Champaign, Ill.

Dedication at St. Elmo, Ill.

It was a very brave undertaking for a little band of only thirty-six Disciples, none of them very wealthy, at St. Elmo, Ill., to undertake to build a fine, commodious and modern house of worship. But great as the undertaking was, that is just what they not only undertook to do, but what they have actually accomplished.

The house is of brick, stone and slate. It is modern in all of its appointments. In addition to a large, beautiful auditorium, it has a lecture room, Sunday-school room, baptistry, robing rooms, etc. The windows are stained glass; it is lighted with electric lights and heated with a furnace. There is a tower and corner entrance, and is seated with circular seats. It is neatly furnished; and in every respect it is a comfortable and pleasant house of worship.

Bro. E. S. Thompson is the hard working and successful pastor of the church. He was to continue with a protracted meeting following the dedication, and we shall expect to hear of a large ingathering into the church.

Lord's day, Nov. 1, was the time selected for its formal opening and dedication. The weather was unfavorable, as it rained both morning and night just at the time of going to meeting.

There was an indebtedness of $4,000 to provide for. This looked like a large sum for the little band of thirty-six to raise. We asked for that amount. The Ladies' Aid Society led out with a pledge of $500, then a good brother with another $500, then five others with $250 each, then $100, then $75, then $50, etc., until more than $3,000 was raised, when the morning session closed. At night we asked for the remainder. The ladies gave $200 more, and other pledges followed rapidly until the whole $4,000 was raised, and with songs of rejoicing and solemn prayer the house was given to Almighty God. It was a day of great prayer, of great giving and of great rejoicing. God greatly bless the church at St. Elmo.

Missouri Bible-school Notes.

What steps are you taking toward boys and girl's rally day, the Sunday before Thanksgiving, or any other Sunday for that matter. The material is all ready and will be sent you free by B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio.

The Bible-schools gave nearly seven thousand dollars to home missions last year and ought to easily make it fifteen this year. The exercise is splendid, the children are willing, the brethren will come, now will you not see that the preparation is made for a great day in this great cause of Christ.

The decision of J. C. Todd to accept the call to Monroe City is right hard on the work and workers at Boonville, faithful and devoted as they are, and it is to be hoped that some good man will do the work for them that J. C. Todd and his good wife were doing. D. L. Davis and the Judge are a team in church work.

R. B. Havener reports bright outlook for a new congregation and new church house and new Bible school at Climax where he is now working day and night for Christ and the salvation of souls, and most successfully too.

W. A. Moore has closed at Centralia with 117 additions, and as usual, many of them are from the Bible-school, encouraging such workers that much the more. W. A. Moore has had 250 additions in the last two months, but is all the time putting in good strokes for the cause of childhood, the cause he loves so strong.

Remember, fifty per cent of the offering on boy's and girl's rally day goes to state Bible-school work and fifty per cent to general home missions, so that every school in Missouri should keep the day and take the offering.

M. J. Nicoson's great meeting at Memphis; 42 additions, closed with nearly all of the Bible-school in the fellowship, just such good work as this man and those workers do. G. H.

Hendrickson closed at Crawford with 37 additions.

Leonard is one of the schools in Shelby, out of the way, but in a fine community, that never fails in supporting this cause, this year nearly doubling their apportionment. J. H. Wood preaches for them, J. B. Garnett superintends.

Dadeville this year made their first offering to any mission, giving a good offering to benevolence and foreign missions. Church is thirty years old.

Dade county meeting was good, interest fine, but churches poorly represented. Greenfield entertained handsomely and gives to all good work, the only school in the county that does, while one school superintendent admitted they never gave to anything. Poor prospects ahead for that sort of a school.

Shelbyville is one of the growing schools and one hearty in all good works. Will Mitchell as a superintendent is first class, while the co-operation of the workers is what makes it all successful in Christ.

Berea is one of the country schools that does its best for Christ and the children, but needs so much the help of the parents. Havener will help them.

Do not forget to help us, brethren, we need it, we deserve it, you should give it.

The Jamaica Relief Fund.

Four thousand dollars has been received to date, to relieve the suffering among our brethren in the island of Jamaica. This is a fine offering, but only about half enough to meet demands. Churches not represented in the above will surely fall into line now, for the need still continues.

The latest word from the island is under date of Oct. 13. It is an amended statement from the Relief Committee sent out by the English government. In this two things are made prominent. First, in the suffering districts all food supplies are exhausted and there is no hope of relief from the ground for five months. Second, that in the distribution of relief it is found extremely difficult to reach the really deserving ones.

These statements but confirm what has already been written. Our people are suffering for food, and none will reach them unless we send it. Arrangements are already on foot by which the chapels are to be rebuilt and work, and hence food, given to our suffering brethren. Will not these facts induce every church and multitudes of individuals to send help at once? Address Helen E. Moses, Sec., 152 East Market St., Indianapolis, Ind.

IT IS A JOY TO BE CURED.

Painful Piles Become Painless at Once
and are Cured in Short Time.

It almost pays to have the piles so great is the feeling of relief when Pyramid Pile Cure is applied. They are in the form of suppositories and reach the affected parts at once, and the pain ceases and a mild feeling of ease and comfort takes its place. The healing process begins immediately and continues as long as the cure is administered until the sufferer is perfectly and completely well.

How much more sensible is this method than the barbarous torture inflicted by the knife and instruments? How much more satisfactory to be able to administer a simple, effective remedy in the privacy of the home than to submit to the humiliation of an examination and operation in the physician's chair!

Pyramid Pile Cure cures piles to stay cured. Thousands and thousands of sufferers the country over have found this out through the testimony of their friends and others, and the sale of this remedy is increasing enormously every week and month. It is certainly a glorious thing to be able to make great numbers of people happy, and nothing will cause happiness so much or do it so quickly as relief from pain and a cure of a dreadful disease. The proprietors of Pyramid Pile Cure, therefore, have a great feeling of gratification and happiness themselves when the letters from former sufferers come pouring in on them telling of the wonderful cures and rejoicing and giving thanks for their deliverance from this terrible disease.

Pyramid Pile Cure is for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a package, or will be sent at once in plain wrapper on receipt of price by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich.

A Day in the Presence of Royalty.

I have been spending a day or two among royalty. Have you? I was at the time in the royal presence enjoying a vacation in the foot-hills of the Rocky Mountains, the guest of a rancher, king of all his possessions, a lord of creation, monarch of all he surveyed. Hospitality was a habit in this great stone house in the canon, where dwelt father, mother, one daughter and two sons.

This lord of creation when riding among his numerous flocks was accompanied by two large stag hounds, royal beasts, protector of the flocks and herds against the coyote and wolves. His herds lead by royally bred animals, the creations of the great king. While we dwelt in the valley still we could and did lift up our eyes unto the "everlasting hills." They began by gently undulating, rising higher one on another till they reached the climax in Long's Peak, king of Colorado mountains, while Mt. Meeker, his consort, lifted its head almost as high.

The sun was just setting, casting long shadows across the valleys, while on the peaks it casts silvery rays, or they were darkly silhouetted against the sun. To the north of Long's Peak floated a cloud lit by all the rays of a setting sun, fiery sometimes, subdued and softened in color at others as it hung around the jagged peak. To the south rose in their columns, the smoke of a forest fire, an evening incense to the Most High. Could any man stand and thus see nature at her devotions and say "There is no God." They do. It would be a radical change to be taken from the busy walks of life to meet the King, but to be taken from such a scene as this would be a slight transition. Thus may we be in his royal presence, and feel his power by seeing his handiworks and be led to a state of feeling him always near, the King, our Father in heaven, who loves us and cares for us and has "made us kings and priests unto his own Father and our God."

Organization of Pastoral Helpers.

During the National Convention at Detroit a conference in the interests of pastoral helpers was held, after which a permanent organization was formed. At the conference Geo. T. Campbell, of Chicago, John Pounds, Cleveland, P. H. Welshimer, Canton, M. L. Bates, Warren, and A. M. Harvuot, Cincinnati, spoke upon different phases of the needs and advantages of helpers. The work of the School of Pastoral Helpers was explained by A. M. Harvuot and Geo. A. Miller. The testimony of several helpers as to the needs of special training for such work was added. It was voted to ask for thirty minutes on the national program next year at St. Louis to present the claims of this work. A brief constitution was adopted and officers elected. About forty helpers were enrolled as charter members. All ladies engaged in this work are earnestly requested to send their names and addresses to the secretary and to write her about every three months concerning their whereabouts and desires. In this way, pastors desiring helpers may be put in communication with those available. Do not neglect to do this. Miss Virginia Hearne, Lexington, Ky., was appointed to be a press committee to keep this work before the people in our church publications.

The value of the training received at the School of Pastoral Helpers was attested by many who had taken the work there. The president, A. M. Harvuot, will gladly give information to all about it. The winter term, beginning Jan. 5, 1904, is a good time to enter.

The annual meetings of the Pastoral Helpers' Association will be held in connection with the National Christian Missionary Convention, at which time officers will be elected for the ensuing year. The following are the officers for 1903-1904. President, Mrs. N. H. McCorkle, 345 Orange St., Cleveland, O.; 1st. vice-president, Miss Lottie Nichol, 617 Richmond St., Cincinnati, O.; 2nd vice-president, Miss Nancy Gordon, Lexington, Mo.; secretary and treasurer, Mary A. Johnson, 315 Porter Ave., Warren, O.

National Evangelism.

To-day a quorum of the members appointed by the Detroit Convention met at the Central Church, Des Moines, Ia., and organized the Board of National Evangelism.

The idea of a committee or separate board to promote general evangelistic effort among all the churches, support capable evangelists in new fields, and establish a bureau of information for churches and preachers has been mooted several years; but Brother Breeden has secured its recognition and the appointment of a board. The following officers were elected: H. O. Breeden, President; D. F. Givens, recording secretary; E. A. Nye, treasurer, with headquarters at Des Moines.

A national secretary will be announced soon. The board has begun to enroll our evangelists, and will give information to churches seeking help. It will strive to arouse pastors to hold protracted meetings in their own or other congregations and to encourage churches to allow their pastor to further the cause of Christ in this way.

There can be, and ought to be, five thousand gospel meetings held by our people in America this fall and winter. Such a movement will then enlist but half of the churches and our pulpit force. As a people, the Disciples of Christ are evangelistic, and to lose the spirit of propaganda or smother the desire to save the world, is to forfeit our claim to be loyal to the head of the church who said, "Go disciple all nations, baptizing them into the name of the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit."

This movement is one of supreme importance, for upon successful evangelism depends all our missionary and benevolent enterprises. Ingatherings multiply churches, increase in the (3) number of churches, swells the offerings to all the funds of the societies.

Address all inquiries to H. O. Breeden or D. F. Givens, Des Moines, Ia.

The Invasion of the Mountains.

The students of the Volunteer Band of the College of the Bible of K. U. who preached in the mountains of eastern Kentucky during the vacation, held a rally in Broadway Christian Church Wednesday night, Oct. 7th. Bro. Barclay Meador, president of the Y. M. C. A. of College of the Bible, where the plan originated, presided over the meeting. Addresses were made by Brothers C. A. Van Winkle, C. M. Summers, Walter Carter, John Lord and Gayle Spencer. Bro. H. W. Elliott, secretary of State Board of Missions, and Bro. H. J. Derthick, of Berea, also delivered addresses.

Most of the twenty-seven young men who joined this Volunteer Band and preached in the mountains were present. This band of young men, during the summer, baptized 180 persons and received into the church 95 persons who had previously been baptized, making a total of 275 additions. They made about 600 visits to the homes of the mountain people, preached, in the aggregate, 400 sermons, and spent 400 days in the field.

The work was carried on under the auspices of the A. C. M. S. and the Kentucky State Board. The traveling expenses were paid by these boards, which were about $200.

Bro. R. B. Neal, of Grayson, superintended the work in the field. The success of the movement has fired the young men of the university with a desire to go to that field, and we expect a much larger band next year and very much larger results.

But it must be remembered that this does not by any means represent all the work done by students of the university during the summer. The students of the university in different sections of Kentucky, and in other states, received into the church 1,245 persons; 1,159 of these were by primary obedience and 86 from the denominations, or restored to fellowship.

The Situation at Hot Springs.

On my return home a number of inquiries awaited me. For the benefit of those who are interested in the effort to build a centrally located church house here, I will say we have purchased the lot; we pay $1,000 down, $1,000 in one and two years, and the balance the third year. That the "Clark Fund" at Cincinnati, O., carries the pastor's salary on condition that a like amount is put in the building fund. This arrangement insures success, and we feel that the administrators of the "Clark Fund" have saved Hot Springs to the whole brotherhood, for which they deserve the thanks of all our people. Many have asked about sending money. Yes, by all means, if you wish part in this work. We have yet $1,000 on the lot unprovided for; besides, there is the house to build when the lot is paid for, and we ought to have a house large enough to meet the full need of the location in protracted meeting work.

Send in your offering now, and the money will be paid on the lot. It is so arranged that we can pay for the lot sooner if we so desire. Let none who have been here and seen the situation and determined to give a large amount hesitate; send it right on at once and a receipt will be sent. Address Thomas Bleasoe, treasurer, or myself. We will try and keep you posted from time to time as to the progress of the work. T. N. KINCAID.

CHICAGO.
Last week I started to wash with your 1900 Ball-Bearing Washer. A neighbor saw me wash my little boys' waists (which were terribly dirty) and we were both surprised to see there was not a spot left. On Monday we did a big wash of 15 machines full and the work was done in 4 hours. It is the best machine I ever saw (and I have tried many). It works so easy that my little boy can run it.

WASHING EASY AT 81 YEARS OLD.

WHEELER, S. Dak.
I am more than pleased with the 1900 washer. Last week my mother, an old lady 81 years, helped me do my washing. She sat on a chair and did a large 2 weeks wash with ease, and as she said, without even perspiring and it was 90 in the shade.

Enclosed please find P. O. order. My wife is very much pleased with the washer. This speaks volumes for it, owing to her being prejudiced against all washers. All who have seen it think it the best and easiest washing machine they have ever seen.

Harrison, O., Nov. 4, 1903.

CALIFORNIA.—Vacaville, Nov. 3.—F. H. Lemon, of Lake City, Ia., evangelist, and D. W. Honn, Visalia, Cal., singer, have just closed a three weeks' meeting with J. E. Denton, pastor, at Vacaville, resulting in 22 accessions: 19 confessions, 2 by commendation and one from 1st Day Adventists. Three others made the confession in our meetings and were baptized into the Baptist Church.

COLORADO.—Fort Collins, Nov. 3.—There have been nine additions here recently. We celebrate our freedom from debt next Sunday evening by burning the mortgage. The church has granted the pastor and his wife a month's leave of absence. I go to Albany, Oregon, for a meeting. F. O. Fannon will assist us in a meeting here in January.—WM. J. LOCKHART.

ILLINOIS.—West Salem, Nov. 3.—Just closed a short meeting at Falmouth with 3 additions: baptized 2, one from the United Brethren. I will begin a meeting at Marion Church next Saturday.—G. W. TATE.

Centralia, Oct. 31.—Our meeting here moves along nicely with additions almost every service.—H. C. PATTERSON.

Harristown, Nov. 5.—Have just closed a short meeting with 17 additions, 14 by baptism.—W. H. HARDING.

Blue Mound—Recently closed a four weeks' meeting here with 14 additions, principally young men. Miss Margaret B. Windsor, of Muncie, Ind., assisted as singing evangelist. She is a splendid leader of songs, and her solo work is excellent. The church has secured the most desirable lots and will erect a new church building in the spring. I have been called for a second year.—H. J. HOSTETLER.

Eureka, Nov. 6.—Baptized 10 young men last Wednesday night. E. T. Powell begins with us Monday night. Out of 33 baptisms in the past year, 20 were young men.—A. W. TAYLOR.

ciety of 16 active and five associate members was organized.—WILLIS M. CUNNINGHAM.

Waveland, Nov. 5.—I recently closed a two weeks' meeting at Browns Valley, Ind., with three additions; one by confession, one from the Baptist, one by letter. The church is united and hopeful.—E. E. MOORMAN.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Pryor Creek, Nov. 2.—We have just closed an eighteen days' meeting at this place, with Brother Randolph Cook, of Vinita, as evangelist. Twenty-four were added to the church, 14 of whom came by confession and baptism. The cause has been greatly strengthened. The secret of Brother Cook's good work among us is that he sticks close to the Book and preaches the gospel with earnestness and power. One of the chief benefits of the meeting is that our plea for union is better understood by all, and seed has been sown that will bring results in later years.—F. HOOKER GROOM.

Kingfisher, Nov. 3.—Sunday, Oct. 18, was a great day with us. A debt of $500 was standing against the church; $410 was raised Sunday, and the greater part of the remainder the next day. An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To
The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made So Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Seven years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Three years ago the Physician's Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicose, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, at 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

some ten more days. I baptized two converts recently also for the Prices Branch Church.—G. F. ASSITER.

Warrensburg, Nov. 2.—I closed a two weeks' meeting at Lee's Summit last night. Had 10 additions. L. D. Sprague, of California, Mo., had charge of the music. I commend him to any pastor or evangelist needing a singer. I will close a three years' pastorate with the Lee's Summit Church, Dec. 6. Working with home forces, there have been 112 additions to the membership.—KING STARK.

Lexington, Nov. 3.—L. J. Marshe'll, of Independence, held a meeting of two weeks for us here at Lexington. Results, 16 added and church very much edified.—R. B. BRINEY.

Centralia, Nov. 2.—Our meeting closed with 114 additions, and two more were added yesterday. Bro. W. A. Moore was with us three weeks. His faith in the simple gospel, plain preaching and large sympathy make him a strong man in evangelistic work. Our state Bible-school work is fortunate in having such a man in the field. Notable features of the meeting were, having baptisms 15 nights in succession and the large number of families made whole in the Lord.—E. M. SMITH.

Bowling Green, Nov. 3.—I closed a 12 day's meeting in this place Friday night, Oct. 30, with six additions, four baptisms, one of them a Jew. Bro. J. D. Powell did the preaching, except on Lord's day. Brother Powell has just begun work with Clarksville Church. He makes pale, thin children fat and chubby. Overcomes wasting tendencies and brings back rosy cheeks and bright eyes.

It's surprising how quickly children respond to Scott's Emulsion. It contains just the element of nourishment their little bodies need. They thrive on it.

Even a few drops in the baby's bottle have a noticeable effect for good. Nothing better than Scott's Emulsion for growing children.

is a young man of much promise. Devoted, humble and very competent for one of his age. We greatly enjoyed his preaching and companionship.—E. J. LAMPTON.

Pattonsburg, Nov. 2.—Meeting five days old, and rain every night but one. Only fair attendance so far. Four added; since the weather is so much better to-day we hope for better attendance and results.—CHARLES RICHARD LAWTER.

Mound City, Nov. 6.—Closed meeting at Fairfax, Mo., Nov. 3, Tuesday evening, with 10 additions; five confessions and five by letter also three added by letter in September and two in October, making 15 added since last Lord's day in August, when we began work there. One from the Baptist at Elmo, Mo., in October.—J. N. COLE, Pastor.

Joplin, Nov. 5.—Our great meeting with Harlow and Ridenour is nearing a close. It is now 33 days old with 358 added. It is the talk of the city and surrounding country. There has not been an invitation without from one to twenty to respond. More about it later. South Joplin next.—W. F. TURNER.

Salisbury Nov. 3.—I held a good short meeting recently at Sturgeon, where I preach one-half of the time, in which there were 13 accessions. At Salisbury we are going to put in the foundation this fall for a new house and build the house in the spring. Began my third years' work last Sunday.—W. D. McCULLY.

Russellville, Nov. 6.—One years' work was as follows: Sermons, 75; additions, 18; money raised for all purposes, $2,000 organized or federated the churches against the liquor traffic, the result is a happy church a splendid house and clean town.—JOSEPH GAYLOR, Springfield, Mo.

Nevada.—A meeting of 26 days has just been concluded here. The pastor, G. D. Edwards, was assisted by the writer and Albert Bellingham, of Mansfield, Ohio. Brother Bellingham gave exceptional satisfaction as a leader of song and as a soloist. He is deeply spiritual and his voice has a sympathetic quality of exceeding effectiveness in religious work. There were eighty-nine accessions to the church, principally by baptism and the cause in Nevada was greatly helped. The pastor, G. D. Edwards, has done a splendid work and is deservedly popular with his people.—CHAS. M. SHARPE.

NEBRASKA.—Cluster, Nov. 4.—Our revival meeting closed last Sunday night with 8 additions: 1 confession, 2 by letter, 3 by statement, 1 reclaimed and 1 from the Saints Church. Bro. R. A. Schell did the preaching and we listened to some strong gospel sermons. The membership has nearly doubled since we began the work, Jan. 1, 1902. We still look forward to a greater work this year than is before us.—D. G. WAGNER.

Avoca, Nov. 5.—I closed here with October and commenced at North Bend Nov. 1. We have a splendid people here at Avoca; the work is in splendid shape. They want to locate a good man at once. Any one wishing to can write J. O. Rowland, Avoca, Neb.—J. B. WHITE.

OHIO.—Dayton, Nov. 6.—The West Side Church will have revival services in January, following the week of prayer with home forces. A class in "Campaigning for Christ," will be conducted in connection with the week of prayer services for personal workers.—G. B. STEWART, pastor.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY. — Lahoma, Oct. 28.—We have just closed a meeting here of three weeks which resulted in 27 additions: 20 by baptism, 6 by statement and 1 from the Congregationalists. This congregation was organized a year ago with 14 members, by David Martin, who is their pastor. Oct. 31 we begin a meeting at Glenella, five miles north of Lahoma, where Brother Martin has organized another congregation.—S. K. COATS, Washington, Ia.

Hobart, Nov. 2.—On last Sunday, Nov. 1, the beautiful $5,000 church edifice was dedicated here. All the ministers of the city accepted the cordial invitation of the congregation, tendered through the pastor, Bro. D. D. Boyle, and helped in the dedicatory service. The church has been manfully striving against great odds for the past two years to erect a suitable building, and now their rude tabernacle of 18x30 has given place to the structure 38x64 feet. Brother Boyle is leading this people out into a great work, and our plea as never before is engaging the attention of our people.—H. W. DILL.

Oklahoma City, Nov. 4.—S. D. Dutcher, pastor at Oklahoma City, assisted by C. M. Hughes, of Lexington, Ky., recently closed a three weeks' meeting with the church here. This meeting was designed to be educational. Much personal work was done. No fewer than fifteen hundred calls were made by the personal workers. Much valuable information was gathered. On last Lord's day the collection amounted to over $700. Twenty-six persons were added to the congregation. It is regarded as the most helpful meeting ever held in this city. Brother Dutcher is assisting J. T. Ogle, the faithful and successful pastor at Guthrie, in a meeting.

OREGON.—Salem, Oct. 31.—Nine added here during the month of October. Our work promises well, and we hope for good results.—D. ERRETT.

SOUTH CAROLINA.—Columbia, Nov. 4.—The First Church at Columbia, S. C., has been successful in securing the services of Bro. W. M. Taylor, who has been appointed general evangelist for the southern states by the American Christian Missionary Society to hold a protracted meeting of several weeks' duration, commencing on Lord's day, Nov. 8. This will be Brother Taylor's first meeting since his appointment, and the church at Columbia are congratulating themselves in their good fortune in securing such a valuable man at such an early date. We are making preparations for the success of the meeting in the way of advertising and sending out invitations by mail. We are also making preparation for the Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. We expect to get a large offering for home missions. This is one of the missionary churches, and we are training the boys and girls to give. We are without a pastor, Bro. M. B. Ingle having resigned, but we want a strong man here, one that is not afraid of work; but we have not the necessary amount of money to induce a man of this class to accept the pastorate. Columbia, S. C., is the garden spot of the southeast, with a population of 35,000, and increasing at the rate of 5,000 a year. The harvest is white and ready for our plea. Shall we have the man?—JOSEPH W. HELMS.

WASHINGTON.—Fairfield.—Bro. Smith and the writer closed a meeting at Mt. Hope, Wash., Nov. 1, with 26-17 by baptism, 14 gathered up, making 40 in all, organized and ready for work. The outlook is fine for a grand work this winter.—SMITH AND McCAULEY.

THE CURE OF SOULS.

By Leslie W. Morgan.

"On some have mercy, who are in doubt; and some save, snatching them out of the fire; and on some have mercy with fear; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh." Jude 22, 23, R. V.

This may be called Jude's method of treatment for the cure of souls. It is not so much a prescription, as it is a method of treatment; not the medicine, but the manner of administering it, for both the disease and the medicine are universally the same, being a question of sin, as the disease, on the one hand, and of Christ, as the Savior, on the other—but the manner of administering it must differ according to the diagnosis of each individual case.

The gospel is God's prescription for the cure of souls, but he has left it in our hands to diagnose the special cases and apply the remedy.

Jude here specifies three cases and gives the treatment for each: The Doubter. The Indifferent. The Morally Perverse.

I. "On some have mercy, who are in doubt."

The attitude of the church in the past toward the doubter is not a matter for pride. Those especially who have doubted some things only have been subjected to great persecution. The attitude of Jesus is very different. Perhaps no one ever had more doubt to deal with than did he. At his coming practically no one believed on him. "Neither did his brethren believe on him." And yet he was always the most courteous and considerate. Once he said: "If any man hear my words and believe not, I judge him not." He would not perform miracles to satisfy idle curiosity, but as an answer to honest doubt he was always ready to do so. On one occasion when the best prayer a man could offer, because of the doubt which had been engendered in his mind by the failure of the disciples to heal his son, was, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," Jesus at once met him on his own ground and healed his son. When Thomas doubted there was certainly room for rebuke, but instead Jesus gave him the evidence.

Our own treatment of doubt may well follow the example of Jesus and the suggestion of Jude: "On some have mercy." The best way to meet doubt is by the unanswerable argument of a life "full of mercy and good works."

II. "Some save, snatching them out of the fire."

This is the method of treatment for the indifferent. They must be treated as in immediate danger; and there is no one who is in greater danger than the indifferent—either the indifferent man of the world, or the indifferent, so called Christian. Their rescue requires intense earnestness on the part of the rescuer. A man does not announce a fire in a mild and unemotional manner; and if he did, no one would believe his statement. The indifference of the world will not be overcome until the actions of Christians indicate that they believe that there is immediate necessity of "snatching them out of the fire." Alas, it must too often be confessed, "I have no man like minded who will naturally care for your state."

"Look on my right hand and see;
For there is no man that knoweth me;
Refuge hath failed me;
No man careth for my soul."

This incident is related in "Out and Out." Charles Simeon was summoned to the bedside of a dying brother. Entering the room, his relative extended to him his hand, and with deep emotion said: "I am dying; and you never warned me of the state I was in, and of the danger to which I was exposing myself by neglecting the salvation of my soul!" Nay, my brother," replied Mr. Simeon, "I took every reasonable opportunity of bringing the subject of religion before your mind, and frequently alluded to it in my letters." "Yes," exclaimed the dying man, "you did, but that was not enough. You never came to me, closed the door, and took me by the collar of my coat, and told me that I was unconverted, and that if I died in that state I should be lost. And now I am dying; and but for God's grace I might have been forever undone." If better authority for earnestness is needed than this, recall the admonition: "Go out into the highways and hedges and compel them to come in."

III. "On some have mercy, with fear; hating even the garment spotted by the flesh."

This is the method to be used for the morally perverse. There are some who mistake gentleness and kindness toward the sinful for indifference concerning their sin. The 20th century New Testament renders this clause, "There are others to whom you must shew pity, but with caution." Just as there are some people who cannot stand too much kindness and attention without being spoiled and flattered, so there are those who must be given plain language concerning their sin. There is a place in every age for the language of Nathan: "Thou art the man!" This is contingent, however, on there being some one with the moral authority of a Nathan. Not every one has the credentials for cleansing the temple. It should be understood by example as well as precept that you "hate even the garment spotted by the flesh." If Christians hated sin more, the world would love it less.

Jesus was most merciful toward the penitent, but upon the impenitent he pronounced his woes. The same is true of Paul. Note his earnest admonition in the first Corinthian letter for them to put from them the man who was a fornicator, and then contrast his equally earnest plea in the second Corinthian letter for them to forgive him the offense, in view of his repentance, "lest he be swallowed up with over much sorrow."

No one should be led to trust in a false security; let them know there is danger in sin; "snatch them out of the fire;" "save with fear." Some people will be eternally lost because they have been born in a day when the old preaching of hell-fire and brimstone is out of date. Fear is the primary motive in their lives. No desiring to return to the former days and to preach again such sermons as "Sinners in the hands of an angry God," what shall be done? This: Preach with the utmost assurance concerning the terrible consequences of sin, both in this life and the life to come. "Fire and brimstone" is now accepted as a figure of speech, yet what must the reality be to require such a figure to describe it!

It was sin which fixed the gulf between Dives and Lazarus; it is sin that is capable of turning the world into a veritable hell, and the human heart into a consuming fire; it is sin that is the great enemy of the home, the bane of the state, and the arch fiend that haunts the individual soul; it is sin that pollutes the life, hardens the heart, numbs the brain and damns the soul; it is sin that at first produces a restless conscience, and finally sears as with a hot iron; it is sin that shuts out happiness in this life, and God and eternal felicity in the life to come. Let us, therefore, "become all things to all men, that by all means we may save some," if need be, "with fear." "Knowing therefore the terror of the Lord, we persuade men."

Let us not forget to "make a difference" (A. V.), distinguishing between the "honest doubter," the "indifferent" and the "morally perverse," remembering that while there is but one gospel, there are diversities of application, and that while there is but one disease

LET YOUR STOMACH HAVE ITS OWN WAY.

Do Not Try to Drive and Force it to Work When it is Not Able or You Will Suffer All the More.

You cannot treat your stomach as some men treat a balky horse; force, drive or even starve it into doing work at which it rebels. The stomach is a patient and faithful servant and will stand much abuse and ill treatment before it "balks," but when it does, you had better go slow with it and not attempt to make it work. Some people have the mistaken idea that they can make their stomachs work by starving themselves. They might cure the stomach that way, but it would take so long that they would have no use for a stomach when they got through. The sensible way out of the difficulty is to let the stomach rest if it wants to and employ a substitute to do its work.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do the work of your stomach for you and digest your food just as your stomach used to when it was well. You can prove this by putting your food in a glass jar with one of the tablets and sufficient water, and you will see the food digested in just the same time as the digestive fluids of the stomach would do it. That will satisfy your mind. Now, to satisfy both your mind and body, take one of Stuart's Dyspepsia tablets after eating—eat all and what you want—and you will feel in your mind that your food is being digested because you will feel no disturbance or weight in your stomach, in fact, you will forget all about having a stomach just as you did when you were a healthy boy or girl.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets act in a natural way because they contain only the natural elements of the gastric juices and other digestive fluids of the stomach. It makes no difference what condition the stomach is in, they go right ahead of their own accord and do their work. They know their business and surrounding conditions do not influence them in the least. They thus relieve the weak stomach of all its burdens and give it its much needed rest and permit it to become strong and healthy.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. They are so well known and their popularity is so great that a druggist would as soon think of being out of alcohol or quinine. In fact, physicians are prescribing them all over the land, and if your own doctor is real honest with you, he will tell you frankly that there is nothing on earth so good for dyspepsia as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

—sin—there are many manifestations of the same.

"Let him know that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and shall cover a multitude of sins."

Methodism and Church Federation.

"Go ask my wife!" so we feel like saying in answer to the question, "Are the Methodists disposed to join in federative church work?" "Go ask the Disciples, the Baptists, or the Presbyterians!"

We hope we are within the limits of denominational modesty when we say that, in the main, the Methodists are disposed with Mr. Wesley, still to emphasize the great vitalities of Christianity, both as regards Christian experience and service. We still feel the importance of aggressive evangelism, and are endeavoring to cultivate the "world parish" as if Wesley's spirit was still with us. Like him, too, we seek fresh adaptations to reach the unchurched masses of our times. At this point possibly all churches could learn timely lessons from Wesley, who had phenomenal success in reaching people with the gospel.

Ecclesiastical Trusts.

Theological differences between churches, which have been so sharp and divisive in the past, are fast disappearing, making union easier and federative work more practicable. Perhaps nothing is needed to-day more than Christian directness. Realizing the great needs before us we should make more direct and united efforts to minister to those needs. Possibly the modern trust in the mercantile world affords a pattern, in the way of organization, of what we might do, with a Christian purpose, to ally all Christian forces in the Master's business, asking not, What will be the effect upon our particular church? but, How can we best advance Christ's kingdom.

Unity and Diversity.

A suggestive example in effective federation is afforded by the people of East St. Louis during the floods of a few months ago. The urgent need was felt by all, as the river rose, to protect property and life from the encroaching waters. All citizens regardless of race, sex, creed, or station co-operated in various ways to strengthen and heighten the dike-defences, either furnishing the sand, the bags, or the food to sustain those who labored. Helping to the same end the citizens of St. Louis raised funds, furnished boats, provisions and various supplies; that their unfortunate neighbors might be relieved and sustained. Here is a splendid example of federative efforts embracing all classes of people, stirred by a common sense of need and common feelings of humanity. If we are ever to check the inundation of corruption and irreverence, of worldliness and selfishness, threatening the very life of our cities and citizens there must be more united work on the part of all good people, more non-partisanship in politics, more Christian charity, more religious tolerance, more church federation, more direct Christ-like service, bringing the gospel supplies to the needy world around us, each denomination and each Christian following more closely the Master's plan, "not to be ministered unto but to minister."

Christian Emulation.

Senator Beveridge in a speech last June voiced our sentiments when he said, Methodism says to every sister church: "Surpass us in zeal if you can; but we defy you to excel us in the cheers of approval with which we will be the first to greet your noblest effort." To every company of Christians, by whatever name it may be known—whether Catholic or Protestant—Methodism exclaims: "Come, brothers, we are with you; we are of you! Your glory is our glory; our triumph is your victory." To every member of every Christian Church Methodism exclaims, as to its own members: "Onward, Christian Soldier, Marching as to war, With the cross of Jesus going on before."

A Call to a Deeper Spiritual Life.

the church to-day. Neither of these fields can be cultivated to the exclusion of the other without sad results. Numbers alone will not commend us to God; but a powerful evangelism backed by a corresponding depth of spiritual earnestness. Moreover, the Lord commanded his apostles to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. Not until then were they ready for their tremendous undertaking. Their endowment, of course, was special and overwhelming, and for a special purpose. But is there not in this the universal truth that the church most powerful in evangelism will be the one that tarries longest to receive by communion and devotion the endowments of the spiritual life?

Still further, there is being sounded to-day an unmistakable note as to personal consecration. God will have his work done by those who are absolutely consecrated to him. A call for the absolute surrender of time, talent and self to the will and work of God is for this, as for all ages, needful. Nothing short of this will suffice.

The Word of God is to the spiritual life what the manna was to the bodies of the Israelites in the days of their wanderings. A Bible-reading people will be spiritual.

A devout prayer-life is essential to spirituality. Aside from the power of prayer, one of its chief benefits is soul-culture. A prayerless life can never have power either with God or men.

A call to a deeper spirituality is yet a call to the maintenance of a higher ethical standard. High living reacts powerfully upon spirituality. It still remains true that only the pure in heart shall see God.

Family Circle

Tolerance.

When? Abraham was young, there sought his tent,
Pitched on the plains of Ur among the herds,
A desert-farer, tremulous and bent
With years and travel, whom with simple words
The shepherd welcomed—bathed his wayworn feet,
Assuaged his thirst, before him deftly placed
Cool melons, honey and the sodden meat
Of late-weaned kids; but when in famished haste
The stranger reached to banquet, gently set
His hand upon his guest's, and murmured low,
"Thy pardon, brother. Dost thou not forget
To praise thy God from whom all blessings flow?"

The stranger answered, mocking, "Nay, good youth!
But much I fear thy wit is held in thrall
To lying, priest-spun legends. Know the truth!
There is no God! 'Tis nature gives us all."
First Abraham chid gently; but a fire
Lurks in the tongue; and lastly, taunted sore
With blasphemies, the shepherd rose in ire
And drove the gray-haired scoffer from his door.

To him, yet brooding wrathfully behind
His tent fold on that deed in anger done.
A Voice spake, grateful as the summer wind
Among the cedars: "Abraham, my son!"
The shepherd answered: "Father, here am I."
"Where is the stranger guest that hither came?"
It breathed again. The strong chief made reply.
"I cast him forth! He did deny thy name, Almighty Lord!" Then spake the voice divine
In solemn blame: "My son, thou didst not well."

"Did I not frame his body e'en as thine?
Did I not cause the same red blood to swell
His pulsing veins? Have I not blessed ye both
With the same laughter, sorrows, joy and tears?
Though he reviled my name with mock or oath
Have I not borne with him these many years—
Three score and ten—still patient of the worst
In speech and deed? Yet hadst thou not the grace
The while he stayed his hunger and his thirst Gently to bear with him that little space?"
—Arthur Guileman in the Youth's Companion.

What the Alarm Clock Said.

By Helen A. Hawley.

"You must certainly buy an alarm-clock, Ruth. I don't like to have you wait another night. You'd better get it this evening on your way to meeting; the stores will be closed when you come out. Get one of those little dollar clocks; you can wrap it in your scarf when you go into meeting, and no one will see it." Mrs. Trueman laid her hand tenderly on her daughter's cheek.

"I can't have you waking at all hours for fear it is time to get up. You're growing pale already," she added.

Mrs. Trueman and Ruth did their own housework, and had recently taken two mechanics as boarders. These men must have an early breakfast, and Ruth had the new experience of rising at half-past five. She insisted that it was her place to be the first one up, to start the kitchen fire and set going preliminaries of the breakfast, which her mother, more skilled in cooking, completed. Ruth dropped to sleep soon after her head touched the pillow; but these new responsibilities wakened her easily, and she was lighting matches at all hours of the night to see whether it was time to get up. She said she never could tell whether she had slept one hour or six, when once aroused.

A protracted meeting was in progress, conducted by a devoted evangelist; but thus far the interest had not been such as usually resulted from his efforts. Night after night the church was filled with listeners; but, while Christians were somewhat revived, there was next to no response from the unconverted.

Ruth attended the meetings whenever she could. She was already one of the Lord's own, and very earnestly she prayed for one and another who were still strangers to his love.

On this night, in accordance with her mother's wish, she bought a clock on the way to service, and received careful instructions how to set it, the dealer assuring her that it was quite run down then. Concealing it under her coat, she went on to the meeting, which soon seemed to her more solemn than any which had preceded.

Then, just as the evangelist was pleading with all his heart, and the stillness of the audience was intense, that unlucky alarm-clock started! Whir-r! Whir-r! Whir-r! The speaker lost his hold. The solemn interest seemed at an end. Many faces turned toward the sound; some smiled broadly; the children tittered outright. In Ruth's confusion she tried to smother it, but to no avail. Would the thing never stop? At length, with flaming cheeks, she almost ran from the place, scarcely halting until she reached home.

"Oh, mother," she exclaimed, "this dreadful clock has spoiled the meeting! I was so ashamed—and the man said it wasn't wound. There were two or three just alike, and he must have put up a different one from what he showed me first."

By degrees Mrs. Trueman reduced Ruth's incoherent words to sense. "You are not to blame at all, girlie, and have no need to feel ashamed."

"But it was so ludicrous, mother; and they laughed—laughed!" Ruth repeated in a tragic manner.

"Naturally they did, and I am as sorry as you are. But it was only unfortunate."

Was it unfortunate, though? The evangelist deemed it so, certainly, when he tried to gather the scattered thoughts from so many brains back to his important theme. Sadly he realized that one brush of the ridiculous has power to sweep aside the most sacred impulses. It was some minutes before he could regain any hold, and at the close with sinking heart he gave the usual opportunity for any who wished for prayers to rise. No service of his should end without this offer, but the glance he sent over the audience that night was perfunctory. To his joyful surprise, to the surprise of every one present, a young man arose immediately, and not only stood for a long minute, but said in a distinct tone, "I ask your prayers." And then, after the general dismissal, a few faithful souls gathered about the young man, praying for him, helping him to find the One who has promised a welcome to all who come.

The next evening, both Ruth and her mother went to meeting.

"You must go to keep me in countenance," Ruth said. "I couldn't have the courage to face the people I know after last night;" and, though Mrs. Trueman answered, "Silly girl!" she quite understood her daughter's embarrassment.

There was a new feature that night. The leader, more sure of his ground, after a short exhortation, threw the service open for testimony; and the same young man rose again, with face illumined. At sight of him, Ruth found self-control was difficult. It was Jack—Jack Henderson! For him to testify in meeting meant a great deal to Ruth! This is what he said:

"When I was a little fellow in my home five hundred miles from here, because I liked to lie in bed late, my father gave me an alarm-clock to break the lazy habit. He told me when it went off it would always say, 'Now! Now!' and I was to jump up the instant I heard it. I came into the meeting last night with no motive other than curiosity and to pass the time. When that clock started off, it seemed funny to most of you; but, I'm telling you the truth, to me it said, 'Now! Now!' just as it used to; only in some way the words were linked with the speaker's message; both were from God. They repeated, 'Now is the accepted time,' 'Now is the accepted time.' I expected to be a Christian some day, but last night I couldn't get away from that 'Now!' I don't know who had the clock. I couldn't look around then, but I shall always be thankful it was here to speak to me. For"—he hesitated as if to make his declaration more emphatic—"for it made me arise and go to my Father, and He has received me for Jesus' sake. From now on, God helping me, I am a Christian."

No one smiled over the incident after that. There were tears of joy on many faces; there was conviction working in other hearts. It was the beginning of a harvest of souls.

As Ruth and her mother started for home, Jack Henderson joined them.

"Oh Jack," the girl said, "what a glad surprise!"

"You weren't here last night," he answered. "I looked for you at the close."

"And you didn't know! It was my clock went off; and, when it wouldn't stop, I simply had to run away."

"Your clock!" The young man's voice trembled as he said it. "So you helped in the great decision. The thought makes me happy."

"Oh, but Jack, I have been praying for you a long time." Ruth hardly realized what that admission meant, but the gentle pressure of her hand on his arm added force to the words; and Jack laid his other hand over hers in a caressing touch.

Mrs. Trueman, who was walking on the other side of Ruth, discreetly closed her ears, repeating the while to herself,

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

"Have you taken everything you need, Jim?" asked the mother of James Delaney Atherton, aged twelve, who was about to start for a week's trip. "You'd better let me look at your bag." "Everything's in it," said the boy, in a fever to be off. "Every single thing I need." "Brush and comb?" queried the mother. "Brush and comb!" cried James Delaney Atherton, indignantly. "Why, mother Atherton, I thought I was going on a vacation!"

The next morning he came at nine. Mr. Gould was there. The third morning, the stenographer, willing to work and anxious to please, arrived at eight. Mr. Gould looked up from his desk, covered with papers, and remarked, "Young man, I should like to know what you do with your forenoons."

In the Pantry.

By L. M. Montgomery.

Johnny Wright was in the big pantry behind the stairs, eating a saucer of plum jam which Nora had left there for him. Ellis saw him there and, partly because he thought Johnny had no business to be eating the jam and partly because he was far too fond of teasing his small brother, he softly shut the door and slid the stout, old-fashioned iron bolt into place so noiselessly that Johnny never knew he was locked in until he had swallowed his last spoonful and tried to get out.

Ellis went off laughing. He meant to let Johnny out in about a quarter of an hour; but Stan Herbert from across the way called to him to go over and help him develop some photographs he had taken, and Ellis forgot all about the small boy bolted in the pantry. Goodness only knows how long Johnny would have had to stay there—for the only window in the pantry was a tiny one high up near the ceiling—had not Mamma Wright come home sooner than she expected and, hearing a rumour in the pantry, let the prisoner out.

Johnny was very cross and I can hardly blame him. It is not good for the temper to be locked into a hot pantry on a hot day when you are only eating the jam you were told you could eat. Johnny had been in the pantry only half an hour, but he was convinced that he had been there "for ages," and he had been there long enough to miss what he called "a very 'portant 'gagement."

He had promised to meet Elmer Herbert and Willie Grigson in the park at two o'clock. Willie's uncle was going to take them bathing. The time was long past, and of course they were gone and Johnny had no idea where to look for them, even if mamma had been willing to let him start off alone.

Johnny grimly resolved that he would "pay Ellis back." This was very wrong in Johnny, of course, but then you know even small, nine-year-old boys are human when they have missed a very 'portant 'gagement. Besides, Johnny had already endured a good deal at Ellis's hands.

He brooded over his wrongs all day, and went to bed still full of resentment. Ellis was not coming in until late. He had gone over to Westmouth to attend a baseball practice with the Westmouth nine.

About eleven o'clock Johnny woke up with a jump. He heard a noise below, and knew that Ellis had returned. The noise was in the pantry. The remembrance of his wrongs rushed over our small boy's soul. He crept out to the landing and peered through the banisters to the moonlit hall below. The house was so still that Johnny felt creepy, and the pantry door was shut, but he knew Ellis was inside, getting a snack before coming to bed.

Johnny made up his mind what he would do. He softly crept down the stairs, a little, white-clad figure. The stairs creaked until Johnny thought every soul in the house would be rushing out to see what the noise was about. That is a habit stairs have at night, you know.

But Johnny got down without disturbing any one. Noiselessly he crept along the hall. He had not stalked Indians with Willie and Elmer times out of mind for nothing.

Outside the pantry door he halted. He could hear Ellis moving about inside and softly rattling the dishes. Johnny shot the bolt noiselessly into place and then crept back upstairs with a chuckle.

"We'll see how Master Ellis likes being locked in the pantry for hours at a stretch himself," said Johnny, vindictively, as he shut the door tight and scrambled into bed. "If he makes ever so much noise nobody'll hear him. Father and mother's room is too far away, and Nora sleeps like the dead. I've heard her say so."

He shut his eyes tight and resolved to go right to sleep. Then Johnny's conscience began to trouble him. He had never known he had a conscience before, and he didn't know now what it was. But he felt uncomfortable. Something worried him. He tried to think of all the tricks Ellis had played on him, but could only remember all the nice things that Ellis had done for him. He thought of the day he had cut his foot and couldn't go to the picnic and Ellis had stayed home, too, and read to him and made taffy for him.

Johnny rolled over on his pillow and groaned. If this was revenge he didn't see anything very sweet about it.

He would count a thousand and see if that would put him to sleep. One—two—three—four—five—six—seven—Johnny sat up in bed suddenly. He was going down to let Ellis out.

Just then the door opened and Ellis, lamp in hand, walked unconcernedly in.

"Oh, so you got out yourself?" said Johnny.

"Hello, youngster, aren't you asleep yet?" said Ellis, patronizingly.

"How did you do it?" persisted Johnny.

"Do what, kid?"

"Why, get out of the pantry. I bolted you in—and I was just starting down to let you out. I don't know how you ever managed to open it yourself. I'm sure I bolted it good and tight."

"You've been dreaming, Johnny-kid. That's what's the matter. I wasn't near the pantry to-night. Didn't need to be. Ted Stavert's mother over at Westmouth gave us a dandy lunch. Ice cream and"—

"I wasn't dreaming," said Johnny, stubbornly. "I tell you I heard some one in the pantry and I went down and locked the door to pay you out for locking it on me. If it wasn't you, who was it?"

Ellis looked puzzled. Johnny certainly seemed to be wide-awake and in earnest. But if his story was correct, who or what was in the pantry?

Suddenly Ellis thought of a burglary that had been committed on their very street two weeks ago. A house had been entered and a good deal of plate stolen. The police had been unable to capture the thief or recover the booty. Ellis thought of all the silver in the pantry drawers and of Grandma Wright's spoons.

"You stay here, Johnny," he said. "I'm going to wake father up."

Mr. Wright listened to Ellis's story in amazement. Johnny was brought out into the hall and stoutly maintained his story under much cross-questioning. Finally Mr. Wright telephoned to the police station. Two men came down and they opened the pantry door.

There was a burglar and they captured him and took him off to the police station, having first relieved him of the Wright silver. He was a young fellow and seemed too frightened and bewildered to resist. The booty he had carried off in his former raid was found and returned to its owner later on.

Johnny Wright was the hero of the town for nine days. He did not enjoy it; somehow, Johnny had very little to say about his exploit. Although it had turned out well he was ashamed of it. Mamma Wright had talked a little talk to him about giving way to revengeful feelings. She said the fact that it had all turned out so fortunately was no excuse for the motive. Johnny hung his head and promised that he would never again try to pay people out.

Ellis got his talking to from his father. I do not know just what Mr. Wright said to him, but I know that Ellis never played any more tricks on his small brother. He went from his conference with his father straight to Johnny.

"Look here, sonny," he said, manfully, "I'm sorry for locking you into the pantry and putting ice down your back and knocking over your Indian ambush and hiding your air gun and all the rest. Forgive your penitent brother and he'll let you alone after this."

"G'way with you," said Johnny, very red in the face.

But he told Elmer and Willie that afternoon that Ellis was a splendid brother and he meant to be just like him when he got big.—The Congregationalist and Christian World.

Tommy's Dream.

Tommy had a curious dream one night. He had been kept in from play to help his father. But, instead of being proud to think that his father wanted his help, he was very cross about losing his play—so cross that his father quietly remarked he would not ask him to stay in again.

When he lay down to sleep that night, he dreamed that two angels were sent down to earth to make a record of all the nice loving things the boys and girls were doing. One angel was to take note of the big things that were done, and the other was to write down all the little, unnoticed deeds of life. They parted as they reached the earth, and, when they met again on their way back to heaven, they compared notes. One had scarcely filled two pages of his book.

"There are not many conspicuous things done after all," he said, in explanation.

"I have scarcely found time to write down all that I have seen," said the other angel, and he showed a little book filled from cover to cover with the record of loving little deeds.

Tommy's heart stood still, and he thought, "My name must be there, too, for it was a nice thing to stay in and help father."

Then he heard the angel explaining why there were some boys and girls he did not take any notice of at all. "They did nice things," he said, "but they were so cross about it and so unwilling, that I could not write them down. For you know I was told only to record the loving deeds of life."

Then Tommy woke up, and as he lay still and thought about it, he knew that he could not possibly have been in the angel's book that day.—Ram's Horn.

With the Children

By J. Breckenridge Ellis

M. J. O'Dell, Lebanon, Mo.: "Inclosed, you will find a letter from Brother Buckley, who sends one dollar for our Advance Society Orphan Fund. May the Lord put it in the hearts of many to help in this work. I am waiting, hoping, praying, and trying to be patient till we may know the result. I do not want to be disappointed in our society, and do so much want the enterprise to be successful, if it is the Lord's will. I send two dollars. I would have sent it sooner, but we live in the country, and sometimes it is inconvenient sending and getting the mail." (It is the Lord's will that we take and rear an orphan, if the members contribute; and it isn't his will if they don't. Now we have heard from the country, isn't it about time that we hear from the towns? The three dollars in this letter bring our sum total up to $5.40.)

Harry Buckley, Lawrenceburg, Ky.: "I have just read the article in the children's department of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, asking the Av. S. to adopt an orphan, and I am much pleased with the idea. I send herewith one dollar for that purpose" (which is mentioned above.) "I hope you will get so many letters with dollars in them that you will not have time to read the letters if they are long." (I still have plenty of time to read all coming.) "I close with a silent prayer for the success of this most worthy project." (I think we too often underestimate the effect of such prayers. I believe they will bring us out of our trouble and lead us to success. Hurrah for Brother Buckley! He sends a dollar for our cause, and after he has done his part, he turns to God and asks him to help us. Well, I'll give a dollar, and my prayers. That brings us to $6.40.)

Harry Asbury Stevens, Akita, Japan: "I am a little boy 6 years old. I have my lessons every morning. Mother told me about the Av. S., and I want to join. Mother wants to join, too." (The Av. S. is proud to have members in Japan, and especially proud to have a little boy of six, and a mother. I am glad you did not write to me in Japanese.) "We have been keeping the rules three days. I can read in the first reader and remember my Bible verses, but mother reads the history and poetry to me. I will tell you about my friends. The first is Black Beauty—she is a donkey. She is 6 years old, too, and tall enough to reach to father's vest." (Most feel like you are twins?) "I thought we fed her sawdust and straw, but they said it was mashed beans and straw. My next friend is Goo—she is a dog." (In our country, we say he is a dog.) "This summer I received a telegram from her, and this is what it said: 'Six puppies.'" (Yes, she was all right.) "They are so cunning. One's name is Baby; it's last name is Coal, because he is so black and his eyes just shine. I have chickens, pigeons, and two canary birds, Jack and Jill. My turtle hung himself the summer I was away." (Poor, faithful, loving old turtle! How it must have pined for you before committing suicide!) "We are feeding a queer worm on apple-beans, because that was the kind of tree he was on when we got him. Pretty soon he will wrap himself up in his cradle and we can see what kind of a butterfly he will make. Now I am very busy making boxes for my collection of seeds. I want to be your little friend." (You must tell us about that worm when it changes. We are so interested in it. I am glad you didn't send it in your letter, however. Tell us something about Japan. Is it true that all the pans you buy in the stores have a great big letter "J" painted on them?)

Mrs. B. Hunt, Fry, I. T.: "Please find inclosed for the Advance Society Orphan Fund $2, 50 cents of which my little 6 year old son sends in pennies and nickels. I pray for the success of this most noble work. I am a constant reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, and of 'With the Children.'" (The Av. S. loves your little boy for sending his pennies and nickels to help our orphan. May his heart always be touched by the needs and sorrows of others, for it is in giving that we draw nearest the life of Christ. Here we have $8.40, for our orphan.)

Martin Henningsen, Dike, Ia.: "I submit report of my first quarter's work in the Av. S. If it meets the requirements, I would be pleased to have my name on the Honor List." (Very good report; average of 91 Bible verses per day, and 415 lines of poetry and 16 pages of history each week.) "I dare not say, 'I will meet you at the World's Fair,' for many things may happen before then. But if it pleases God, I will find you there."

Mary Huffaker, Lexington, Mo.: "I send my report for the 1st quarter. I am now beginning the 6th week on my 2nd. It is not so easy to keep the rules and go to school." (I select her report of the 12th week, though some of the others show more work done, as an example of this report: Two chapters of the Bible two days, and one the other days; 121 lines of poetry—Cowper's 'On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture'; 11 pages of Rader's history; quotation from Irving—"A tart temper never mellows with age, and a sharp tongue is the only edged tool that grows keener with constant use.")

Donnie Swift, Billings, Mo.: "Inclosed find 25 cents for the Av. S. Orphan. I think it is a good plan." (And proves she thinks it. As I said the other day, Donnie was our 393rd to join. This now makes a total of $8.65 for the orphan.)

Edna Shriver, Nebo, Ill.: "I have nearly kept the Av. S. rules three quarters. Last night was prayer-meeting; Ethel and I went. We read the lesson to the audience. We had a fine meeting. I have learned to play a few little exercises on my new piano." (Do please learn to play them "off," so you won't have to say, "I can't play without my notes!" If the piece is just an inch long, I'd memorize it, if it burst my head. And you'd better know a piece just an inch long, and be able to play it, than not to know a piece of five pages and not be able to play it unless you go home and stick it up before your nose and play it there where nobody wants to hear it.) Rheumatism Cured Without Medicine

Treatment FREE—On Approval

Every reader of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST can try FREE a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, famed all over the world for their cures of every curable kind of rheumatism—chronic or acute, Muscular, Sciatic, Lumbago, Gout, etc., no matter where located or how severe. They almost always cure, so the makers decided to take all the risk. Try the Drafts. You don't send a penny until you are satisfied with the help you get. They are safe and comfortable—far better and surer than any medicine.

Magic Foot Drafts work like Magic. Cured patients tell us they perform miracles. They do not. They are scientific—logical. The foot pores, the largest in the body, are located over rich nerve and vascular centers. The Draft on the foot acts through them on every inch of the body—curing Rheumatism no matter where located. Our booklet makes the reason clear. 68 per cent of the nitrogen in the sweat absorbed by Magic Foot Drafts is in the form of the poison Urea (uric acid) which causes Rheumatism. But we don't ask you to believe even our thousands of cured patients—we will cure you. If you have Rheumatism, send us your name and we will send you a pair of Magic Foot Drafts, free on approval. If you are satisfied with the benefit received, then send us one dollar for the Drafts. If not, keep your money. Write to-day to the Magic Foot Draft Company, S I 14 Oliver Bldg., Jackson, Michigan. Send no money.

pa's Christmas goods came in yesterday, and mamma and I went up to see them." (Any horns?) "I have read all the New Testament, and the old to Isaiah, the 20th chapter. I read every night in it. Grandpa sent it to me." (I know he will feel richly rewarded.) "Blue and old gold are pretty for our badges. I have a large book of the United States, I will try to read for my history. One night I read 666 lines of poetry in about half an hour." (This is certainly high speed. I only hope the poetry won't hold out. But remember you don't see the landscape so well, when you are going a mile a minute.) "I must close now and get my lessons."

Fannie Newman, Lexington, Mo.: "I hope by this time you have received something from all the young folks you have been so kindly entertaining for so long a time, for the Av. S. Orphan. I cannot imagine anything more beautiful than for the young people to carry on the grand and good work suggested in your department. I am not one of the young, but I am one who loves them." (And she sends 50 cents, which brings our amount to $9.15. Twelve dollars will support an orphan for one year in India. Will any body else help, or must I return this $9.15? I believe we will succeed. I hope next week to be able to tell you we have succeeded.)

HELPS TO FAITH. By J. H. Garrison. Christian Publishing Co., St. Louis. 245 pages. $1.

It is a dynamic and moral rather than a doctrinal faith that Mr. Garrison has in view. Doctrinally holding to conceptions currently styled "liberal orthodox," he lays little emphasis on beliefs or creeds, but much on personal allegiance to Jesus as "the Way, the Truth, and the Life." At the same time various points of intellectual difficulty with certain doctrines are incidentally touched in a way to relieve the difficulty. Still more might have been done in this line, and the conception of faith in Christ for salvation from sin needs expansion into the thought of faith as a looking to and following him as our "Captain" in a soldierly service.—The Outlook, Oct. 31, 1903.

our own country in the opening years of the twentieth century. Failure would not only be a dreadful thing for us, but a dreadful thing for all mankind, because it would mean loss of hope for all who believe in the power and the righteousness of liberty.

Therefore, in thanking God for the mercies extended to us in the past, we beseech Him that He may not withhold them in the future, and that our hearts may be roused to war steadfastly for good and against all the forces of evil, public and private. We pray for strength and light, so that in the coming years we may with cleanliness, fearlessness and wisdom do our allotted work on the earth in such manner as to show that we are not altogether unworthy of the blessings we have received.

Now, therefore I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving Thursday, the 26th of the coming November, and do recommend that throughout the land people cease from their wonted occupations, and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks unto Almighty God for His manifold mercies,

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 31st day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-eighth.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

By the President.

JOHN HAY, Secretary of State.

The new republic of Panama has come safely through the first week of its existence. It has been formally recognized by our state department by the reception of its diplomatic representative at Washington; France and Italy have given notice that they will take similar steps; the rumored appeal of Colombia to Germany for assistance in winning back the lost province met with no encouragement whatever; and it seems highly probable that the new government will be generally welcomed into the family of nations of which it is the latest born and feeblest member.

Peace commissioners from Bogota have gone to Panama to offer concessions to that province on condition that it will remain a part of Colombia. The United States has placed a gun-boat at the disposal of the Colombian commissioners so that they may meet there on neutral ground the representatives of Panama. Rear Admiral Walker has been dispatched to Panama to have charge of all matters connected with the negotiations for a new canal treaty. Colombia's threats to win back the lost province by force of arms are not taken seri-

Current Events

The season is at hand when, according to the custom of our people, it falls upon the President to appoint a day of praise and thanksgiving to God.

During the last year the Lord has dealt bountifully with us, giving us peace at home and abroad, and the chance for our citizens to work for their welfare unhindered by war, famine or plague. It behooves us not only to rejoice greatly because of what has been given us, but to accept it with a solemn sense of responsibility, realizing that under heaven it rests with us ourselves to show that we are worthy to use aright what has thus been entrusted to our care. In no other place and at no other time has the experiment of government of the people, by the people, for the people, been tried on so vast a scale as here in ously. The Isthmus of Panama is cut off from Colombia by almost impassable mountain chains and morasses. The only practicable mode of access is by sea and the United States government has made it clear that its vessels are there to prevent the landing of hostile forces upon the Isthmus. The territory of the new republic and its geographical relation to the country from which it has seceded are shown in the accompanying map. In compliance with the request embodied in a recent resolution of the House of Representatives, the President has transmitted to that body the documents relating to the Panama resolution and showing the attitude of our government toward it. Most of these documents had already been made public. An incident most extraordinary from the diplomatic standpoint is a communication sent by President Marroquin of Colombia to our Senate, protesting against President Roosevelt's action in recognizing the government of Panama.

President Roosevelt's message to Congress at the beginning of its special session was a very brief document devoted solely to the Cuban reciprocity treaty. In brief and forcible phrases he urged Congress to adopt at once such legislation as will give effect to the commercial treaty which was approved by the senate at the last session and subsequently ratified by the Cuban government. He argues that such legislation is demanded both by our interests and by our honor. The Platt amendment committed us to the theory that our government occupies a unique attitude toward Cuba. If that attitude gave us the right to demand certain things from her, it gives her the right to expect from us certain special concessions. The concession which will do the most good to her and the least harm to us—which will, in fact, in the opinion of the most competent judges, be quite as beneficial to us as to her—is the adoption of a scheme of reciprocity which will come as near as possible to making Cuba commercially a part of the United States. The House has agreed upon a rule which will bring up the treaty for the final vote without amendment on Thursday of this week. The action of the Senate will be less prompt and it is doubtful whether any action will be secured in that body during the special session.

In addition to bribery in the municipal assembly, and frauds in the elections, St. Louis has been the scene of a series of daring naturalization frauds. A series of trials in the federal court has resulted in the conviction of three of the guilty parties: Thomas E. Barrett, Marshal of the St. Louis Court of Appeals and Chairman of the State Democratic Committee; John P. Dolan, chairman of the St. Louis Democratic Committee, and Frank Garrett, a member of the police force. Other indictments are pending, including one against Al Morrow, Governor Dockery's private secretary. The naturalization frauds were committed to create voters for the election a year ago. The investigation of the baking powder scandal in the last session of the Missouri legislature continues to furnish frequent sensations, the latest of which is the indictment of W. F. Zeigler, the president of the $20,000,000 baking powder trust and chief patron of the "Missouri Health Society," of which Senator W. J. Stone was the spokesman and representative. All the corruption is not in Missouri. United States Senator C. H. Dietrich, of Nebraska, and Postmaster Fisher, of Hastings, Neb., have been indicted for conspiracy and bribery. Evidence presented to the grand jury indicates that Fisher paid Senator Dietrich about $1,300 for his appointment as postmaster.

The south side street car lines in Chicago have been for several days almost completely tied up by a strike. There has not been a great deal of violence—not more than is the almost inevitable accompaniment of a strike. The questions at issue cover almost the whole range of possible points of disagreement between employers and employees. The strikers demand an increase of wages which the company refuses to give on the ground that there has been no considerable increase in business since the advance in wages a year ago. The strikers demand that only union men shall be employed. The company refuses to accept this condition. In a statement to the governor, the president of the union says they wish only to prevent discrimination against members of the union. The strikers demand a working day of not more than eleven hours nor less than ten, and that some arrangement be made by which employes would not be compelled to lose time while waiting for their runs. The company has declared itself unable to make such an arrangement. We cannot from present information profess to judge of the merits of the controversy. But upon this last point it seems clear that the strikers have some ground for complaint. There are cases on record where men have been compelled to wait at the car sheds nearly all day ready for an assignment at any moment and then sent out for nearly all night. Such conditions, which ignore the fact that the human machine cannot give good service unless it is well cared for, not only invade the rights of the workman, but are a menace to the traveling public. A man who has not had opportunity to get a reasonable amount of sleep cannot be in proper condition to take a swiftly moving car safely through a crowded city.

Russia and Japan are reported to have reached an agreement according to which Russia is to withdraw her troops from Korea, and Japan is to withdraw her protest against the Russian occupation of Manchuria. Such a compromise is a most natural one. Japan has no special interest in keeping Russia out of Manchuria except the general desire to prevent Russia from increasing her hold upon the far east. On the other hand, the maintenance of Korea's independence is a matter of vital importance to Japan, while Russia can afford to wait until digesting some of her new acquisitions before proceeding to swallow other territory in that direction. The Russo-Japanese agreement does not by any means indicate that Russia has ceased to covet Korea. It means only that she is willing to exercise patience, which is the chief element of Russian diplomacy. But while Japan has withdrawn her protest against the Russian occupation of Manchuria, and England has declined to interfere and all of the other powers are disposed to acquiesce, China herself is planning resistance. An army is being sent to occupy Manchuria and, if current reports are to be trusted, there is some prospect of war between China and Russia. If it should come to this, the result would only be an opportunity for Russia to tighten her grasp upon Manchuria and find a pretext for still further aggressions.

Brevities.

Circuit Attorney Folk, of St. Louis, has been invited to deliver the commencement address at Harvard next June.

In reporting the elections, we stated that the Republican candidate for governor of Rhode Island was elected by a narrow margin. The complete returns wiped out this margin and showed that the Democratic candidate was elected.

By the will of Gordon McKay, a millionaire inventor of shoe machinery, Harvard University is to receive almost his entire fortune, which is to be devoted to the establishment of a school of applied science. Four million dollars will be available at once, and it is expected that several millions more will be realized when the estate is entirely settled.

It has recently been stated by high authorities that liquor is responsible for most of the crimes of negroes which are cited by some as affording adequate provocation for lynching. In commenting upon this, Leslie's Weekly adds: "We believe that investigation would establish the fact that no lynching affair was ever lead by sober men or in a community where no saloons were allowed to exist."

"The Good Will of Him That Dwelt in the Bush."

In these Thanksgiving times we naturally turn our thoughts to the things for which we should be grateful and for which we should render thanks to Almighty God the Source of all our blessings. One of the greatest men in all the past, in enumerating the things for which he blessed God, said:

"Blessed of the Lord be his land:
For the precious things of heaven, for the dew,
And for the deep, which coucheth beneath,
And for the precious things of the fruits of the sun,
And for the precious things of the growth of the moons,
And for the chief things of the ancient mountains,
And for the precious things of the everlasting hills,
And for the precious things of the earth, and the fulness thereof,
And the good will of him that dwelt in the bush."

It would be difficult to find in all literature a more comprehensive summary of the things for which we should be thankful than is embraced in these beautiful lines of the great Hebrew prophet and lawgiver. It is remarkable, too, how well they express the causes for gratitude in our own land and in our own time.

There are, first of all, "the precious things of heaven," only one of which is specified, "the dew." But that stood for much that was desirable in a land where the dew fulfilled so important a function in promoting and reviving all vegetable life and growth. No doubt this poet-prophet had in his thought, too, the blue skies which dropped benediction on the land, and all the starry hosts that came out on the plains of night to witness to the power and wisdom of God. There were the clouds, too, with the early and latter rain, and the sun to rule the day, and the moon the night.

"The deep which coucheth beneath"—the great wide sea, with all its wealth of life and beauty. It was a source then as now of health and of food for the sustenance of man. Today, far more than in the time of Moses, it is a source of wealth, both by the wide commerce which it floats, and by the treasures which are taken from its depths. A large amount of the world's population live upon the deep and gain their livelihood from pursuits connected with it. In giving thanks for the deep blue sea that couches beneath the blue heavens, we give thanks for all our commerce upon the ocean, for all the food and other treasures we gather from its storehouse, and for all the joy and health which it imparts to our race.

In "the precious things of the fruits of the sun," and "the precious things of the growth of the moons," are included vegetable life and growth, or the products of husbandry. How much have we to be thankful for in that respect in this favored land of ours! We have been blessed with abundant harvests, and field and orchard have yielded generous returns for the labor of the husbandman.

Nor does this inspired writer forget "the chief things of the ancient mountains," and "the precious things of the everlasting hills," by which, we may suppose, he means all the precious metals which have been gathered from their ancient deposits in the hills and mountains thrown up in the great upheavals of nature. "The precious things of the earth, and the fulness thereof," may include all else not included in the foregoing list of material blessings, of which there might be an extensive catalogue made out.

But now the prophet and law-giver rises to a higher plane and mentions the chief source of gratitude and thanksgiving when he adds, "And the good-will of Him that dwelt in the bush." The aged seer is now looking back through the experiences of many years to the time when on Mt. Horeb he saw the burning bush, as a manifestation of God. He remembers that he was called to the great work of delivering Israel, and that this God who "dwelt in the bush" had never forsaken him through all the trials and bitter experiences which had come to him, subsequently, in the land of the Pharaohs and in the march through the wilderness. In looking back at the deliverances which had marked the course of Israel's history, he saw that it was due to "the good will of him that dwelt in the bush."

Moses had seen more marvelous displays of God's power and glory than the burning bush, aflame with God yet unconsumed, for his manifestations in Egypt, the Red Sea and at Sinai, to say nothing of the wilderness experiences, had all occurred since his call to be deliverer of Israel; but he loved to identify the God of these later revelations with Him who first made Himself known to him, and called him from being a shepherd to be the leader and lawgiver of Israel. Thus he unified history and God's revelation to him.

Happy will it be for us, as a nation, if, in reviewing our own national history, and in recounting the marvelous blessings which we have received, and the exalted place we occupy among the nations of the earth, we can be brought to realize that all this is due to the "good will" of the same God who manifested himself to Moses in the burning bush, but who, in these last times, has manifested himself in Jesus Christ, and through him in his growing kingdom and power in the world. Not to recognize the hand of God in our history, and not to attribute all our greatness and all blessings to the good will of him who was with our fathers in the founding of this republic, and whose mighty hand has been revealed in the crises of our national life and in the orderly ongoing of our government, is to be unworthy of such blessings and such distinction. May this Thanksgiving time be marked by deepest contrition for our individual and public sins, and by profoundest gratitude to Him whose open hand has lavished upon our country so many gracious gifts.

A Jew's Rebuke of Christians.

Dr. Emil G. Hirsch, of Chicago, delights occasionally to lay the lash on the back of Christians, and sometimes of his own Jewish brethren. He is often extreme, though not always wholly wrong in his criticisms, as will be seen from the following extract from his last Sunday's sermon:

"I have known Jewish rabbis who seem to think that God has reserved Sunday for the Christians and that it is useless for a Jew to pray upon that day, just as if all the wires were busy. Religion becomes the merest superstition and paganism when it becomes a charm against mishap, a patent nostrum to cure everything from an earache to a toe-ache, and when it is considered only as a scheme to avoid death. Modern Christians have the same notions and incentives in their religious experiences as the rankest heathen. Both have the fear of death as the main religious impulse. Prayers have become too much like the society column of a gossiping social journal. Has a millionaire come home or been married or divorced, or has any one else in society done anything fortunate or unfortunate, God immediately is advised of the fact in a prayer in some fashionable church. Ministers allow themselves to become cheap advertising agents of social gossip, and use as their medium of expression insolent messages to the great Being. A prayer should no more be extemporized than an epic, for a prayer is the highest epic. It is the poetical expression of man to God."

When Dr. Hirsch affirms, without any exception, that "modern Christians have the same notions and incentives in their religious experiences as the rankest heathen," he speaks either without knowledge or without sufficient care. It is absurd to make such a charge against all modern Christians. Doubtless there may be found, here and there, those who treat religion as a charm against mishaps, and whose motives are largely selfish, but no one who knows the spirit and life of any large number of modern Christians would dare to affirm that such is the characteristic of all modern Christians.

There is probably need for the criticism which the rabbi makes concerning prayer, but of course it, too, is in a rather extravagant form. There is no doubt need of a reform in the matter of our public prayers. A deeper reverence, a more definite purpose in prayer and the spirit of profound humility, together with a better knowledge of the scriptural teaching on the subject of prayer, would render improbable any such tendencies as are referred to in the above criticism.

When Dr. Hirsch says that "prayer should no more be extemporized than an epic," he utters another extreme and erratic sentiment. Perhaps there is undue prejudice against studied forms of prayer, and we have long been convinced that such is the case, but to say that prayer should never be extemporized is to lose sight of the real nature and urgency of prayer, as growing out of the exigencies of our spiritual life. When Peter cried, "Lord, save or I perish," his prayer was extemporized and very effective. When the publican smote his breast and said, "God be merciful to me a sinner!" he probably held no prayer book in his hand. We may well use approved forms of prayer, especially those contained in the Bible, in expressing our spiritual desires and aspirations, but there are many occasions in the life of devout souls when the desires of the heart take on such forms of speech as come at the moment, and we cannot believe they are less acceptable to God because they may be couched in less elegant literary form.

The Beginning Place.

When one looks upon the broad bosom of the Mississippi as it sweeps majestically onward toward the gulf, he is likely to ask himself, if he be inclined to trace effects to their causes, whence this great volume of water? On reflection or investigation he finds that it comes from innumerable streams and rivulets, that have their origin remote from each other, but which are drawn together by the law of gravitation into one common current. If, by some cause in nature, these several sources should be dried up, there would be no "Father of Waters." As a matter of fact, the Mississippi River, so far from being the "Father of Waters" is itself the product of all these smaller streams which contribute to its greatness and power.

Such is the relation existing between the influence issuing from the several homes of the nation, and that broad current of national and religious life which we call our civilization. The stream, in this case, as in others, is not likely to rise above its source. The American home is the unit of our national and our religious life. We cannot have a great nation, guided by lofty patriotism, by high ideals of statesmanship, filled with homes which neglect the moral and religious training of the young. Much less can we have a great spiritual church, fulfilling its distinct mission in the world, while the homes of its members are without the sanctifying influence of religion. In other words, the character of our homes must determine the character of our civilization.

We do not say these things because they are new or startling, but because they are so old and familiar as to have lost, in some degree, their great significance. As we view the matter, there is nothing of greater concern to us, as patriots and Christians, than to make our homes schools of virtue where the young are trained from infancy to reverence God, to love truth and righteousness, and to abhor that which is evil. This is impossible, as all experience has taught, without the aid of religion, and that highest type of religion which has been revealed to men—the religion of Jesus Christ.

What the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is seeking to accomplish by its agitation of this subject is to bring its readers to the realization of these familiar truths and to bring about a reform in the much neglected duty of maintaining religious worship and instruction in the home. We are gratified to find that our words on this subject have struck a responsive chord in the hearts of many. We have asked a few brethren to make some practical suggestions on this question, pointing out how this end may best be reached. We shall publish next week some of these answers to our questions, and others will follow in later issues of the paper. Meanwhile we hope it is understood that the subject is thrown open for suggestions from any who have given it careful thought.

There is one thing, we think is certain, and this finds confirmation in the answers from the brethren to which we have referred, and that is that any religious exercises to be maintained in the home and to be a source of blessing to the family, must be as natural and unartificial as possible. It cannot be denied that religion once wore an austere aspect, a sort of unnatural solemnity that made it unwelcome to young people especially, and, indeed, to most others. This is probably the reason which has led to its neglect in the home. We are coming to have a better view of the place which religion holds in our life. There is no reason why a few moments devoted to worship in the family should be regarded as a break in the regular order of family life, any more than the eating of the regular meals, the study of the lessons, by the children who attend school, or any other natural function of home life. The religious nature is there just as surely as the mental and the physical, and it has its needs and its rights just the same as the latter. Let those who conduct the family worship, therefore, do it in a natural, cheerful spirit, as if it were indeed a delight and privilege, instead of an unpleasant task.

The bed-rock fact which underlies this movement for a revival of family religion, is the fact that the home is the true beginning place. To this fountain of influence, the large majority of people trace the shaping of their lives and character. The world can never be made to believe in a religion whose advocates do not believe in it enough to introduce it in their homes and make it the very atmosphere of their daily lives.

At a time when we are giving thanks for our homes and our family blessings, let us also resolve to make our homes more worthy of God's blessing.

Are we willing to continue to receive the Father's bountiful blessings without acknowledging his goodness?

Editor's Easy Chair.

There are times when we seem to be above the mists and fogs that too often enshroud our earthly lives, when we get clearer visions both of things present and things to come. The Lord's day evening may well be such a time. The day has brought cessation from the routine of our daily tasks, and there has been a calm or hush in the din of the week. We have been in the Lord's house, with the Lord's people, and have sat at the Lord's table. We have lifted our hearts together in the worshiping multitude in prayer and in hymns of praise. We have listened to the earnest and forceful words of the preacher who has sought, and not in vain, to bring the light of eternity to shine upon our earthly paths and to make plain our duties and responsibilities. Under such surroundings and influences one's heart must be unresponsive, indeed, if he be not lifted up to a height where he may see our earthly relationships and duties in clearer light. How much we owe to the man of God who, by prayer, meditation and mental toil, through the week, prepares his message so as to meet the wants of his people and to allure them to holier living! What higher function can any mortal, or any angel, as for that matter, perform than to minister thus to the deepest and most abiding wants of humanity? And yet how seldom we are grateful for such service, and how often we fail to remember that what has been meat and drink to our souls has been wrought out in anxious, prayerful toil of brain and heart, into which a part of the very preacher's life has gone! Appreciation of this fact would lead us to substitute prayer for criticism, and better living for unprofitable hearing.

But now another day of holy memories and sacred associations has gone, and night, with her ebon pinions, is brooding over all the land. As we gaze through our study window into the sky, we see that older revelation of which the psalmist spoke, when he said:

"The heavens declare the glory of God
And the firmament sheweth his handiwork."

The voice of the pulpit has died away, but these voiceless preachers, from their midnight thrones, proclaim the same great message which they declared to David when he watched his flocks by night on the plains of Bethlehem. The preacher impressed upon us to-day the duty of bearing witness for Christ in our daily lives. Those stars that shine out of the vast expanse of heaven bear their ceaseless testimony from age to age,

"Forever singing as they shine,
The hand that made us is divine."

Their march through the heavens is accompanied by no noise or tumult.

"There is no speech nor language:
Their voice is not heard."

But they shine, and their light is seen, and they become a guide to the mariner and a pilot to the lost wanderer, guiding them to haven and home. Would that our lives might shine with that steady light, throughout all the changing seasons, so that they would be beacon lights to guide wandering souls to home and heaven! The preacher was right: By the words we may speak, by the characters we may form, and by the sacrificial lives we may live, we may bear eloquent testimony to the redeeming love of Christ. Is not the lack of this sacrificial life the chief defect in our modern apologetic?

How does the world look to us on this Sunday night, with the witnessing voice of sermon, prayer and hymn, yet sounding in our ears, and the witnessing stars of heaven raying down upon us their silent eloquence? If we must say the truth, this poor humanity that we see all about us, and that we love so much, seems altogether too much engrossed with the fleeting things of time that endure but for a little while and then vanish away, while it gives far too little concern to things of eternal moment. That is the message which the stars bring to us from their far-off abodes in the heavens, and this has been the witnessing note of the earthly sanctuary to-day! Why should men care most for that which is least important, and neglect that which is of priceless value? May kind Heaven pity us! This comes from our ignorance, from our blindness, from our dullness of vision. Within the past few days we stood by an open grave, and saw deposited therein the body of an aged saint, whose beautiful spirit through a long life had taken on, in a very large degree, those graces and virtues which Christianity inculcates as the chief things of life. As her children, and her children's children, with a large circle of friends, stood there under the grey and dreary autumn sky, to put away from sight forever the form of one whom they had loved so long and so dearly, what cared they for those things about which men are so anxious, in their relation to her future destiny? They are as naught. It was her faith, her hope, her love, her humility, her patience, her meekness, her unselfish service for others, which made them thank God for her life, and cherish bright hopes for her future.

If it be the end that crowns the work, is there any better place at which to estimate human life than by the new-made grave? The things we could wish that the loved one whose life on earth is ended, should have lived and struggled for, these alone are worth living and struggling for. The things we would deprecate as having any place in the life of our friend or our loved one, at such an hour, these should be strenuously avoided in our lives. What avail heaped-up piles of gold, a life of luxury, and all the glory and pride of this earthly life, when we stand fronting eternity and the judgment seat of Christ? But in such an hour the memory of deeds of kindness done to our fellowmen—the hungry ones we have fed, the naked whom we have clothed, the orphans and widows whom we have befriended, the wayward whom we have reclaimed, the discouraged whom we have taken by the hand and lifted up, the sorrowing ones whom we have comforted, the good and needy causes we have strengthened and helped, the time, the treasure, and thought we have given in unselfish service—all these are of incalculable worth, as we look upon them in the light that shines out from the eternal world. Thank God for the Lord's day with its witness for God and for spiritual things! Thank God for the eloquent testimony of saintly lives that borrow, even here, the luster of heaven, and teach us how beautiful and how sacred a thing is human life, and what possibilities of goodness and of spiritual beauty lie latent in the human soul!

Notes and Comments.

Commenting on an article by Dr. Bradford, moderator of the Congregational Council, on the condition of the Congregational Churches, "The Congregationalist and Christian World" says:

It is a cause for congratulation that in our denomination the controversy between conservative and progressive thinkers is no longer carried on with virulence. Indeed, excepting sporadic outbreaks here and there, it is hardly carried on at all. The two wings of our ecclesiastical body, as they have been called, now so infold one another when they are closed that it is difficult to distinguish between them, and when spread out in activity they mutually support the whole body in forward and upward movement.

We think this may be said truthfully of the two elements in all the religious bodies. It was natural, perhaps, when these questions of criticism were new, that undue importance should have been attached to them, both by the friends and opponents of the newer views. But the lapse of time has brought a saner view to both extremes. As compared with the things unshaken by modern views, the results of the more recent criticism are as drops of water to the ocean, or grains of sand to the mountain. On the other hand the danger to faith resulting from modern historical investigation has been greatly exaggerated. The realization of these two facts is lessening the virulence of controversy, while the work of Bible scholars goes on apace.

It will be gratifying to the brethren who have manifested so deep an interest in our exhibit at the World's Fair to know that the committee appointed at Detroit to take charge of this enterprise has succeeded in securing a most eligible site for the proposed building. The location is on the hill, near the art building, on one of the great thoroughfares leading from the government building to the art building, and commands a fine view of the great panorama of buildings which make up the Ivory City. The authorities of the Exposition have been very courteous in allowing us this site, and in offering us every facility for preparing such an exhibit as we propose to make. It now remains for the brethren to carry forward this enterprise to a successful issue. A suitable building erected on such a location, with such an exhibit as we can make in the way of literature, charts, maps, pictures, statistics of progress in all our lines of work, will afford such an opportunity for missionary work, of a preliminary character at least, as we have never had before. Let us make the best possible use of it.

✧

In this time of large ingathering into our churches, in which we are "lengthening our cords" at a very rapid rate, it will not be out of place to remind the brethren of the importance of "strengthening the stakes." Otherwise the "curtains of our habitation" are liable to be blown down by the winds of doctrine, blowing hither and thither, or by the cyclones of worldliness which sweep many into destruction. See to it that the work of conversion is thorough, and that men and women are rooted and grounded in Christ as their only hope for time and for eternity. Of the first evangelistic service held under the Christian dispensation, it was said by the inspired historian: "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were being saved." Let this be true of all our evangelistic meetings, and we cannot have too many of them, nor add too many to the church.

✧

This is the way our Methodist brethren do it. A new presiding elder sends this word out to the preachers in his district: "Send to —— the name and address of your members able to take the ——, and ask them to send a sample copy of the paper to them. Then as soon as they have read it, call and secure their subscriptions. Go at it at once, for now is the time to do this work. If you don't do it, no one will. You are the man. Go at it to succeed."

Your brother,

That presiding elder seems to understand the relation between the wide circulation of a good Methodist religious weekly in his district and the growth of Methodism in the same region. And yet there are some people among us who think we have no need of presiding elders! Perhaps our preachers know enough to attend to this work without being stirred up to it; but do they do it?

Giving Thanks Always For All Things

By F. D. Power

What is the meaning of Thanksgiving? The closing of the foot-ball season, or free dinners, or relaxation from business for a season with a visit to the old homestead and fellowship about a table groaning with its weight of turkey and pumpkin pie, or self congratulation over personal blessings, or a time to go to church and hear the minister descant on the glory of Old Glory, or a festival of gift-making to poor and needy? A little of each is all right, and yet more. Thanksgiving should be after the order of our mince pies—a mixture of many good things. No sane person will object to the "creature comforts," but the element of gratitude must be there. Such was the spirit of the fathers.

Bradford in his history of the Plymouth Plantation" says: "And besids water foule, ther was great store of wild Turkeys, of which they tooke many, besids venison, etc. Besids they had aboute a peck a meale a weeke to a person, or now since harvest, Indean corne to yt proportion. . . . And thus they found ye Lord to be with them in all their ways, and to blesse their outgoings and incomings, for which let his holy name have ye praise for ever, to all posteritie."

But Bradford and Standish and Brewster and the rest had in mind more than the fowling and the "deere" and the "Indean Corne." Above all they had the opportunity of great victories, the joy of conquest, the promise of a new world. To-day ours is the religious service of praise, the proclamation and observance by the state, and the dinner in honor of harvest abundance; ours the fellowship of beloved fellow pilgrims, and ours the assurance that the Lord is with us in all our ways to bless our outgoings and incomings; and ours also the opportunity to accomplish great things, and the vision of a glorious future for the nation and for the race.

It is well to be thankful for the smaller mercies. Sidney Smith said: "I once gave a lady two and twenty receipts against melancholy; one was a bright fire; another, is remember all the pleasant things said to her; another to keep a box of sugar-plums on the chimney-piece and a kettle simmering on the hob. I thought this mere trifling at the moment, but have in after life discovered how true it is that these little pleasures often banish melancholy better than higher and more exalted objects; and that no means ought to be thought too trifling which can oppose it either in ourselves or in others." I remember a prayer that impressed me when a college student by one of my mates, now the beloved head of Hiram, in which he thanked God for "the cloud and the storm." Thoreau saw men felling trees. "Thank God," he said, "man can't cut down the clouds!" Like a true philosopher he found comfort in the clouds.

Here we are in the golden season of the year. Was nature ever so beautiful? How glad we are that we live! How thankful for our perfect autumn days! What peace comes to the mind, what kindness to the heart, if we but take a little walk out into the woods! What a charming world with its happy life all about us, with its music of thanksgiving borne on every breeze! We are in the midst of Indian summer of which Frank Stanton says:

A lulling song of locusts—the hum of golden bees,
And you seem to hear the sap flow through the thrilled veins of the trees;
And the bazy, mazy, daisy, dreaming world around you seems Like a mystic land enchanted—like a paradise of dreams!

Blue smoke from happy huts—
A rain of ripened nuts,
And far away, o'er meadows ringing,
Sweet sounds, as of a woman singing!
"Comin' through the rye—
Comin' through the rye!"

And the faint, uncertain, silver tenor of a bell
That summons all the winds to prayer in many a cloistered dell;
And then a thrush's music from groves with golden gleams,
The wild note of a mocking bird, and still the dreams! the dreams!

Blue smoke from happy huts—
A rain of ripened nuts,
And far away, o'er meadows ringing,
Sweet songs, as of a woman singing!
"Comin' through the rye—
Comin' through the rye!"

If we had nothing else but the little blessings that crowd our pathway we might give thanks, but there is the larger civilization, the larger inheritance that is ours in the church and the nation. President Eliot of Harvard is our Cassandra. "Churches, courts, and legislatures command less respect and have less influence now than thirty years ago," says the seer of evil. "Education," he thinks, "is the one agency for promoting intelligence and righteousness which has gained strength in the last half century." What he says of the advance of education will not be questioned, but this in itself is due to the progress of the church. There is a decline in the warfare of creeds, but there has been corresponding gain in the power and influence of all religious agencies. Statistics of money given and work performed by the various religious bodies exhibit increasing, not declining interest in religion. Take our own showing at Detroit for example. No doubt we need in all the churches a trumpet call to greater consecration, and such an appeal as that of the United Society of Christian Endeavor for united and individual prayer on Tuesday, Dec. 1, for a revival of spiritual power, is well made. Worldliness and indifference are prevalent in the church; commercialism and political corruption are wide-spread in the state; whole-hearted service and out-spoken devotion are lessons we need to learn to-day, but the gospel was never more gloriously preached, or more widely disseminated, or more abundantly effective, or more universally applied than in our time.

Optimism, when one gets it well, is incurable. Carlyle had been bored by Emerson's persistent habit in this respect and undertook to cure him. Taking him into the lowest parts of London, he showed him all that was going on there. "And, noo mon," said the gloomy dyspeptic, "d'ye believe in the deevil noo?" "Oh, no," replied Emerson, "all these people seem to me only parts of the great machine, and on the whole, I think they are doing their work very satisfactorily." Then taking him to the House of Commons: "There I showed him ane chiel getting up after anither and leeing and leeing. There I turned to him and said, 'And noo mon, d'ye believe in the deevil noo?' He made me, however, just the same answer as before, and then I gave him up in despair."

But that was the philosopher; the Christian has a better ground for his optimism. The Methodist minister was much annoyed at a dear brother's habit of frequently shouting "Glory!" "Praise the Lord!" Though often reproved, the happy soul persisted in expressing himself. One day the minister invited him to tea, and to take his mind from thoughts of praise, handed him a scientific book, full of dry facts and figures, to pass the time before supper was announced. Presently the preacher was startled by a sudden outburst of "Glory!" "Hallelujah!" "Praise the Lord!" "What's the matter?" asked the preacher. "Why this book says the sea is five miles deep!" "Well, what of that?" "Why the Bible says my sins have been cast into the depths of the sea, and if it is that deep, I need not be afraid of their ever coming up again. Glory! Glory!" The preacher gave up all hope of reforming him.

Yes, there is always a place for Thanksgiving. To quote again my favorite poet:

Back of the gloom—
The bloom!
Back of the strife—
Sweet life.

And flowering meadows that glow and gleam,
Where the winds sing joy and the daisies dream,
And the sunbeams color the quickening clod,
And faith in the future, and trust in God.

Back of the gloom—
The bloom!

Fronting the night—
The light!
Under the snows—
The rose!

And the vales sing joy to the misty hills,
And the wild winds ripple it down the rills;
And the far stars answer the song that swells
With all the music of all the bells!
Fronting the night—
The light!

On Reading and Readers By W. D. Howe

"Reading maketh a full man."

In the line quoted, Francis Bacon gave expression to a sentiment which is as true to-day as in the sixteenth century. Much has been said about reading and the reader from Bacon's day to the present, so that there seems to be nothing new to be said. Yet it may not be amiss to ask in the hurry of the present, "Where is the reader?" "Have we forgotten how to read, what to read, and what is the spirit of the reader?"

To know how to read was once a mark of distinction. The first readers in English were enthusiasts. In England, as well as on the continent of Europe, the renaissance was a rebirth not only in the revival of the literatures of classic Greece and Rome after a long sleep in the middle ages, but also in the blossoming of a new spirit. People began to read. To satisfy this craving, Wiclif translated the Bible into the vernacular, Langland wrote an allegory on life and social conditions in his "Vision of Piers Plowman," and the great Chaucer told stories and drew pictures of the people who had risen from the lethargy of the middle ages, nor did the old romances cease to spin their well-worn stories of mediæval life. Then William Caxton set up about 1470 the first printing press at Westminster, a mere toy, many thought, little knowing that a new day had dawned for England and the world.

The reading public, however, first came into being in the eighteenth century. Addison and Steele in the "Tatler" and "Spectator" first showed their countrymen what a pleasure it was to have at their breakfast tables little papers containing the latest gossip, genial pleasantry, and exquisite sketches of city and country life. So the century which is marked by the rise of the magazine, the beginning of the novel and the development of the essay, is likewise to be remembered for the growth of the reading public.

With the increase in reading, there was a corresponding increase in the number of readers and of books, until to-day the last two have almost exceeded our power of counting. There are many favorable signs in this increase, for example, a proportionate decrease of illiteracy. Yet there are certain danger signals which we may see ahead. Some of us are lost in the world of books where all books seem the same, and those of to-day change places for those of to-morrow. Some of us read everything, but with little profit. Some, we hope many, keep to those books which have the truth of human life, and read with the spirit of the true reader.

As we study the lives of our great writers and scholars, we are constantly reminded how scanty were their libraries from which they drew their inspiration for their great work. The Bible, Pilgrim's Progress, Homer, Shakespeare, Arabian Nights, Milton, and two or three others, have brought a new light to hosts of readers and writers. Have we something to take the place of these and others of the great works of the past?

This query must have occurred to many, for we find a recent book entitled, "The Last Art of Reading." This state of affairs suggests then that, perhaps, we are no longer reading the great old books which our fathers read, and again we may not be reading anything as they read.

The ideal of reading, then, is what? To enrich the mind and imagination from the store-houses of the past, to train the judgment, to make clear the vision, to fill the mind with noble sentiments, to show the true from the false, the permanent from the transitory, to please by the presentation of the beautiful or the little fables of human nature.

The true reader has learned that the classic literatures of Greece and Rome begin with a freshness of thought and of art, the middle ages abound in legends: superstitions and allegory; the modern era thrills with an enthusiastic endeavor to rediscover the world and to give all life a new meaning. Is it not strange then that we should even consider such a question as "who of all the hosts of readers knows Homer, Dante, or even Shakespeare?" Is it not because we are so encompassed about by novels, stories, books of criticism, essays, magazines, newspapers—books in the shop windows, books in the trolley cars, packs of magazines when we leave for our vacation, or "the latest books for summer reading," newspapers at the clubs or over the cup of coffee? No wonder then that it is with apology that we withdraw to a secluded spot to pore over the "Essays of Elia," or "Pendennis," or "David Copperfield," or a volume of an old poet! That we should speak in a whisper. "Sentimental you must be," or "How do you find time to read anything of those old writers. I can't keep up with new ones, let alone going back to Milton, Wordsworth, Cowper. Besides I find something modern in the new things which I don't see in the old."

It is true, of course, that not all the good died with our fathers. We live in the present and must get sustenance from the world about us, and yet we are in many senses "the heirs of all the ages," and with the poet must try to know that "one increasing purpose" which runs through all time. The true reader, then, must not forget those great books which have survived till the present.

Again there is the light reader. He fills his mind with the story dropped yesterday from the press, he reads it on the trolley car, or at the club after luncheon. The new novels, the magazines and the newspapers are his literary meat and drink. At first he says he has not the time for "heavy" reading. It is not long until he can't and there's the pity, for we know how ready a pupil the mind is. Feed it with substantial fare and it is soon able to digest the heaviest, feed it continuously with the light and the heavy clogs, so that the machine refuses to work. So-called light reading is so nearly of the same level that it soon produces a mediocre mind. The mind is like a field. If put under proper cultivation it yields thirty, sixty or an hundred fold; if improperly tilled it soon shows the result in the harvest.

In this day of hurry, we are constantly met with the statement, "I have not the time for reading." In his recently published reminiscences, "My Own Story," Mr. J. T. Trowbridge tells how, as a boy working whole days on the farm he was still able to economize his time and spend it in reading until he became a well-read man, a great story-writer and a constant companion of all the great literary men of the time. Ruskin urges them to spend some of the time, which we spend with our coachmen at the stable, in the communion with those great minds in the study. It is a pity that those volumes rest all the time upon our shelves and are not taken down for a moment's glance. A moment's glance will often give us something for a day or for a life-time.

More than the enrichment of the mind by reading of the past, more than the training that comes from close and serious thinking of what we read, is the individuality which is developed by careful and discriminate reading. There are many sides to human nature, there are many points of contact between ourselves and our fellows, and so we go to the novel, the drama, the essay, or the lyric poem to learn a bit more about human life. By the impressions from these pictures, our life is moulded into a new personality, filled with warm sympathy, brightened by a kindly view; inspired by a noble motive, strengthened in a fine resolve, and trained to a richer pleasure.

Our lives are passed in moving among our fellow-creatures and in reading. As we choose with care our associates among men, so we shall not the less wisely make our choice of the latter. For every one of us is prepared a happy old age if we have by our sides those books which have thrilled us in our youth, opened up life as we grew into manhood, helped us to understand more of life as we grew older, and comforted us as we refined into old age.

The New Birth of John Storkins

By Fremont Warriner

It was a cold, dank, dismal night in late Autumn. A belated car was threading its way through the crowded streets on its last up-town trip. Its seats were filled with grumbling men, whose toes were being trodden on by others standing in the crowded aisle, the drippings from whose umbrellas added to the general discomfort.

Still, it is not true that all were grumblers in the car. There was a group of hearty looking young fellows, clerks, perhaps, from the down-town offices, who, in the midst of the general gloom, were making merry jests and laughing heartily.

"So old Storkins is really dead?" said one.

"There is said to be no question about it," said another, "one of the surgeons who arrived first at the wreck is reported to have positively identified the body."

"Well," said a third, "if he is really dead he'll not grind out the spirits of any more over-worked clerks nor turn any more poor tenants out into the street."

"Very true," said the first speaker, "and of course there will be a funeral; but there'll be no tears shed there, not even by his nephew, who, I understand, is his only heir. To-morrow will be his first real Thanksgiving day if it brings him a fortune."

At this point the car stopped. An elderly man of medium stature, who had been crowded into a corner, began making vigorous efforts to arise. By using his elbows and the handle of his umbrella with vigor and emphasis upon those standing near he managed to clear his way to the door, when he alighted and took his way along the street until he came to his lodging. Arrived at his room, he lighted the gas and stood revealed, a man of rather harsh countenance and threadbare clothing. There was a look about him now of haggardness, seemingly born of unusual fear, such as may be noted in men who receive unexpected news of disaster. This man, throwing off his coat, heavy with the dampness of the storm, sat himself in an easy chair before the open grate. With his elbows on the arms of his chair, his chin resting on his hands, he gazed steadily into the fire for an hour or more, without moving a muscle. There was no account taken of the passing of time. Later, as the iron-throated bells in the city proclaimed that the hour of two had arrived, he arose, and with the same harassed look upon his face, turned out the gas and threw himself upon the bed.

But sleep, woo it as he would, did not come. His senses appeared, it is true, to become dulled and dim, but his mind, as he himself always contended afterward, remained as alert and keen as ever in his life. In explaining the remarkable events that followed it will be well to note and remember this.

There was no light in the room except such as came from the dying embers of the grate, which burned for a moment fitfully, then nearly died away, then came to active life again, sending grotesque shadows of chairs and other furniture about the room. The man, wide-awake, yet trying hard to sleep, looked steadily at the fire. He watched the long shadows as they danced across the room, fancied dreamily that they were living beings sent to banish sleep from his eyelids. Again, they seemed like men with sombre garments and solemn faces, conferring among themselves, saying to each other that John Storkins was dead at last, and repeating with solemn glee that no tears would be shed at his funeral on the morrow. All this, product of his imagination as he then believed it to be, did not conduce to sleep. On the contrary, he became more awake than ever.

Afterward, the man lying on the bed became aware that someone was sitting by his side, looking attentively at him. The room, too, was suddenly flooded with light and the shadows gone. The wonder of it all was that there did not appear to be anything frightful or uncanny about it. It seemed perfectly natural and to be expected that a room should be filled with light, and a stranger appear from nowhere and seat himself by one's bedside in the dead of night. The man on the bed, who had entirely given up the notion of sleep, did not regard the occurrence as at all extraordinary.

"John Storkins," said the strange visitor, looking calmly into his eyes as he spoke, "you are surprised at receiving a visit from me are you not?"

John Storkins, lying on the bed, attempted to arise, but found such a feeling in his legs that to move was out of the question. He looked at his visitor for a moment without a word.

"Tell me," he said, "am I John Storkins? and if I am he, am I living or dead?"

"You are certainly John Storkins," said the stranger, with a suggestion of a smile, "and as certainly you are living. More than that, you are yet to live, I trust, in a fuller sense than you have ever known before. But, for the moment, this is not to the point. Do you know me?"

"I have no knowledge of how you came here," said John Storkins, "but if I can trust my own mind you are Eugene, my old college mate."

A look of pleasure passed over the face of his companion.

"And," continued John Storkins, "it comes curiously to my mind how persistently and earnestly you used to try to make me conform to your Christian faith, which I rejected and despised as unworthy a man of spirit and energy."

"Tell me John, have you found, after a life that measures up fully to your idea of success, that happiness and satisfaction have come as the reward you expected?"

A look of pain and unrest was never more plain on human countenance than passed over the face of John Storkins. Without waiting for a reply, Eugene bade him arise and go with him. The idea of taking a night journey on such a night and at that late hour did not occur to John Storkins as at all incongruous. They went on a winding way down through deserted neighborhoods that during the hours of light were alive with the roar of busy traffic, until they came to the very building where John Storkins had spent the best years of his life; not only to the building itself, but the very office where he spent his working hours. He knew, of course, that it was night, but it did not occur to him at all surprising that the office should be open and business going on as usual. There, at his desk, seated at his usual tall stool, was his clerk, Tim Allerton, who had been in his employ ten years and more, but he did not understand why a man that he did not know should be seated at his own desk. He was about to address him when his companion bade him first take a good look at the stranger. He did so, and saw that he was elderly in appearance and very intent upon his work. More surprising still, he noted on close examination that he wore a heavy chain upon his neck that wound itself about his arms and body and fastened him to his chair. He saw, too, that his face was seamed and scarred, and in his eyes a look of care and weariness, as though carrying a mental burden too heavy to be borne. John Storkins looked at his companion to ask what all this meant.

"It means," said Eugene, "that the man at the desk yonder is yourself. Behold, and tell me if you are happy. You have an opportunity to see yourself as you have never done before. You used to say that religion was slavery, that you preferred a life of liberty. Is the man at the desk, bound to his work with the chains of selfish ambition, a free man or a slave?"

John Storkins could not for the moment reply, but the look on his face was serious in the extreme.

"Take a good look and think rapidly," said Eugene, "for I have other things to show you."

A little later they were in the street again, and soon came to a building that John Storkins had never seen. They entered and in a moment found themselves in an upper room. Upon a bed lay a woman with a white face, in whose eyes the light of earthly life was rapidly fading. Kneeling at her side was another woman, whose hand was upon the brow of the one who was dying. Eugene whispered to his companion that he had brought him here to teach him a lesson he hoped would be of more worth than all the business maxims he had learned in all his successful career. They stood for many moments gazing at the scene before them. It was a new experience for John Storkins.

"I seem," said the invalid at last in a faint voice, "to see beautiful angel faces about me, but none sweeter than yours. My sister, hold my hand and raise my head for just a moment, you have saved a soul—and—eternity—"

The angels had taken her, and the one who was left raised her tear-stained eyes and seemed from the rapt expression of her face to see the gates ajar.

John Storkins and his friend were on the street again.

"That house," said Eugene, "is the Magdalen Refuge, a home for fallen women. You will recall that you were once asked to contribute for its endowment. Have you forgotten it."

John Storkins remembered it. He also recalled that he had turned the men away who called to see him regarding it with an oath. There was no comfort whatever in the reflection. He thought, too, as he walked, that if in all his life he could recall some deed causing such happiness as he had seen upon that woman's face, the memory of it would be far more pleasing than his present reflections.

On the street again there appeared to be something stifling in the air he breathed, but thoughts were welling up from some unknown depth of his nature, as coming from the abyss of a wasted life, that troubled him infinitely more. But on they went and on until they came into a familiar neighborhood and stopped before a door that John Storkins recognized as belonging to the home of his nephew.

It was a plainly furnished but exceedingly neat room into which the visitors came. Arthur Storkins, the nephew, and his wife were seated at the bedside of a boy, the paleness of whose face and the apparent wasting of whose frame were evident to John Storkins and his companion.

"At last he is sleeping," said Arthur.

"God grant he may be better," said the weary-faced wife. "It will be a sorry Thanksgiving day with little Robert so low and wasting with fever. If your Uncle John could only see him now."

"Uncle John!" said Arthur with a gesture of impatience; "don't mention him with Robert so low. The very thought seems fateful of disaster. What do you suppose, my dear, he cares about Robert or you or me or anything but the grinding out of a few more dollars before his poor, shriveled soul goes where the love of money yields its proper fruit?"

"Do not be too hard on poor John Storkins," said the wife. "With all his selfishness and even all his riches, surely he merits our pity."

Arthur was bending low over the sick boy.

"He's truly sleeping at last," he said. "He seems quiet and moist. Let us thank the good God for hope."

"Let us cast out all hate of a fellow-man first," said the wife quietly.

"You are right, Alice," said Arthur. "You are always right. I was hasty. Your bringing my uncle between me and Robert at such a time angered me. I do not hate him, God forbid. I do pity him. My father died poor, but he had a soul. He could feel sorrow for suffering, which can be carried with one when we come to die. That is more than Uncle John can say, who will go when his times comes without a tear of gratitude on the books of the recording angel to his credit. You are right, Alice, when you say he merits our pity."

John Storkins was about to step forward, but was restrained by his companion, who took him by the arm and led him away. On the street, familiar as it was, there was something new and fresh about the air. John Storkins was thinking as he had never thought before, while his companion watched him narrowly. Arrived at last near his lodging, he stopped at a stall where he remembered seeing a great array of Thanksgiving turkeys the day before. He tried the door, which was securely locked. He tugged and pulled at the latch with might and main until it gave way at last, and John Storkins found himself sprawled upon the floor of his room with a broken fragment of his easy chair in his hand.

He arose and looked about him. There was the bed on which he had lain, the grate, cold and cheerless, while through the window the bright autumn sun was shining. He was alone. He stood for full two minutes staring, with his hands in his pockets, an attitude which would have caused anyone to say that John Storkins was beside himself. Then he noticed a loud whistling below and heard quick footsteps on the pavement. He sprang to the window, threw it up and looked out.

"Hi, there!" he said. "Just wait a moment, will you, my boy, only a moment."

Then he went down the stairs at a gait no one would have supposed John Storkins capable of, and in a moment was on the street.

"Here, my boy," he said breathlessly, "I want you to go round the corner to the market and tell the butcher to save me the big turkey. The big one, mind you," said he, "not one of the common ones, but the monster turkey I saw there yesterday. And here," said he, out of breath again, "you're a good boy, I know. I've often noticed you about here, and I know you're a very nice boy. I think your mother ought to have a turkey to-day, too. We'll surprise her on this Thanksgiving day. Take this, my boy," crowding into his hand a coin that caused the boy to stare first at John Storkins and then at the gift.

Then he went up stairs again to dress, and if anyone had met him on the stairs he would have heard something very much like a quiet laugh deep down in John Storkins' throat, for in truth he was mightily pleased at the boy's look of astonishment when he gave him the money. It was a very

BAD HABITS

Improper Food Often Leads to Tobacco and Drink.

Improper food creates abnormal tastes and there are many cases on the medical records where the liquor habit and tobacco habit have been caused by wrong food, and have easily been cured by the use of the scientific food Grape-Nuts which so thoroughly nourishes and rebuilds the nerves that they stop the cry for stimulants.

A business man says: "For 30 years I smoked on an average of 10 or 15 cigars a day, and then my nervous system collapsed and I had about made up my mind that it was all up with me, for I had tried many times to break off from the tobacco, but it always failed.

"Last May I was so run down I only weighed 111 pounds, and I realized that I must stop smoking and stuck to it for about 10 days, but was so nervous and out of sorts my family told me I had better go back to smoking, as it was impossible to live with me. It was just about this time my wife brought a package of Grape-Nuts on the table one morning, and as I could eat nothing else, she induced me to try a little of that. So I took a teaspoonful of it and strange to say, it tasted good and by the time I had it down, I knew it had gone to the right spot, so I took some more and it was the first food I had relished for weeks.

"So I kept up the use of Grape-Nuts, and as my appetite came back, added other foods, and I am now back to my old weight of 133 pounds, never felt better in my life, and strange as it may seem, I have no further craving for the tobacco, and I thoroughly believe that only the courage and ambition I got out of the food Grape-Nuts has given me the strength to quit smoking. If everyone knew the power of this wonderful food, you would not be able to build a factory big enough to supply it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

The past year has witnessed the publication of some notable books among the Disciples of Christ. The Disciples have always inclined to periodical publication, and from the beginning of our history there has been an abundant supply of monthly magazines and weekly papers. But in these latter days, while there has been a growing interest in our weekly papers, there is an even greater increase of emphasis upon book publication.

This is a wholesome sign. It means that we have something worth preserving in permanent form, something that we can with propriety place upon the bookshelves side by side with the great works of literature.

The most important historical work published among the Disciples of Christ this year, or for several years, is Power's "Life of Pendleton." The life of a man like Pendleton is a history of the times in which he lived. He was born thirty-one years later than Mr. Campbell. His religious movement had recently separated itself (or, rather, had been separated) from the denominations to which its early members had belonged, and was beginning to feel the consciousness of a life of its own, when Mr. Pendleton joined it, strong in the strength of a splendid young manhood, brilliant by natural endowment, cultured in the best schools and by familiar intercourse with the best society. He was from the first engaged in the work of Bethany College. He became co-editor and then editor of the Millennial Harbinger. In literary and educational labors he was abundant. Among the men of the second generation in our movement, he was perhaps the greatest figure. Living to the ripe old age of eighty, his life covered almost the first century of our history and his memoirs are more nearly co-extensive with the history of the Disciples of Christ in the nineteenth century than those of any other man could be. The biographer has dealt sympathetically and ably with his great theme. The work will take its place as a permanent addition to our literature and a valuable contribution to the history of the Disciples of Christ.

"The Christ in Modern English Literature," by George Hamilton Combs, is a book which, while written from the point of view of the Disciples of Christ, makes a general appeal to the Christian world. The author has found a new field, a rich mine which had never before been worked. We have had books on the theology of the great poets, but no student of literature has ever before set himself the task of tracing the influence of Christ upon the world's great writers. Yet it is a familiar truth that Christ is the greatest factor in our modern civilization, and civilization finds expression in literature. Mr. Combs' book is the work of a careful and thoughtful student and a brilliant and suggestive writer. It is commanding a wide reading among thinking people.

A five years' journey around the world is a large and interesting undertaking under any conditions. But when a young American, without money, starts to make that trip, working his way and living among the people of the lands through which he passes, it is worth while to watch him. Mr. Anderson, a member of one of our churches in Southern California and an ardent Christian Endeavorer, performed this interesting feat, first visiting every state in the union and then working his way through Europe, Africa and Asia, returning to his home with more money than he had to begin with. His book, "An Endeavorer's Working Journey Around the World," is a simple, straightforward narrative which will interest every one who cares to learn of the world's workers, and it will be an inspiration to any healthy and enterprising young person. It is illustrated with nearly thirty full-page pictures taken especially for this book. The introduction is written by the famous humorist-preacher, Robert J. Burdette.

There are many sorts of missionary books, but "A Chinese Story-Teller" represents a new sort. It tells of the life and adventures of a Chinaman whose profession—a common one in oriental countries—was that of a story-teller. He knew all the legends and myths and popular tales, and earned his living by telling these to the crowds that would gather on the street corners, in the tea-houses, on the bridges, wherever he set up his paper umbrella and sounded his pig-skin drum. This story-teller was converted to Christ and, with his old knack of catching the popular ear and finding an audience everywhere, he became a useful and wonderfully successful preacher. He is still working in China with the missionaries of our own Foreign Society, and one of them has written this fascinating story of his life. It is full of interesting glimpses of Chinese home life in village and city. There are a number of half-tone illustrations from photographs, but the most remarkable feature is a group of full-page pictures, nine in number, from drawings made by a Chinese artist especially for this book and illustrating various striking events in the story-teller's life. These pictures give the book a unique interest and value. The elaborate cover design, in yellow and black, is also the work of a Chinese artist.

"Helps to Faith," by J. H. Garrison, has already been so widely read and reviewed that it scarcely needs further comment. Into this book the author has put his best thoughts about the Christian religion, arranged systematically and stated with reference to the strengthening of the faith of those who waver, the conviction and conversion of the unbelieving, and the enlargement and enrichment of the faith of all. The publishers and the author have received many testimonies to the good which the book has already done and the strength and comfort which it has brought to many perplexed and troubled souls.

"A Modern Plea for Ancient Truths," a smaller book by the same author as the preceding, sets forth the plea of the Disciples of Christ for a return to pure and primitive Christianity. It is not polemic or argumentative in tone, but is calculated to appeal most strongly to the spiritually minded. Several pastors have put this book into the hands of all new converts as an aid to their growth in grace.

The late J. M. Atwater was widely known among the Disciples of Christ as a preacher and educator. Many of his addresses possessed a solid worth which make them even more valuable when reduced to print than they were as originally delivered. A number of his best addresses, religious and literary, have been collected and published, under the editorial care of Anna Robson Atwater, in a volume entitled "Jehovah's War Against False Gods." A memorial sketch is written by Prof. Frederick Treudley.

Among our born orators, E. L. Powell occupies a high place. His sermons have the fire and enthusiasm of true eloquence and the intellectual quality which shows their author to be a thinker as well as a speaker. His addresses exhibit the same admirable qualities, and this volume entitled "Savonarola," made up of a characteristic collection of patriotic and religious addresses, will augment his already wide reputation.

Thanksgiving.

By Josephine Weatherly.

There are certain days in the life of a nation that stand out distinct and clear because of some special deliverance, some important event or some great truth they commemorate. For this they may well be called memorial days, and as such should be great educational factors to the rising generation.

Such a memorial day is Thanksgiving; and since its origin goes away back into the early history of our country, it would not be out of place to consider briefly the setting which gave it birth.

In December, 1620, a band of 120 pilgrims landed on the stern and rock-bound coast of Plymouth, Massachusetts. Driven from England, their mother country, for conscience' sake, almost starved and frozen during this, their first winter in the wilds of America, surrounded by the treacherous red men, they yet felt called upon to set aside a day for special thanksgiving. A day when their trials and hardships seemed so completely overshadowed by their mercies, that in sincerity of heart they could truly be thankful and exclaim with the sweet singer of Israel, "Oh, give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good."

Thankful for what, oh, noble-hearted Puritans? Thankful that after much wandering they had at last found a land where they could worship God according to the dictates of their own conscience! Thankful that not more of them had died of cold and hunger! Thankful that forest and stream yielded them a livelihood! Thankful that the field of corn waved over the graves of their dead and thus protected them from the desecration of the red man! Thankful that the scant harvest supplied them with seed for the next year's sowing! Not much to be thankful for, and yet to this may be traced this great memorial day; no longer observed by a handful of fugitives, but by a vast nation and a mighty people, who, for at least one day in the year, have their attention called to God, the giver of every good and perfect gift.

Governor Bradford issued the first Thanksgiving proclamation at the earnest solicitation of these Pilgrims of Plymouth colony in the fall of 1621. In this proclamation he called them together for special worship and then added that feasting and romping might follow this, providing that all again became orderly by the next Lord's day. As the day for worship was set for Thursday, this would leave two days for a general good time.

A few days before the memorable event, gunners scoured the woods for wild turkeys, ducks and other fowl; boys enticed the finny tribe of the streams; while housewives and maidens set the homes and especially the kitchens in apple-pie order; and then they said:

We'll invite our friends by the dozens,
All the uncles, aunts and cousins
Great and small.
Then we'll have the turkey roasted,
And the old-time goodies boastpd,
Oh, Thanksgiving will be welcome
Every fall!"

Massasoit and ninety of his braves having been invited to visit the colony, awoke the inhabitants on the appointed Thursday with such yells as only the red skin can give.

Presently all the men, women and children assembled in the large square in front of Governor Bradford's house, where the exercises were begun with a prayer both fervent and long. All the rest of that day and for the two succeeding days, feasting, romping and story-telling were the amusements. Even the gallant Miles Standish, with his little American army of twenty men, entered into the spirit of the occasion and gave drills and went through maneuvers to the delight of the children and the astonishment of the Indians.

While the women, God bless them, cooked and baked and set tables and were happy in loving ministration as true women ever will be.

What did they have to eat? Well, in the first place, that Thanksgiving bird, the turkey, was there puffed up to more than usual size by a rich chestnut dressing. He was closely pressed in favor by huge steaks of venison, roast duck, baked oysters, barley-flower dumpling, lobster salad and clam-chowder, while a typical English plum pudding, cakes of all shapes and sizes and grapes and nuts made a dessert fit for a king!

At first Massachusetts alone observed a Thanksgiving; then the custom was taken up by the neighboring states, and it was not until 1862 that President Lincoln issued the first proclamation that made it a national holiday. But as a proclamation from Lincoln was not binding upon the southern states at that time, they being in rebellion, that portion of our country did not observe the day until after Grant became president.

At the present time the keeping of Thanksgiving consists in attending a morning church service followed by a big family dinner. Our lives are too strenuous to permit of more time being given up to it.

But the dinner! The whole nation participates in the dismemberment of turkey without the intervention of any foreign power!

It will take about twelve million quarts of cranberries, eight million turkeys, and oysters, celery, pumpkin and mince pies in like proportion for this nation to return thanks in a proper manner, and from millions of grateful hearts will ascend the song, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow."

AN OLD TIMER

Has Had Experiences.

A woman who has used Postum Food Coffee since it came upon the market 8 years ago, knows from experience the necessity of using Postum in place of coffee if one values health and a steady brain.

She says: "At the time Postum was first put on the market, I was suffering from nervous dyspepsia and my physician had repeatedly told me not to use tea or coffee. Finally I decided to take his advice and try Postum and got a sample and had it carefully prepared, finding it delicious to the taste. So I continued its use and very soon its beneficial effects convinced me of its value, for I got well of my nervousness and dyspepsia.

"My husband had been drinking coffee all his life until it had affected his nerves terribly. I persuaded him to shift to Postum and it was easy to get him to make the change for the Postum is so delicious. It certainly worked wonders for him.

"We soon learned that Postum does not exhilarate or depress and does not stimulate, but steadily and honestly strengthens the nerves and the stomach. To make a long story short, our entire family have now used Postum for eight years with completely satisfying results as shown in our fine condition of health, and we have noticed a rather unexpected improvement in brain and nerve power." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Increased brain and nerve power always follow the use of Postum in place of coffee, sometimes in a very marked manner.

God's Kingdom.

Thomas Curtis Clark.

God's kingdom cometh not by night;
Not hers the sword and spear to fight
Her dark-browed enemy;
Her sword must be the word of love,
Her shield, the right, born from above,
To gain the victory.

God's kingdom cometh not with show,
The trumpet's blare, the torch's glow,
With conquered foe enslaved;
Her coming means the pitying eye,
The tender word, the will to die,
The gentle life true lived.

God's kingdom cometh not full grown;
The twinkling of an eye alone
Ne'er made a throne secure;
She asks the ages, not the years;
By ceaseless war, the way prepares
For rule that shall endure.

News From Many Fields

Arkansas.

The writer held a meeting of nine days recently at Antioch, (P. O.) Tull, resulting in nineteen baptisms, the enrollment of over fifty members, where they had not been meeting for three years, and arrangements for building a house of worship. Bro. D. T. Stanley, recently from De Soto, Mo., is now in a meeting at Okolona; present results, 24 added. Other good and encouraging work will be reported next week.

The best recent news for the state of Arkansas is the interest taken by leading men among the Disciples in the effort to build a suitable house in a suitable locality for Hot Springs. The importance of this point has attracted the attention of such men as J. H. Garrison, editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, J. A. Lord, editor of the Christian Standard, B. L. Smith, corresponding secretary of home missions, Hall and Updyke, evangelists, and others, all agreeing that the interest of the cause demands a better building in a better locality.

This movement, led by T. N. Kincaid, the irrepressible, seconded and advocated by such men as those mentioned above, and aided by his faithful coadjutors at home, has resulted in an appropriation of $900 per year, for five years, from the "Clark fund" for the support of preachers, on the condition that a like sum, payable quarterly, be raised toward the lot and building fund. This will amount to $2,700. One thousand dollars toward the lot has already been paid. A large sum of money will yet have to be raised before this magnificent property can be secured and made available. Its success is assured, on condition of earnest co-operative work. The secretary of the National Benevolent Association told the writer that the next enterprise they wanted to undertake would be the Hot Springs Christian Home. But these two enterprises must go up together. Brethren let us stand by them.

E. C. BROWNING.

Indiana.

News from the offering are coming in encouragingly. One church that has not hitherto contributed to state work, reports $100. The people of that church were always all right at heart, but this year they had a preacher who led them, and $100 is their response. Another church that has heretofore contributed something, this year reports $35, about double the amount contributed heretofore. Their preacher gave them a chance and they acted upon it. The hearts of Indiana brethren have always been all right toward missions, and all that was and is needed, is for their pastors to present state missions, and they will respond—are responding now. Keep it up, brethren, till every church sends its offering.

A short time ago I gave notice that Indiana has not preachers enough to go round; but the desire of that co-operation partnership—of preachers and churches in Indiana known as the Indiana Christian Missionary Society, is for preachers who will come to the state and be partners with them. I have received many letters asking to be put into communication with preacherless churches, enclosing good credentials as to character, ability, education, etc., and always stating that they stand for state missions. All right, brethren, your credentials are all right, and your state secretary's books will show how you stand on state missions. So I hope soon to place you in correspondence with some of our good churches.

The churches themselves seem to be taking state mission offerings into their own hands; and it is an encouraging token. I have twelve letters received during the week from this class of churches. I quote from some of them:

"Our preacher said nothing about November day, but we saw it in the Indiana Christian and took a collection Sunday."

"Our preacher only comes once a month, and he said nothing about state work, but we read about it in the church papers, and we sent it to Brother Hackleman to-day."

"Our preacher quits Dec. 1. He has never preached a missionary sermon. We send you $2.35 ourselves, which we collected Sunday. Send us a preacher that will tell us about it."

"The papers are full of state missions. God knows this county needs them. We send in our mite. We have no preacher, or we could do better."

"For goodness sake, Brother Legg, send us a preacher with some vim in him. Our church is not poor, but some of us are stingy as Ananias, and we need stirring up. We missed the state collection, but we are going to take it anyhow the last Sunday."

I don't think the preachers are altogether and always at fault. Some of them have but fourth time at a place, and there are many calls; but the state board greatly appreciates the fact that a greatly increased number of preachers are finding a way or making a way to present the call for the November offering. When the offering is all in, no man or church who contributed to it will be ashamed.

T. J. LEGG.

Iowa.

Did you take the offering for the I. C. C.?

J. W. Kilburn, of Washburn, Ill., has accepted a call to the Keokuk Church.

H. W. Cies has accepted the work at Red Oak and will begin at once.

M. L. Cottrell goes to Pickering, Mo.

D. L. Norris goes to Clarksville.

Francis Devol, pastor of the church at Waucoma for the last year, has done a good work. He has not only preached the gospel acceptably, but has labored with his hands as a carpenter in order to keep the work going.

I can cite a physician, who is a member of the church, to a good location.

These are prosperous times at Stock Port. An excellent meeting of seven additions, $15 for the I. C. C., and a new daughter at the parsonage. We trust that the little daughter will not only be a joy to her parents now, but that she may be a comfort to them throughout their lives.

A. T. Wright has moved his family to Mitchellville and began his pastorate there the 8th inst.

Your secretary will dedicate the new church at Trullingers Grove Dec. 13.

Evangelist Anthony's meeting at Sigourney closed with 26 additions. He will begin at Barney next Wednesday night, the 18th.

There were 24 additions in Evangelist Stout's meeting the 11th inst. He will close Sunday night and go from there to Redfield.

Did you take the offering for I. C. C.? If not, do so at some time during the month of November.

B. S. DENNY, Cor. Sec.

Kentucky.

The meeting at the Broadway Church, Lexington, continues with large attendance at each service. At this writing there have been over 50 additions to the church. The meeting will close on Sunday night, Nov. 15.

There had been 18 additions in the Haley-Maclachlan meeting at Shelbyville at last report. It continues.

R. E. Moss, of Maysville, is in the midst of a good meeting with the church at Germantown. He expects to leave some time in January for a three month's trip to Europe and the Holy Land.

The meeting recently held at Chatham by T. S. Buckingham and H. C. Bowen, resulted in the organization of a church at that point.

Prof. Jno. Augustus Williams, one of the most prominent educators in Kentucky and an author of note, died last week at his home in Harrodsburg, after a short illness. He was president of Daughter's College for a number of years.

Milo Atkinson will close his work at Warsaw next month.

The meeting at Falmouth, in which the regular preacher, W. S. Willis, was assisted by M. G. Buckner, of Harrodsburg, closed with four additions.

The first convention of the eleventh C. W. B. M. district, held last week at Morehead, was a decided success.

The meeting recently held at Siloam by E. C. Wells, closed with nine additions.

Marion Pfanstiel recently closed a meeting with "home forces" at Brooksville, which closed with six additions. He is now assisting in a meeting at Milford.

Cecil J. Armstrong, of Winchester, is assisting the regular preacher, H. N. Reubelt, in a meeting at Lawrenceburg.

The Clifton Church, Louisville, will be rededicated on Nov. 22. Thad. S. Tinsley is the minister.

M. D. Clubb, who for the past two years has been acting as financial secretary of the College of the Bible, has just accepted a call to the church at Watsonville, Cali., where he expects to begin work some time in December. We regret exceedingly to lose Brother Clubb from "old Kaintuck," but our loss is certainly California's gain. May God bless him richly in his new field.

We had 12 more confessions at our regular service here last Sunday night. Nov. 8, and one addition by letter at prayer-meeting.

Midway, Ky.

GEO. W. KEMPER.

Nebraska.

R. A. Schell held a two weeks' meeting at Chester, with 10½ additions: 2 by letter, 3 baptisms, 2 by statement, 3 from "Saints' Church."

One added[at]Hastings on the 8th. Brother Kirchstein's resignation has not yet been accepted.

Eleven added at McCook in J. R. Parker's meeting; 2 by baptism. He is now at Indianola, and will probably hold a meeting at Bartley and Hendley following. The McCook work has been materially strengthened.

C. A. Young's meeting at Fairbury was well attended, and is reported as having done the church great good, though no additions resulted. H. C. Holmes has wisely decided to remain there indefinitely. The church were too well satisfied to let him go.

R. A. Givens is assisting J. K. Hester in a meeting at the Platte Valley Church. Two confessions reported. Brother Givens is available for a meeting after this closes. Write him at Cozad. He is so well-known in Nebraska that he needs no introduction.

Bro. J. K. Hester can be had for a meeting somewhere in the state in December or January. Address, Cozad.

J. H. Reeves preached at Minden two Lord's days recently.

The secretary spent the 6th at Filley and helped to start matters so that it is hoped to have preaching there. There is a good house with no debt, and the work ought to thrive. On Lord's day I preached in the morning at Rising City, and in the evening at Summit, both times presenting state missions. The pledges at the latter place were four times the apportionment, and at Rising almost full apportionment was raised. R. H. Harris has closed his work at these two points, and we are now seeking to locate a man there. On Monday evening I participated by invitation in the ordination of Bro. H. B. Hollingsworth at Craig. Bro. H. has closed his work there, and with his family will go this week to California. This move is deemed necessary on account of the health of Mrs. Hollingsworth. The ordination service was largely attended, and the expressions of love and regret for the departure of the pastor were many. Four confessions marked the closing days of his ministry, two of them on Tuesday. We lose a good man and a faithful pastor. The church is considering the matter of reseating the church.

Brownville has seated their new house with opera chairs. J. W. Sapp is the preacher. He will begin a meeting there soon. He reports that Walnut Grove Church, whose house was washed off its foundations, has made repairs, and he will preach for them on Lord's day afternoons.

Valparaiso comes with over 33 per cent more than the apportionment. Reports are coming in slowly, indicating a good interest in the offering. It is hoped that there will be a very general observance of the month for this purpose. Kind words come along with the remittances, too, which are worth their weight in gold. A number of new churches and Bible-schools are enrolled this year among the givers for the first time.

I will be at Omaha First Church on the 15th, and at Pawnee City on the 22nd, in the interests of state work.

In connection with the state offering, I wish to mention the gift of one of our older brethren, who has not regular employment, in sending one-half of his receipts, less the actual expense of going and coming, for missionary purposes. This is an example of unselfish and generous giving for the Lord's work that puts to shame all of us who are in the vigor of younger years and engaged on full pay. May we be worthy of these old saints who have blazed the way for us, and now still lead in the holy ministry of sacrifice!

The resignation of Bro. E. W. Cole, of Falls City, is announced. He will take the work at Hutchison, Kan. If these things do not cease soon, some one will have to come and sit up with this secretary! Brother Cole is well beloved by the Falls City brethren, and they will part with him with deep regret. We are all losers in his going.

H. G. Hill left Omaha finally on Monday evening, 9th inst. This closes his ministry, mention of which has been made before. His address will be Indianapolis, where he will be General Secretary of the American Christian Education Society. W. A. BALDWIN.

Buffalo and Vicinity.

On the evening of Nov. 10, Dr. Frederick D. Power, of Washington, D. C., delivered an address in our Richmond Avenue Church of Christ upon "Evangelism." This was preliminary to the organization of a new working force, to act in conjunction with the state board and the Disciples' Union of Buffalo, and to be known as the Niagara Frontier Disciples' Association. Great things are expected from it even in its incipency. The address of Dr. Power was strikingly characteristic, as clear-cut as a crystal and as brilliant. It abounded in telling points, was most felicitous in illustration and left an impression which cannot fail to act as a stirring impulse.

Fresh proof of vitality in the Richmond Avenue Church exists in the fact that a chapter of the genial and gracious Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip has just been organized under its auspices. The membership is already large and its influence and usefulness are assured.

By the way, the church has lately undergone marked improvement in several particulars. The heating and ventilating systems have been modified; the walls have been retinted and decorated; the wood work has been revarnished; a new Brussels carpet has been laid; the baptistry, heretofore invariably closed, has been painted a dead white, is furnished with thrifty palms, is now always open and is brilliantly lighted at night, all of which produces a very beautiful effect. This imperative condition of things was brought about through the energy and persistence of the new pastor, who not only works vigorously himself, but has a most enviable way of getting others to work.

Bro. B. S. Ferrall, late of Watseka, Ill., has entered upon his new pastorate with the Jefferson Street Church, and promises to be a valuable addition to the local brotherhood.

Bro. E. O. Tilburn, of the South Tonawanda Church, is now in California, having been advised by his physician to try a change of climate. If all reports are true, his condition must be regarded as somewhat critical.

All Stuffed Up

That's the condition of many sufferers from catarrh, especially in the morning. Great difficulty is experienced in clearing the head and throat.

No wonder catarrh causes headache, impairs the taste, smell and hearing, pollutes the breath, deranges the stomach and affects the appetite.

To cure catarrh, treatment must be constitutional—alterative and tonic.

"I was afflicted with catarrh. I took medicines of different kinds, giving each a fair trial; but gradually grew worse until I could hardly hear, taste or smell. I then concluded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after taking five bottles I was cured and have not had any return of the disease since." EUGENE FORBES, Lebanon, Kan.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Cures catarrh—it soothes and strengthens the mucous membrane and builds up the whole system.

Bro. W. C. Bower, of the North Tonawanda Tabernacle Church, is in a meeting which, judging from his consecration, ability and skill, is certain to prove a success.

Our church in Williamsville is in the throes of candidacy, with what result remains to be seen.

I have seen no mention in your columns that a Church of Christ was lately organized in the city of Dunkirk. Its beginnings are necessarily small, but its members are devoted and zealous, and it is believed that the enterprise is likely to succeed.

Our C. W. B. M. district convention is to be held with the church in Clarence on Nov. 21.

Our Forest Avenue Church remains pastorless, in spite of the fact that—as one of its officers informs me—more than forty applicants for the place have been received, and several candidates already have been heard.

ANSON G. CHESTER.

Baltimore.

The work seems very bright, Abbott's week of good things has passed, and every one is helped up. It is a fine idea to have such events, bringing all the churches and pastors together.

I had the pleasure of delivering a missionary address to the ladies of the Harlem Avenue Church last Tuesday. I think this society is the best one I know anywhere.

Peter Ainslie is just rushing things about the new church lot. He has a mountain to cut down, but Peter will go at this Xerxes style. A mountain will not stop him in his onward march.

Our meeting at Riverside Park Church is making splendid progress. We are using home forces. I do the preaching and everybody does the singing. We have the finest singing in the city—I mean congregational singing. We have had up to this time twelve additions, and have many more in sight. Bro. S. R. Maxwell will join us on Nov. 11, and will be with us for ten days. During this time we are expecting great things.

We are receiving money every mail now—I mean on the Thanksgiving offering, to pay the floating debt on our church. Reader, we want you to give something to this fund. We do not ask for large amounts, anything you will give we will greatly appreciate. I came to this city about eighteen months ago, and commenced this work. I had only eight members to begin with, all of these poor people. We now have a building that cost us $7,200. We have paid $4,500 of this amount. We have a note of $1,000 that must be paid in thirty days. I am asking you to help pay this. I signed these notes myself to get the money to build the house. We have now over 200 members. I am in a meeting, as you can see above; the meeting is one week old, with 12 additions to date. Help this splendid work.

Send all money to J. O. Shelburne, 1531 Belt Ave., Baltimore, Md.

Northern California.

Our state day has come and gone. It is safe to say that our churches are more interested to day in the evangelization of this great state than ever before. We have most gratifying results from our state day offering this year.

November, 1901, entire month, $112.

November, 1902, entire month, $512.

November, 1903, first week, $845, received and receipted for. More is on the way. This shows a decided growth.

F. H. Lemon turned the vacaville meeting over to J. E. Denton, the pastor, with 25 accessions, all but two or three of them confessions.

F. L. Platt has nine accessions the first week in his meeting for A. L. Platt at Selma.

R. L. McHatton is in a meeting at Healdsburg.

Gallahoun and Carroll are in a meeting at Geyserville with fine attendance.

R. L. Johnston began a meeting for the Fowler church Nov. 7. Various other meetings are being planned.

Berkeley is getting up steam to build. They have accepted plans and expect to complete specifications and throw dirt before many weeks.

The Tenth Avenue Church in San Francisco is progressing nicely.

The West Side Church is making remarkable progress with their new house.

The Richmond house is being used for worship and the bell has called the people together for three Lord's days now.

John Young has resigned at Lodi and takes the work at Albany, Mo. We are sorry to lose him for he was doing a most excellent work there. F. M. Reed will supply there for the present.

T. H. Lawson has done well at Stockton, raising their entire indebtedness, Nov. 1.

Michigan.

L. O. Drew is in a great meeting at Pine Run with 69 additions to date, and meetings continue. This is a country church where the cause was practically dead. This is another illustration that Michigan is a ripe field.

F. T. Porter is in a meeting at Yate with good prospects.

D. Munro, Cor. Sec., dedicated the new church at Novesta Nov. 8. The church at that point is happy.

St. Johns and Belding are both erecting houses of worship. These are both new fields entered this year.

A. B. Verner has taken the work at Silver Creek and Eau Claire.

The seventh district convention will be held at Kalkaska, Dec. 17-20.

The writer will begin a series of meetings at Bailey Nov. 17, and attend the seventh district convention Dec. 18.

Brother Raum has accepted a call to Saginaw, and Brother Hill has located at Pine Run.

The offering for Michigan missions is beginning to come in, and the indications are favorable for a good offering. November belongs to Michigan missions. Do not fail to take the offering at once and send it to D. Munro, St. Johns, Mich.

Cascade went beyond its apportionment.

"If it were possible to suppress every copy of the sacred volume the Bible in its essence and spirit, its great doctrines of infinite justice, mercy, love and redemption, would yet live in Shakspeare."

The above statement is made by Rev. Wm. Burgess in his recent remarkable book,

THE BIBLE IN SHAKSPEARE.

That this is a timely and valuable book is shown by hundreds of splendid reviews by the secular and religious press throughout the country. We quote a few to show what is thought of it.

"Since the publication in 1864 of Bishop Wordsworth's 'Shakespeare's Knowledge and Use of the Bible,' several books have appeared, covering somewhat the same ground, but for general and satisfactory use we have seen nothing to compare with Mr. Burgess' work."—The Christian Guardian, August 19, 1903.

"The whole book is a mine of rich suggestion and apt allusion. It deserves a wide circulation, and will have it if lovers of the Bible and Shakespeare can be made to understand what a feast it offers them."—From The Epworth Herald, September 26, 1903.

"It is a study of the great poet from a new point of view, and one of rare interest."—From The Advance, September 3, 1903.

"It is a volume worth buying and treasuring."—Milwaukee Lutheran, August 25, 1903.

"Certainly no one should be without it."—The Religious Telescope, August 19, 1903.

"Mr. Burgess has done an admirable service, which can not fail to be appreciated by students of English life and English literature generally."—Chicago Tribune, August 26, 1903.

"This excellently-printed volume may well find a place on the shelf of every reader's library; for what reader has not heard of the so-called 'absence of religion in Shakespeare?' Some have even thought him irreligious. The author interestingly discusses the question, 'Was Shakespeare a Christian?' and then proceeds to show the effect of the Bible on the poet, his versatility in its use, his types of character taken from the Scriptures, and the religious thought in the plots of his plays."—From The Outlook, New York, September 19, 1903.

The book is a handsomely gotten up volume of 300 octavo pages, and comes in a box. Price, $1.50 net; postage, 20 cents.

DAVID'S CHARGE TO SOLOMON.—
1 Chron. 28:1-10.

Memory Verses: 9:10.

Golden Text: Trust in the Lord with all thine heart.—Prov. 3:5.

Pride of Numbers.

David's old age was not without its deep sorrows. Even after Absalom's rebellion was ended and he had ceased to mourn for his son, his troubles were not over. Proud of his growing strength, of his great company of fighting men and the increasing population of his kingdom, David conceived the idea of a census (2 Sam. 24; 1 Chron. 21). The thing seems innocent enough now, but evidently David's intention was not acceptable to Jehovah. He was counting up his strength—as if his real strength lay in his regiments of armed men. He was summing up the number of the people over whom he ruled—as though he and not God was the real ruler of the nation. So David fell a victim to the subtle temptation—pride of numbers. It is not always wrong to count our forces, but it is wrong to estimate our strength by the number of our allies without counting our Great Ally. For the Disciples of Christ, for example, to think they are a great people because they have more than a million members, is a folly akin to David's. If they are great, it is because of the great truth they hold and because God is with them in the advocacy of this truth. It is not our million that gives us a right to expect victory in our undertakings, but our faith in God's presence and help. To lose sight of this and glory in our numerical growth—as though we would take the kingdom of heaven by violence or by sheer weight of numbers—is to sin David's sin over again and to invite a punishment not less than that which he suffered. There is nevertheless, a spirit in which we may rightly count our numbers, not for pride or exultation but for joy in the conquests of the cross.

David's Disappointments.

David's life was full of troubles. And one of his greatest sorrows was that the results of his wrong-doings must be visited upon his innocent subjects. It has ever been so with those who hold positions of great influence and responsibility. Their course of life determines not only their own happiness or unhappiness, but the welfare of many others. For David's error in numbering Israel and trusting in his thirteen hundred thousand armed men (2 Sam. 24:9) instead of in the arm of Jehovah, it was decreed that the people must suffer. There must be seven years of famine, or three months of defeat by Israel's enemies, or three days of pestilence. Does it seem a harsh and unjust decree, that the innocent must suffer for the guilty? It has ever been so. It is but a part of the larger law that "no man liveth unto himself." For good or for evil, each man's life works out its effects on the lives of his fellows. On the whole, the law is a beneficent one. It is well that the lives of men are so closely related, even if that relation does sometimes bring sorrow to the innocent. It would be a far worse world if each man lived, morally, in his own cell, uninfluenced by the deeds of others. Life would then have no social value whatever. God is not to be blamed if, in the working out of His beneficent law, sin causes suffering.

David's Successor.

Under the regime of polygamy, a king with many sons seldom died without precipitating bitter strife over the succession. It was so in David's case. Absalom's rebellion was a premature effort on the part of that brilliant prince to succeed his father. When David was very old and feeble, another son, Adonijah, grew ambitious and attempted usurpation. He was foiled only by the prompt action of Nathan the prophet and Bathsheba (Solomon's mother) who persuaded David to have Solomon anointed and proclaimed king at once (1 Kings 1:32-40). For a short time, therefore, David and Solomon reigned together until the death of the former.

David's Advice to Solomon.

When he felt that his days were numbered and the time of his departure was at hand, David delivered a charge to his son and successor, not only giving him directions about the building of the temple, but laying down some general principles of life. One account of this farewell is given in 1 Kings 2:1-9, and another in 1 Chronicles 28:1-10, or perhaps these are the records of David's advice on two separate occasions. David's first words on this occasion had reference to his long-cherished desire to build a house for Jehovah. But this had not been permitted to him. His was a task of war—to organize the monarchy and enlarge the kingdom. To his successor were to be committed the works of peace, the building of the temple and the commercial and industrial development of the nation.

The Covenant Renewed.

The great principle of conduct which David laid down for his son was that upon which the kingdom was founded, and by which it had achieved all of its success. It was that fidelity to Jehovah will make the kingdom strong, but disobedience to Him will lead to ruin. And now in the presence of the assembled multitude and the princes of Israel, David delivers to Solomon this solemn charge which was virtually a renewal of Israel's covenant with Jehovah. "And thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father and serve Him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind. For Jehovah searcheth all hearts and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts. If thou seek Him He will be found of thee, but if thou forsake Him, He will cast thee off forever."

A MISSION STUDY OF INDIA.—

Zach. 8:1-8.

Midweek Prayer-Meeting

By Frank G. Tyrrell.

Nov. 25.

THANKSGIVING AND A PERSONAL GOD.

—Ps. 107:1-15; Ps. 148:1-14.

India has about two million square miles and nearly three hundred million people, or nearly four times the population of the United States in half the area.

The peninsula is a continent in itself, with a vast variety of races, religions, languages and climates. At the north are the snow-clad Himalayas; in the south, the burning tropical plains. India is probably near the cradle of the human race, but successive invasions, beginning in prehistoric times, have resulted in a mixture of tribes and races. Three hundred different languages and dialects are spoken in the Indian empire. Those used by the largest number of people are Hindi, Bengali, Marathi, Kanorese, Telugu, Tamil.

Two-thirds of the people of India profess the Hindu religion. More than half of the remaining third are Mohammedans. There is one Christian to about three hundred of population and half of the Christians are Catholics.

The present condition of India is due largely to its relations with Great Britain. The East India Company, organized for trade about three hundred years ago, became enormously rich and powerful by its commerce with India. Managed by shrewd and often unprincipled men, it gradually encroached upon the local governments until, after Lord Clive's victories, which culminated in 1761, the company was the sovereign power in India. The company had won an empire for England, but that empire was still held by the company and exploited by whatever methods seemed most profitable.

A century ago, the East India Company opposed all missionary effort. Nevertheless William Carey, who went from England to Calcutta in 1793 under the newly organized Baptist Missionary Society, became the father of modern missions and began a work which has grown from that day to this.

Before Carey, a heroic, but not very fruitful beginning had been made by Ziegenbalg and Swartz. After Carey there came a steadily increasing stream of missionaries. Judson, Mott, Newell, Rice and Hall began the missionary movement in America and went out to India in 1812. They too, were much troubled by opposition from the company.

The annals of Indian missions are bright with splendid names and noble achievements. When the East India Company ceased to exist after the mutiny in 1857, and India passed under the direct government of the British crown, the era of official opposition was at an end. But there is still the opposition of that vast mass of resisting heathenism. A land of ancient civilization, of highly developed systems of religion and philosophy, of elaborate social usages which are held sacred by their very antiquity, it is a field to call forth the best efforts of the strongest men. And when it is won, it will be a bright jewel to present to our Master as a trophy of the victory for his kingdom.

How a Woman Paid Her Debts.

I am out of debt, thanks to the Dishwasher business. In the past three months I have made $600.00 selling Dishwashers. I never saw anything sell so easily. Every family needs a Dishwasher and will buy one when shown how beautifully it will wash and dry the family dishes in two minutes. I sell from my own house. Each Dishwasher sold brings me many orders. The dishes are washed without wetting the hands. That is why ladies want the Dishwasher. I give my experience for the benefit of anyone who may wish to make money easily. I buy my Dishwashers from the Mound City Dishwasher Co., St. Louis, Mo. Write them for particulars. They will start you in business in your own home. L. A. C.

"Gratitude is the fairest blossom which springs from the soul; and the heart of man knoweth none more fragrant," exclaims Hosea Ballou, devoutly. True it is, that it is more blessed to give than to receive, and there are few who know how to receive gracefully. Gratitude exists in the world, but it finds poor and awkward expression, until it is almost smothered out of men's hearts. Hence the desirability of a day specially marked off as a day of thanksgiving; for we need to be trained in the emotion and in its expression.

May it be that the nation will restore the day to its high place. In far too many cases it is a day of sensuous indulgence, of carnal delight, of lamentable debauchery. In its origin and purpose, it is religious. Churches everywhere ought to combine to hold it up to its legitimate purpose. The lessons we study this week emphasize the personality of Jehovah. Our gratitude is not an incense to a vague and formless deity, but homage to a living, reigning God. We do not pray and sing into a vacuum, nor into immensity. Hearts athrob with love and attuned to praise beat responsive to the heart of infinite love. God is, and he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

There is no lesson more needed to-day than this of personal responsibility and personal loyalty to a personal God. In many communities men have given the rein to passion, and are living in pleasure, waxing wanton, as if they no longer believed in God; or as if he were an absentee. Religious life runs into grooves. It lacks the animation of close contact with the great reserves of divine power, which are found in the Lord Jehovah. Let us to-day ask the question, "To whom do we give thanks?" Are our prayers addressed to the audience, or do they rise on the wings of faith to the throne of the Eternal?

What an apomaly, what an absurdity would thanksgiving be if God were impersonal! How could we give thanks to an abstraction? It is like trying to embrace a cloud. The very fact of thankfulness premises personality. "Praise ye the Lord!" Praise, gratitude, worship, must flow from the heart of a creature to the heart of a Creator. He does not need our thanks; ingratitude does not dim the effulgence of his glory; but it does dim the lustre and darken the life of men. With the bright pictures of divine excellence which the scriptures furnish, how can we but give thanks to him who doeth all things well, whose mercy endureth forever?

The works of God bespeak personality. How he redeemed Israel! Bowed under the yoke of the oppressor; stung by the lash of the task-master, the people groaned and cried, and the Lord hearkened and heard them, and delivered them out of their prison-house. He gathered them together and led them by strange ways through the divided sea, through the barren deserts, through thick wildernesses, and protected them on the right hand and on the left. He gave them bread from heaven and water from the rock.

Do you believe in special providences? Of course; all providences are special. God reigns, not by a general, diffused benevolence, but by specific acts of mercy and munificence and love. The infinitely small is as much within his grasp as the infinitely great; he takes note of the sparrow's fall, as well as of the flight of planets. And for what God does, guiding and inspiring men and nations, he should be praised. Could an abstraction do these things? They are the handiwork of omnipotence, and that omnipotence must be personal. All the graces and attributes of personality are his; all the witness borne by works great and mighty; all the evidence that can possibly address itself to our limited senses; all, are speaking to us of God as a Father, whose love encompasses the

NATURE'S GREATEST AID.

An interesting letter to our readers from Hon. H. L. Dunham, Ex-Mayor of Dover, N. J.

Dover, N. J., Nov. 12th, 1902.

I had both kidney and liver trouble for over three years. I tried the best physicians in Washington, D. C., Pittsburg, Cincinnati and Chicago, and regret to say that I received very little benefit until I commenced taking the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root. After taking the first bottle I noticed quite a change, which satisfied me that at last I had found the right medicine. I continued on until I had taken four bottles; by this time I noticed such a marked improvement in my health, in every way, that I felt satisfied I was cured. But, to be positive beyond a question or doubt, I was in Chicago during July, 1902, and went to the Columbus Medical Laboratory, No. 103 State St., and had them make a thorough and complete microscopical examination which showed my kidneys and liver to be perfectly well and healthy. I have their written report in my possession, signed by the doctors of the above Medical Laboratory, which is recognized as one of the best in the country.

Very truly yours,

H. L. Dunham
Ex-Mayor of Dover, N. J.

The mild and prompt effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases. Recommended and taken by physicians, used in hospitals and endorsed by people of prominence everywhere. To prove what Swamp-Root will do for you, a sample bottle will be sent absolutely free, by mail, also a book telling all about Swamp-Root and its wonderful cures. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., and be sure to mention reading this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one-dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

PRAYER.

We thank thee, O God, and bless thy name for the many mercies that have crowded our lives and made the years fragrant. Thou hast given us all we enjoy; thou art sustaining us, even when we are cumbrous of the ground. We praise thee for thy marvellous patience, for thy long-suffering and goodness which lead us to repentance. Enable us to bring the rich fruitage of consecrated lives year by year, till at last we win the crown, through Christ. Amen.

A Wholesome Story.

DARREL OF THE BLESSED ISLES. By Irving Bacheller. (Lothrop Pub. Co. $1.50.)

Mr. Bacheller's greatest reputation was gained by a work, "Eben Holden," which owed its popularity less to any literary value or excellence which it may have possessed than to a certain appeal to the fundamental instincts of human nature. Most of us Americans are of the soil. Our roots go back, through at most a generation or two of "culture," to mother earth. And when we are tried with the baffling perplexities of our modern city life, and the overwrought subtleties of the problem novels which reflect but never remove our difficulties, we turn with relief to the bucolic simplicity of an Eben Holden, and grasp his horny hand with a thrill of delight. Such books appeal less to the literary sense than to our inborn love of plain, simple, honest, old-fashioned people and things, and our conscious need of associating them occasionally to keep our hearts healthy.

The case with "Darrel" is not altogether different—albeit "Darrel" has literary merits which "Eben Holden" did not possess. Darrel himself, clock-tinker, philosopher, Irish wit, lover of the poets, is a most amiable and admirable character. He is too good not to be true. It is almost a pity that the author added the mystery element to the story. It seems just a trifle superfluous, a somewhat artificial device for capturing the reader's interest, which Darrel was quite capable of holding by his own intrinsic merits. The mystery part of the story, however, is well carried out and the end is not too visible from the beginning.

Biographical Fiction.

HETTIE WESLEY. By A. T. Quiller-Couch. (The Macmillan Co. New York. $1.50.)

The brilliant author of this volume has undertaken an extraordinary task, and has accomplished it with extraordinary success. One must read well into the book before one can be altogether certain just what he is trying to do. Is he writing fiction or history? To classify the book under either head would be misleading. It is the story of the life of the gifted and unhappy Hettie Wesley, sister of John and Charles Wesley, but the author has filled in the outlines of the story, has supplied details where the records are vague, and has cast the whole into the form of a historical novel, with conversations, dramatic situations and all the paraphernalia of fiction. The materials are handled freely, but conscientiously. The treatment is based upon a careful historical study of the letters and other documents of the Wesleys, and the reader of history will value it for the light which it sheds upon that remarkable and unhappy family. To her son John at Oxford, Mrs. Wesley writes: "It is an unhappiness almost peculiar to our family that your father and I seldom think alike." The remark was truly descriptive. It was a large family and it was seldom that any two of them were wholly of one mind. Yet their disagreements were not the petty squabbles of mean minds, but rather the inevitable friction which always arises when there are too many geniuses within a narrow compass. The Wesley family was talented beyond all hope of happiness. There were too many bright minds and strong wills to live harmoniously together. The father, Samuel Wesley, was the most uncompromising of domestic tyrants; his tyranny was part of his religion. No wonder poor Hettie, the most brilliant of the girls, revolted against his arbitrariness and was driven into disgrace. Mr. Quiller-Couch's absorbing narrative brings the reader into very close quarters with these interesting and masterful personages.

A Classic Novel.

TITLEBAT TITMOUSE. Abridged from Dr. Samuel Warren's famous novel, "Ten Thousand a Year." By Cyrus Townsend Brady. Illustrated by Will Crawford. (Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York. $1.50.)

One of the great classic English novels that almost everyone knows by name and none ever reads, is Samuel Warren's "Ten Thousand a Year." When it was first published, sixty-two years ago, it sprang into instant popularity in spite of its vast length, but it soon staggered and fell under its burden of 400,000 words. "The old three-volume novel is extinct," and this one became as extinct as a work of such undoubted genius can. In revising and reviving this classic, Mr. Brady has earned the gratitude of all lovers of good novels. He has shortened it to less than one-third of its original bulk—and it is still a goodly volume of nearly 500 pages. He has cut out vast quantities of political arguments, legal technicalities and encumbering sentimentalities which were never anything but an impediment to the course of the narrative.

The story has been called "the classic legal novel." Certain shrewd but unscrupulous lawyers secure partly by accident and partly by rascality, evidence that the rightful heir to certain Yorkshire estates is one Tittlebat Titmouse, a clerk in a London draper's shop. By a suit, conducted with great shrewdness, the former occupant, Mr. Charles Aubrey, M. P., is dispossessed, and Titmouse enters into the enjoyment of an income of ten thousand pounds a year. Titmouse is a complete and unmitigated fool, and is soon in more financial troubles with his ten thousand a year than he had been with fifteen shillings a week as a draper's clerk. Ultimately it is discovered that his claim to the estates is not well-founded, and they pass back to the former owner.

Dr. Warren was a novelist of the old school. His characters all fall instantly into two classes—good and bad—with the naive and perfect dichotomy of childhood. The good characters never do a bad deed; the bad characters never do a good one. There are plenty of dazzling whites and inky blacks, but none of the baffling grays of uncertain morality that perplex the reader of the modern psychological novel. Titmouse has all the vices that his pigmy soul could contain. His attorney, Mr. Oily Gammon, is an embodiment of all the sins of duplicity, treachery, mendacity and greed. He has, however, as a part of his equipment, the manners of a gentleman and the brains of a prime minister, while Titmouse had the brains of an ass and the manners of an ill-trained ape. Gammon is one of the most interesting and capable scoundrels in literature. On the other hand, Charles Aubrey is a character without spot or wrinkle. He is a tailor's dummy tricked out in a complete assortment of manly virtues and without a single redeeming fault to make him human. His wife and sister also are oppressively perfect. Dr. Warren's chief interest was in these models of virtue, and he devoted much space to admiring descriptions of them. Most of this Mr. Brady has cut out, finding that the really vital characters in the book are those that are most open to criticism on ethical grounds. The villains of the book are, so to speak, its real heroes. At least they hold the interest. Gammon is the hero of the story in exactly the same sense as Satan is the hero of Paradise Lost. Mr. Brady says: "I have drained the story of an ocean of tears, leaving only a few specimen 'weeps' to show what the old novel was, and I have divested Charles and Kate Aubrey of enough superfluous perfections to stock a Sunday-school library."

This change of emphasis from the aristocratic and impeccable characters to the lowly and sinful, is unquestionably an artistic improvement. But through all the changes, the moralities of the tale stand forth, as the author meant that they should, obvious and unimpeachable. Every rascal in the book is punished at last, and no good man goes unrewarded. The final downfall of so able and accomplished a scoundrel as Gammon amounts almost to a demonstration of the unprofitableness of sin.

Again we feel disposed to express our sense of obligation to Mr. Brady for rescuing this truly great work from the unmerited but inevitable oblivion which awaits every three-volume novel that does not fall into the hands of a competent abridger.

Decadent Fiction.

A FOREST HEARTH. By Charles Major. (The MacMillan Co. $1.50.)

The case of Mr. Charles Major is quite, quite hopeless. The more he writes, the clearer it becomes that he is no writer. The first product of his pen, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," had indeed some qualities which in a measure explained, though they scarcely justified, its popularity, but its great vogue was a publisher's rather than an author's triumph. The next, "Dorothy Vernon of Hadden Hall," was unhistorical, artificial and affected. "The Forest Hearth" is feeble and shallow to the last degree; vicious in spots (doubtless unintentionally); a congeries of musty motifs and moth-eaten incidents. It should perhaps be said that the character of Billy Little, the faithful bachelor friend of the lovers, is not ill conceived and its portrayal is the only point which rises above the dead level of mediocrity. The scene of the story is laid in Indiana in pioneer days, but the background is handled without skill. The heroine, a beautiful country maiden, loves and is loved by a noble youth who has been as a brother to her from infancy. The rival appears in the form of a rich and polished Boston man, to whom the girl's father is under such financial obligations that her marriage to the creditor seems the only way to avert bankruptcy. This theme would be more appropriate in a museum of antiquities than in a modern novel, but as ten thousand other novelists have used it in exactly the same form, perhaps Mr. Major has an equally good right to it. Meanwhile the heroine has typhoid fever and, while she is hovering between life and death, her noble lover has such relations with another girl in the neighborhood that, when the latter informs him that her disgrace is imminent, he feels in duty bound to marry her. From this extreme he is saved by the timely recollection that there are half a dozen other fellows who are probably as deeply implicated as himself in the indiscreet young lady's trouble. His sweetheart forgives him and they are married against the protest of her parents. Bah!

Mr. Major's trouble is not lack of literary experience, for his first novel was his best. It is not that he began too late in life, for some have begun later and done better. Whatever the cause, the fact is that the present volume, even more than its predecessors, exhibits all the characteristics of chronic and incurable amateurism.

Narrative History.

A HISTORY OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY, From its Discovery to the end of Foreign Domination. By John R. Spears and A. H. Clark (A. S. Clark, New York, $5.00 net).

This massive and handsome volume makes a timely appeal to the public just now when the celebration of the Louisiana Purchase is imminent and the history of the Mississippi Valley is being thought of more than ever before. It is but fair to say, however, that it was prepared with no reference to the Exposition of 1904. It is no hastily collected centennial history but a work of sound historical scholarship and permanent value. The authors describe the book as "the narrative of the founding of an empire, shorn of current myth and enlivened by the thrilling adventures of discoverers, pioneers, frontiersmen, Indian-fighters and home-makers." It is a narrative and not a critical history. But the authors freely interpret the events which they narrate and tell the meaning of the history as they understand it. In discussing the relations of the Indians to the Whites, the blame for most of the trouble is laid on the Whites. The tales of war and adventure are told on almost boyish enthusiasm, but greater honor is given to the heroes of peace. The growth of milder manners and gentler means of settling controversies is noted. The story of the alliance of the British with the Indians and of the encouragement of the latter's savage cruelties by the former, is worth remembering to show the contrast between that age and this—"a contrast that has been made possible by the development of Christian civilization and the construction of an American fleet of unequalled warship." The watch-word of our history seems to be: trust in God and keep your powder dry; develop Christian civilization and keep a navy ready to handle those who fail to do the same.

The work is handsomely illustrated with portraits, pictures of historic places, maps and facsimiles.

A Book for Boys.

TWO LITTLE SAVAGES. Written and illustrated by Ernest Thompson Seton. (Doubleday, Page & Co., pp. 552, over 200 drawings. $1.75 net.)

Ever since one fatal day last winter when the Atlantic Monthly published an article by John Burroughs under the title "True and Sham Natural History," Mr. Seton has labored under the suspicion of representing a sort of natural history that is not simon-pure science. The public was sorry to hear Mr. Burroughs criticism because it has great confidence in his judgment and because a large section of the reading public had been very greatly enjoying Mr. Seton's wild animal stories with a serene faith that, while they might be imaginative in form, they were essentially true to nature. And on the whole, we think we shall go right on enjoying Mr. Seton's writings, even if he does occasionally find himself at variance with such an eminent authority as Mr. Burroughs. This latest product of Mr. Seton's pen is a book for boys. It tells the story of two boys who lived in the woods, camped out, played Indian, and did all those things which every healthy boy wants to do at some stage of his career. The story is of small consequence except connecting thread upon which to string a vast amount of information about woodcraft and wild animals. How to identify animal tracks, how to make bows and arrows and tepees, how to light fires without matches, how to know the trees and plants—these are some of the things that are told. It is a book which can be guaranteed to win the favor of boys.

From the Boxer Standpoint.

LETTERS FROM A CHINESE OFFICIAL. Being an Eastern view of Western Civilization. (McClure, Phillips & Co., New York.)

Here is something distinctly fresh and suggestive. A cultured Chinaman who has spent many years in England and acquired a thorough knowledge of the English language and of occidental institutions, yet without abating one jot or tittle of his Chinese anti-foreign point of view, writes a series of criticisms of our civilization. There is much, of course, that is more curious than convincing; but much again that goes to the bone of the matter with fine insight. His principal thesis is that, while Chinese civilization has for its first object the cultivation of the graces and virtues that give value to life, our western institutions and ideals are vitiated by a too great eagerness to multiply the material means and instruments of comfortable living. The English style would be a meritorious achievement for one born to the language.

Palestine of To-day.

TO-DAY IN SYRIA AND PALESTINE. By William E. Curtis. (Fleming H. Revell Co. $2.00 net.)

Most books about Palestine are written by ministers. This book gives the results of a practical newspaper man's observations. Mr. Curtis probably has a larger personal following of admiring readers than any other newspaper correspondent in the country. He represents the Chicago Record-Herald in Washington when Congress is in session. During the intervals he visits Dawson City, Timbuctoo and all intermediate points and writes letters of travel. The present volume is a reprint of letters written and published two years ago. It is well illustrated and the binding is uniform with the similar volume entitled "The Turk and His Lost Provinces," which was published a few months ago.

THE CITY OF THE KING. By Mrs Lew Wallace. With Illustrations. (The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis.)

Mrs. Wallace has lived several years in the East and she knows the scenes and conditions of Palestine well enough to write about them intelligently. The chapters (chiefly reprints from magazine articles) which make up this little article which are not intended primarily to convey accurate information about Jerusalem, but to portray, in as few strokes as possible and in a spirit harmonious with the holy associations of the place, some of the scenes of old Jerusalem and some of the impressions which the modern city makes upon the reverent observer. The book is issued in handsome form with luxurious margins, and will make an acceptable gift-book.

Old Friends.

POEMS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW. Selected by Elia W. Peattie. Illustrated by Ellsworth Young (Revell $1.50 net).

An excellent anthology of classic and modern poetry from Geoffrey Chaucer to Sam Walter Foss. There is apparently no principle of orderly arrangement whatever in the collection. John Hay's "Jim Bleed-so" is sandwiched between Robert Herrick and Tennyson. The illustrations printed in red, lend a cheerful note of color to the pages but they are rather decorations than illustrations.

A New Edition.

THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS. By John Bunyan, Puritan Edition; Illustrations by Harold Copping. (Fleming H. Revell Co. $1.50 net.)

Mr. Copping's remarkably successful illustrations, thirty-one in number, representing the characters in the Puritan costume of Bunyan's time, make this a desirable edition of this imperishable allegory of the Christian life. The text has been edited with great care, following the last edition published before Bunyan's death, in 1688, which includes all the additions and revisions sanctioned by the author.

Hints for Householders.

THE CARE OF A HOUSE. By T. M. Clark. With Illustrations. (The MacMillan Co.)

Many books have been written to instruct persons who intend to build houses and want to have a finger in their own architectural pie. But here is a book primarily for the instruction and guidance of persons who are charged with the care of houses already built. Householders would save much, both in the cost of repairs and in the peace of mind that comes from having things done right, if they would study such a manual as this. So far as we know, however, there is no other book that covers just this ground. It has chapters full of practical information about fire-places and chimneys, furnaces, kitchen stoves, plumbing, heating and the care of wood-work.

A Book of Illustrations.

STUDIES IN THE ART OF ILLUSTRATION. By Amos R. Wells. (Revell $1.25).

Mr. Wells has given a too academic title to his book. It contains not exactly "studies in the art of illustration," but illustrations of that art. He is a keen observer of life and shows rare skill both in his selection of incidents and in his narration of them. There is a merry twinkle in everything he writes and a wholesome vein of practical common-sense. It would be hard to find a more lively and entertaining book of genuinely devotional material.

For Bible Students.

OLD TESTAMENT HISTORY. By Henry Preserved Smith (Scribners $2.50 net.)

The appearance of a new volume in the "International Theological Library" is always an important event. Prof. Henry P. Smith's "Old Testament History" has been awaited with interest. It will doubtless be quite generally recognized at once as the standard manual of the subject from the standpoint of what is called "modern Biblical criticism" by those who occupy the same position. A fuller review will be given later.

First Principles.

BASIC TRUTHS OF THE CHRISTIAN FAITH. By Herbert L. Willett, Ph. D. (The Christian Century Co., pp. 127. 75c.)

Those who have been helped by a message from Professor Willett—and there are multitudes of such—will hail with delight the appearance of this volume. In it are treated those few, simple, essential doctrines which are becoming accepted quite generally as the basic truths of our religion. The spirit of controversy is quite absent from the book, and yet it is sufficiently argumentative to indicate the positive convictions of the author. Moreover, he fails not to state the reasons for the faith that is in him. On the other hand the effect of reading is like that of hearing a splendid sermon. And this is its chief value, as doubtless it is the principal purpose of the author. Recognizing the perplexities which are inevitable in this age of science and doubt, there are set forth great truths which are independent of changing theologies, and upon these truths one is brought to rest his faith. By the artistic presentation of these Basic Truths one is inspired to take up his life with a new confidence and hope.

Pastoral Theology.

MODERN PRACTICAL THEOLOGY. By Prof. Ferdinand S. Schenck, D. D. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. $1.00 net.)

One must be either impressed or oppressed by observing on the very cover of this volume that its author defines it as "a manual of homiletics, liturgies, poimenics, archagics, pedagogy, sociology and the English Bible, for the use of preachers, instructors and students." In reality it is quite as comprehensive as it sounds, though far less formidable. The author is a professor in the Dutch Reformed Seminary at New Brunswick, N. J. He treats in analytical fashion, as befits a text book, the various divisions of the work of the ministry, including making of sermons and the many-sided work of the pastorate. The writer defines his point of view as that of a conservative man in a conservative seminary of a conservative church.

The New Evangelism.

"THE OLD EVANGEL AND THE NEW EVANGELISM." By Charles Aubrey Eaton. (Revell. $1.00.)

Somebody is always predicting a great cataclysm in the political world or a wonderful awakening in the spiritual world. Mr. Eaton thinks the Church with its numbers, wealth and machinery, is lacking in "the power." He believes this is one of the signs of a revival that will touch the ends of the earth. "It is coming," he says, "but no man can tell from what quarter." Chapters of some interest are headed, "The Need of a Revival and the Revival We Need," "What the Church Lacks," "A Christian Conversion," etc. The book is quite worth while, but contains nothing of a startling nature.

Bible Handbooks.

THE TEMPLE SERIES OF BIBLE CHARACTERS AND SCRIPTURE HANDBOOKS.

This is a series of twenty-eight small volumes from the press of J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia. Two volumes only have been published, namely, "Abraham and the Patriarchal Age," by the Rev. Prof. Duff, D. D., and "David the Hero-King of Israel," by the Rev. W. J. Knox-Little, M. A. The price of each volume is thirty cents, the books are arranged for classes and are to be studied; they are also so arranged as to be easily read. There are questions in each chapter for the student. The first chapter in the volume on "David the Hero-King of Israel," is entitled: "Bethlehem and Judah." The following are the questions: "What are a few of the natural features of Bethlehem?" "In what way was it associated with David's ancestors?" "What were the characteristics of the tribe of Judah?" "Who were Zeruah, Abigail, Caleb, Achsah?"

The authors know that there is such a thing as "criticism," they even know of something called the "higher criticism;" but the books do not seem to be in the interest of any special "views." They are good books for young people who are willing to study—who desire to know something about the Bible and Bible characters. Organize a class for the study of "David the Hero-King of Israel" and see what will come of it. It seems to me that it will be a good thing.

In this volume on "Abraham and the Patriarchal Age" I find the following:

"Write brief essays on these subjects:"

"(1) The Christian duty of study, and analysis, and criticism of history, and of documents, and of religious features."

"(2) The growing visions of God's character that the ages have seen, especially the Hebrew, and the Jewish, and the Christian ages."

"(3) The influence of surroundings on a narrator's work, especially in olden times, and more especially in religious story."

"(4) The historical advantage of having not one, but many stories of a person such as Abraham, or our Lord or any other figure in the past."

"(5) The religious excellence of the discovery that whole schools of writers cared to tell of the ways of God to men in the past: no one man's writings could be so precious."

Then the student is requested to "write out briefly, in new words, each of the three great stories of Abraham."

As indicating the attitude of the writers of these little books toward modern historical criticism, more especially that of the author of "David the Hero-King of Israel," take the following:

"It would be impossible and inappropriate here to discuss the innumerable and constantly contradictory views of critics as to the exact psalms which are to be allotted to David. 'Criticism' of one sort or another has been of invaluable service in illustrating the history and meaning of this, as well as of other parts of Scripture. 'Criticism,' especially in modern times, has also run riot on these sacred subjects. It is enough for us to take such teaching and help as can be given by devout and learned men who follow the traditions of the only sure guide—the Church of Christ."

Christian Churches in Australia.

JUBILEE PICTORIAL HISTORY OF CHURCHES OF CHRIST IN AUSTRALASIA. Edited by A. B. Maston, Melbourne. (Austral Publishing Company, 528 Elizabeth St., Melbourne, Australia. 1903. Price, $6.50, post free to America.)

Earlier notice of this very interesting work has been prevented by the detention of the work some time in the Customs House, and then by the Editor's absence from the office during the summer. It embraces 424 pages, 12½x10 and gives a copiously illustrated history of the churches and leading men and women in South Australia, West Australia, Queenstown, Tasmania, Victoria, New South Wales and New Zealand. The work was suggested to its author by the jubilee of primitive Christianity in Victoria, and it occurred to him that the work might well include the history of our cause in Australasia. The membership of the churches is set down as 16,118, as the result of fifty years' work. The illustrations are particularly fine, being printed on the finest calender paper. Most of the chapels are plain frame buildings, but it must be said of the people whose pictures are contained in this work that they are extraordinarily fine looking people. In looking over the groups of officers of the various churches we have often felt that it would be difficult to duplicate them in this country and quite impossible to excel them. One feels assured in looking upon their faces and stalwart forms, that primitive Christianity as they conceive it and understand it, at least, is likely to be maintained through many millenniums in that southern land. We should be glad of the privilege of meeting the men and women whose faces are given in this work. We congratulate the author, Brother A. B. Maston, an American who has spent the larger part of his active life in that country, on the success of his work, which is destined to remain a permanent monument to himself and to our cause in Australasia for generations to come.

Our Budget

—C. P. Evans preached at Table Rock, Neb., Nov. 1.

—The sweet evangel of the cross is winning many notable victories.

—J. M. Lowe began a protracted meeting Nov. 15, at Pleasant View, Adams county, Ill.

—Brother Parrick closed a protracted meeting last Thursday at Antioch, Adams county, Ill., with 35 additions.

—W. H. Applegate has been called to the church at Camp Point, Ill., and begins Dec. 1. This church has been without a pastor for about a year and a half.

—President J. B. Jones, of William Woods College, favored the office of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST with a call during a recent visit to St. Louis.

—E. A. Orr, pastor of the Christian Church at Sioux Falls, S. D., recently delivered a lecture before the business college at that place on "What is the Bible?"

—The dedication of the Christian Church at Oacoma, S. D., which has been postponed on account of a delay in the plastering, will take place Nov. 22.

—The new church at Eldorado, Ill., will be dedicated Nov. 22, by W. W. Weedon, of Marion. This is the first house of worship ever erected by our people in Saline county.

—J. W. Lowber, of Austin, Texas, is delivering a series of chapel addresses at the State University on "Christ the Only Founder of a Great Religion Who Completely Transcended His Environment."

—D. F. Snider, who was compelled to resign the work at Sac City, Iowa, eighteen months ago on account of his wife's health, has received a unanimous call to Estherville, Iowa, where he is taking up the work with all confidence of success.

—The Marshall Street Church, Richmond, Va., expects to become a living link church in the foreign society this year. This is a bold step for this church to make, and we congratulate it upon its good purpose. B. H. Melton is the successful minister.

—R. H. Miller, of the Richmond Avenue Church, Buffalo, N. Y., writes: "We shall express our approval of the motto, A Quarter of a Million Dollars for Foreign Missions this Year, by endeavoring to become a living link church in the foreign society."

—We regret to learn that Brother J. C. Creel has been sorely afflicted during the past summer with eczema, having been kept out of the pulpit for seven weeks during that time. He is better now and writes that he hopes to entirely recover soon.

—The Christian ministers of Livingston county, Ill., met in convention at Pontiac, Ill., Nov. 12, for purpose of organization. Brother Irwin, late of the University of Chicago, has accepted the pastorate of the church at Saunemin, Ill.

—In answer to the inquiry from a subscriber regarding the Bay View reading course, several correspondents have replied that J. M. Hall, 165 Boston Boulevard, Detroit, Mich., is the manager of this reading course, and all information can be obtained from him.

—J. T. T. Hundley has located in Norfolk, Va., as pastor of the First Church of the Disciples of Christ which is located on Freemason Street, in front of the Masonic Temple. All members of the brotherhood and friends who may be visiting in that city are invited to attend.

—The student ministers of Butler College last week organized a ministerial association. R. A. Smith is president, Chas. E. Underwood secretary. Ministerial students constitute one-third of the attendance of young men. Many of them are already in the work, and are a power for good in the churches they serve.

—It should be borne in mind that the receipts from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day are shared equally between the national society for home missions and the state work. It is to the interest of every church and every school in the church to make the offering on this day as large as possible.

—We are still receiving thanks for our report of the Detroit Convention. As the young fellow said, when asked by the preacher if he would take the young lady to be his wife, "that is what we are here for"—to report what is going on in the brotherhood, and especially our great conventions.

—"Many of our pastors have, no doubt, received a 'call for help' sent out by the Ladies' Aid Society of the church at Wylie, Texas. If the call has not been heeded by your congregation you have yet an opportunity to assist a faithful band in a noble work. Contributions may be sent to their minister, Bro. C. C. Borden, who will receipt for same."

—Emnor Strawn and Miss Mattie Strawn, of Ohio, and Mrs. Caroline Green and Mrs. Emma Widby, of Illinois, have just given our National Benevolent Association small annuities. Geo. L. Snively, 903 Aubert Ave., St. Louis, will promptly answer any inquiries relating to this advantageous Annuity Plan of helping this worthy enterprise.

—The home missionary society reports receipts from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day much earlier in the year. It is a notable fact that preparations for this day throughout the country have been more thorough and widespread than ever before, and if the $15,000 asked for by the society is not received this year, it will be a matter of great surprise.

—Dr. Susie C. Rijnhart and party expect to locate at Ta-Chien-lu on the border of Tibet. They are making their way in that direction at this time. They have no doubt reached Nankin and will spend a little time there with our missionaries. Then they will journey on and on up the Yang-Tse River, far above Hankow and Chung King. It is a long and perilous journey.

—Here is a telegram from the Warrensburg (Mo.) meeting: "Warrensburg, Nov. 15. There have been 105 added in three weeks. There were 25 to-day. Overflowing audiences and great interest."
WILSON & MCVAY.

Here is another from Joplin, Mo., bearing the same date, Nov. 15: "There have been 547 additions in the Harlow and Ridenour meeting; 42 to-day. The meeting continues. The whole city is stirred."
W. F. TURNER.

—Who says the gospel is no longer the power of God unto salvation? Where is "the disputer of this world" who thinks the church is an outgrown institution and the kingdom of God a spent force? Such triumphs as the foregoing and others throughout the country ought to quicken the faith of the whole church, and stop the mouths of the skeptics.

These additions, we venture to say, are not secured by making "easy terms" for those who wish to enter in. The New Testament conditions of admission are made plain. That is what the people want. They do not ask that faith, repentance or baptism be omitted, but that they be made plain, so the "common people" can understand them. This is what these evangelists are doing, and we feel safe in saying, too, that they are doing it in Christian love, else their success would not be so great.

—A "prominent politician" in Missouri is quoted as giving the following reason why Mr. Folk should not be nominated for governor: "If Folk is nominated he will have the Butler element in St. Louis to fight, for you know Butler would never support Folk." Of course, then, the thing to do is to nominate some one whom Mr. Butler will approve, and the surest way to do that is to have Mr. Butler nominate him. What's the use of a convention anyway?

—The Central Christian Advocate says of a certain proposed change in the Methodist Episcopacy, that "it would cause the sun and the moon to stand still on the church, not as it stood for Gideon, but for those whom disaster overwhelmed." Now, we have no disposition to meddle with Methodist astronomy, but it was Joshua, and not Gideon, if our memory is correct, who is said to have performed the feat referred to above.

—We stated last week that Elmer Ward Cole had resigned at Falls City, Neb., where he had served "a whole year." This was a typographical error for "four years." Brother Cole believes in long pastorates and points with pride to the fact that his pastorate there was the longest that has ever been held in any church in that place. Brother Cole also incidentally remarks that the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is "the greatest educator among us."

—President J. Hopwood, of Virginia Christian College of Lynchburg, Va., the first session of which opened Sept. 16, writes that the prospect for a new school is most encouraging. During the first month there has been an enrollment of more than one hundred students, ninety of whom are boarding students. The building and ground on which the college is located were secured for a mere fraction of their value, and enough money has been raised to make it practically certain that the work will be supported.

—Friends of the Disciples' Divinity House will rejoice to learn that by the generous gift of R. A. Long, of Kansas City, the divinity house is to receive a thousand dollars a year for the next five years for its current expenses. This gift, together with those which have already been made, provides for the maintenance of the work and leaves the financial agent free to devote himself for the time to raising money for scholarships and fellowships. Brother Gates visited St. Louis recently and received a cordial welcome.

—It is suggested by the American Christian Missionary Society that the Sunday-schools who have been unable for any reason to celebrate Boys' and Girls' Rally Day in a formal way this year should send in an offering on the Lord's day before Thanksgiving, or soon after. Every Sunday-school in the brotherhood ought to be reported when the returns are gathered in for this great celebration. We hope every school in our church will remember the day, as it is a direct contribution to the state work as well as to the national.

—A. C. Wrentmore has closed his work with the First Christian Church at Chandler, Ok., to enter the evangelistic field in which he has been eminently successful. Besides extending to him a unanimous call for another year the brethren at Chandler expressed their confidence in his ability in asking him to hold his first meeting with them, which will begin Nov. 15. He will be ready for work elsewhere about Dec. 10. During his two years' regular work in Oklahoma he has had over 120 additions. Churches desiring his services should address him at Chandler.

—It has been a long time since we have received a letter which has given us so much genuine pleasure as the following. We print it that our readers may share in our joy:

PARIS, KY., Nov. 13, 1903.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—You will be glad to know, I am certain, that I am home again and on the road to what promises to be complete recovery. I am gaining rapidly in weight and strength. The operation seems to have been a thorough success. With best wishes,
FRATERNALLY YOURS,

CAREY E. MORGAN.

Those who were at Detroit, during the convention, will remember how our hearts were filled with sorrow at the news of Brother Morgan's serious illness, and how we paused in the business of the convention to intercede with God for his recovery. This message from his own hand seems like a real fulfillment of our prayers in his behalf. Let us thank God for his goodness.

—The annual meeting of the State Council of the Ohio Federation of Churches and Christian Workers will be held in Dayton, O., Tuesday, Dec. 1, 1903. An excellent program has been arranged including such topics as, "Present Trend of Society, and Why?" "National Outlook for Church Federation and Church Unity"—this by Dr. E. B. Sanford. Rev. Washington Gladden discusses, "Present Tendencies Toward Church Federation and Organic Union of Churches." There are other topics of great practical importance to be discussed, such as "Capital and Labor," "Municipal Reform," etc. All are invited.

—A. L. Ward has resigned the pastorate at Lawrence, Kan., and returned to Indianapolis, where he will rest for a month or two before taking other work. His work at Lawrence was in every way successful, and the church was left in better condition than he found it. There were 28 additions during the year. The congregation at first refused to accept his resignation, and finally did so with regret. Brother Ward is a man of marked ability and has never failed to do a good work in any field which he has occupied. The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST office enjoyed a call from him as he passed through the city en route to Indianapolis.

—The amount subscribed to the World's Fair Exhibit Fund, and previously acknowledged, $1,555.

—G. B. Van Arsdale, pastor of the Central Christian church, Peoria, Ill., was made the recipient of a purse of gold, on the occasion of the recent annual meeting of the church. During the progress of the meeting the pastor was requested to pass out of the auditorium for awhile, while the congregation was indulging in eulogiums on him and collecting gold for the purse. While out the pastor had a call from a couple who wished to be married at once. When he came, in holding up two silver dollars he had earned while out, Bro. J. P. Darst spoke a few complimentary words and pinned on the lapel of his coat a bouquet of chrysanthemums to which was attached a purse containing $100 in gold. And all this was on Friday! The annual report showed progress along all the lines of work. J. P. Darst was elected elder; other offices re-elected.

—Dr. E. E. Montgomery, of Philadelphia, writes under date of Nov. 8, as follows: "It may not be uninteresting to your readers to know that the work in the First Christian Church of Philadelphia presents a brighter outlook than it has afforded for years. On September 20, last, Bro. L. G. Batman, formerly of Mansfield, Ohio, assumed the position of pastor of the church. During the month of October the church attendance was 20 per cent; greater than that for the same month of the preceding year; the Sunday-school 30 per cent. The church finances are in excellent condition. Indeed, the first of November we had a healthy balance on the credit side in the church treasury, which had been something unusual at the same season of the year. A large attendance of the church was held on the last Sunday evening in October to consider the subject of the needs of the church, out of which have grown plans for more aggressive work. On the first Sunday in November the Sunday-school held a rally, when the attendance was greater than at any other time within the last six years with a collection of $100, for Sunday-school purposes. The board of officers at the last meeting had for special consideration plans for more extensive advertising and to secure a larger attendance. In every department of the church work there is a feeling that something can and will be done, and we feel sure that we can yet record great things for Philadelphia."

—They have had a notable anniversary in Kansas City—the celebration at the First Church in that city of the fiftieth anniversary of Bro. T. P. Haley's ordination as a minister of the gospel. The following account of the delightful occasion is from the Kansas City Times of last Saturday:

The fiftieth anniversary of the ordination of the Rev. Dr. T. P. Haley as a minister of the Christian Church was celebrated last night by the First Christian Church at Eleventh and Locust Streets. Dr. Haley was pastor of this church when its present home was built, and has been looked upon as one of the leaders of the denomination in Missouri. A reception was held after the anniversary ceremonies.

The speakers of the occasion were Prof. E. C. White, who paid him a warm tribute, and who formed a friendship with him fifty-one years ago, at the University of Missouri; the Rev. S. M. Neel, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Dr. W. F. Richardson, who succeeded the Rev. Dr. Haley as pastor of the First Christian Church nine years ago.

"His life work was wrought into this church," said the Rev. Mr. Richardson. "He is identified with it over the state, and throughout the brotherhood."

He read the certificate of ordination of Dr. Haley, signed at Antioch, Mo., November 13, 1853, by Benjamin Haley, his father, and Roland I. Procter, father of Alexander Procter, another well known Christian minister.

Dr. Haley, though more than 71 years old, spoke with vigor and in a strong voice for nearly half an hour. He said he was not old, but had only lived many years. He told of his evangelistic work in northern Missouri until 1857, of his pastorate at Lexington until 1864, during which time he taught school and ran a farm also, and of his going to Louisville, Ky., in 1864 for five years. He was then in Platt county for three years, and spent one year in San Francisco as the editor of a church paper, and founded a church while there. He was in St. Louis for several years, and then, in 1881, came to Kansas City. He said he had preached and held protracted meetings in nearly every county in northern Missouri, and had preached in nearly every state in the Union and in the larger churches of England.

The First Church gave him last night a solid gold plate bearing a suitable inscription. The Rev. Dr. Haley is now pastor of the South Side Christian Church. He will preach tomorrow at the First Church.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, of which Brother Haley has been a steadfast friend through all its history, extends to him its hearty congratulations that he has been permitted to preach the glorious gospel of the blessed God for a half century, and to grow in mental breadth and spiritual culture through all these years. Long may he remain with us!

Mother Garrett Gone Home.

At Camp Point, Adams county, Illinois, on Nov. 12, 1903, there fell asleep in Jesus, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrett, in the 91st year of her age. Her death resulted from injuries received in being thrown from her carriage, a week prior to her decease. This lapse of time between the accident and her death gave opportunity for all her surviving children to be present—six sons and three daughters representing five states. A large number of grand children and great-grandchildren were also present. The three daughters present were Mrs. John Miller, Mrs. J. H. Smart, and Mrs. J. H. Garrison.

Mother Garrett moved with her husband, Peter Garrett, from Kentucky to Illinois, to the place on which she died, in 1835. They settled in what was then the wilds of Illinois, and the town of Camp Point has grown up since, and largely on the Garrett land. Peter Garrett, known far and wide for his devotion to the cause of Christ, his hospitality to preachers, his liberality to every good cause, departed this life in the year 1865, in the prime of his usefulness. Mother Garrett survived him in her widowhood 38 years, having lived in the same community for sixty-eight years. At the time of her accident she was in full possession of her mental powers, and in the enjoyment of excellent health.

Her character was no less noteworthy than her long life. We have never known a more beautiful or more loveable character. Her purity of life, evenness of temper, sweet disposition, openhanded benevolence, unselfishness, her unshaken confidence in God and devotion to His cause, her wide hospitality, made her widely known and loved. If she has not literally "washed the saints' feet," she has performed every act of hospitality known to our day. Her large house has been the refuge of many a weary preacher, scores of whom bless her memory. The whole community was bowed in grief at her death. She was conscious of her approaching death. Her lips moved in prayer, and the words "Father" and "home" were distinctly heard. Once, even in the midst of her agony she exclaimed, "Bless the Lord!"

The funeral services were conducted at the home and were brief and simple. A quartet rendered "The Home of the Soul," very sweetly. Brother Smart, of Waukegan, Ill., read appropriate scriptures, and the Presbyterian minister, Rev. Mr. McGaw, in whose house Mother Garrett was carried when she was thrown from her conveyance, and who had showed every kindness, offered a tender, earnest prayer. The editor of this paper made such remarks as he could touching the beautiful character of the departed. The quartet sang, in closing, "Gathering Home-ward, One by One," and a long cortege of mourning friends followed the remains to Pleasant view Cemetery, where the body was deposited beside that of her husband. The grave was beautiful with a blanket of flowers provided by loving hands. The flowers will soon fade and decay, but the fragrance of her sweet life will linger forever.

Farewell, dear mother, till we meet again in our Father's house!

This Will Interest Many.

Correspondence

The Convention in Retrospect.

Having served as minister the churches which have entertained two of our last three national conventions, the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST has kindly suggested that a word from me, looking backward upon these gatherings, might be acceptable.

The hard-working parents of a large family are in danger of missing many of the joys that ought to be theirs in the early days of the life of their children. They are so burdened and time and energy so taxed in caring for the lusty youngsters that they hardly have opportunity to count their blessings.

But a day comes at last when this service is largely complete. The high-chair and crib—with what sacred memories gathered about them—now repose in the attic and playthings have disappeared. Time holds his magical glass between the parents' eyes and the events of those early years of struggle and self-denial, and a golden light rests upon all.

This is somewhat the experience of an entertainment committee during and after the convention. But this article is written in the afterglow, and while it may naturally be somewhat one-sided, it has at least one virtue—it is not a theory, but an experience.

Any church or any city may well covet the honor and privilege of entertaining our national convention. It is like the overflowing of the river Nile, the land is enriched for time to come and you may expect to reap larger harvests. After the convention has come and gone the minister will detect a new spirit in his church. His people have been brought into vital touch with the ongoing of our great missionary enterprises and the result is a transformation of life. To a large percentage of the church it has been a revelation. They had not realized how blessed this service was. They did not know that so much of business tact, earnest effort, generous giving and self-sacrificing love were united in the conduct of all our national missionary organizations. They had heard of this work and read of it, but that was at a distance. Now they have seen it at their doors. Their homes have been favored by the presence in them for a season of some of God's chosen ones, elect souls whose very occupation of the guest chamber for a night is a benediction upon the house.

The great commission means more to that church ever afterward. They have read it in a new light. The unsaved world comes nearer. They begin to feel "I must work the works of him that sent me." They have interest into sweet fellowship with the workers on the field. These blessings are somewhat peculiar to such a gathering as our people hold annually. They do not attach to every religious gathering. Our convention is purely missionary, unselfish, and characterized by somewhat of that spirit which possessed the Master when he reached out his hands to bless and save the lost. We do not gather to legislate on church matters or repair creeds or discuss higher criticism. The Master leads us out for a little space and gives us anew the great commission and our hearts burn within us.

It is always true that there is an uplift in a great work. Workmen on great buildings are carried up with the building as it grows. They get above the dead level of the street with its dust and confusion. After a time they look far out over low lying buildings and finally they have a vision of green fields and trees and streams beyond the city limits. This experience is true in the church. The workman is lifted up and glorified by the work.

As to the Detroit Convention, a word might be added yet to the very good reports previously made. The experiment of shortening the time was certainly a success. From Friday noon until Wednesday night is long enough, if properly used. It affords an opportunity of cutting down long addresses and weeding out non-essentials.

Shall the conventions be great mass meetings held in mighty auditoriums, or shall they be made especially representative gatherings and held in buildings where order and quiet prevail and the spirit of devotion is possible and speakers can be heard?

Probably they should be both. We need a great mass meeting now and then, but if attempted every year such bodies must break down of their own weight after a time. I think there is no question but what the majority of our conventions in the future will be of moderate size as to registration and can thus be accommodated in auditoriums where the real work of the convention can be done properly.

No doubt we are standing in the morning time of a most wonderful day in the history of our work. God grant us all the spirit of wisdom and of love, and may he allow us to live many years to see more and more of his glory and kingdom and then lift us up above the low lying clouds of time and sense, where we shall see the King in his beauty.

Texas Missions.

By way of supplement to the incomplete report of the work of Texas missions for the past year, as published in our state mission number, the corresponding secretary, J. C. Mason, sends the following statement. It is one of the finest state mission records of the year, and the Texas brethren deserve full credit for it. The following figures show the work done under the state board:

Days employed, 6,592, or 18 years and 22 days; sermons preached, 5,677; additions by baptism, 1,921; additions by relation, 1,573; additions otherwise, 600; total additions, 4,094. Places visited and re-visited, 772; districts organized, 1; churches organized, 36; churches re-organized, 12; Sunday schools organized, 34; Ladies' Aid Societies organized, 6; C. W. B. M's. organized, 3; churches aided, 92; churches dedicated, 5; church houses built, 5; preachers aided in location, 17; Christian Endeavors organized, 3; Cash raised in the field, $13,323.25; pledges taken in the field, $5,178.82; pledges at last convention, $2,500; total for state mission work, $20,902.10. Money raised for all purposes, $37,184.65. Number of contributing churches, 275.

In the computation of "Money raised for all purposes," the building of the church at Marlin, Mineral Wells, Venus, Huntsville, and the remodeling of the church at Ladonia are not reckoned, which, if done, would increase the amount fully $10,000, thereby giving a total of $47,184.65 of money raised for all purposes.

THERE IS GREAT DANGER IN CATARRH.

If Left to Run its Course Unchecked, it Often Causes Death.

Catarrh scatters its poisons throughout the entire system. The stomach and Lungs are affected by the droppings that fall into the throat and are swallowed during sleep. Dyspepsia, inflammation of the stomach, bronchitis and consumption are the results. The blood also becomes contaminated and carries the poisons to all parts of the system. Frequently in the more advanced stages, the bones of the head become decayed and the air passages are a putrid mass and create a stench so foul and offensive as to be unbearable. The expression, "rotten with catarrh," is not overdrawn or exaggerated.

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets strike at the root of this terrible odious disease and eradicate it from the system. They are a constitutional remedy that cleanses the system thoroughly of all poisons and purifies the blood. Under their influence the head becomes clear, the discharges at the nose and droppings into the throat cease, the lost sense of smell is restored, the eye brightens, the foul breath becomes pure and sweet and the odious, disgusting disease is thoroughly expelled from the system.

A Cincinnati man says: "I suffered the misery and humiliation of catarrh for twelve years. My case became so aggravated that it seriously interfered with all my business relations. The disease became so offensive that I would not venture into any one's presence unless it were absolutely necessary. I tried every remedy that I could get hold of. Some helped me temporarily, but as soon as I ceased taking them, I would relapse into the old condition.

"Finally a friend told me of Stuart's Catarrh Tablets and insisted that I try them. I had about despaired of ever finding help, but bought a box anyway. I began to notice the improvement within twenty-four hours after I began taking them. Before the first box was gone I felt like another man. I kept up the treatment till I had taken three boxes and was entirely cured. I have never had a recurrence of the trouble from that day to this. My head is clear and well and none of the offensive symptoms of the disease ever trouble me. It has been two years since I stopped taking them."

Stuart's Catarrh Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cts. a box.

To the C. W. B. M. of Missouri.

At our State convention held in Columbia, Sept., 21-24, the committee on Ways and Means submitted the following recommendations which were unanimously accepted.

"1. That our state, district and county officers lay special stress upon and urge the prayerful study of missions; our own C. W. B. M. work in detail, at home and abroad, particularly; also the work of the F. C. M. S., and the A. C. M. S. We should know our missionaries by name and location, and remember them daily in prayer.

"2. That each auxiliary have its own local program, Tidings, social and music committees, and Junior Helpers, that our monthly meetings may be interesting, spiritual and profitable.

"3. That our sisters be urged to generosity, knowing that the Lord loves a cheerful and hilarious giver. That we each promptly pay our monthly offering of 15 cents a month for state and national work, and if we can do so, more and many times that sum, if the Lord has prospered us.

"4. For Missouri's special work, we recommend that we endeavor to raise $2,500 this year, $1,400 of which shall go to our needy and promising Mexico work for the support of Brother and Sister Alderman; $600 for Brother Alderman's salary, $400 for Sister Alderman, and $100 for the support and education of each of the four children; $600 for the salary of the newly elected assistant national secretary, our Mattie Burgess; and $500 for our mission work in Deoghur, India."

At the night session of the convention, following this report, pledges were taken for our special work, amounting to $1,122. Little did we think that while we were planning for the comfort of these faithful missionaries, one, Brother Alderman, was so near the close of his life. And the next day his spirit left its earthly house, to dwell in the mansion prepared for him by his Father.

At a meeting of the Board at Detroit, we unanimously voted to support Brother Alderman's successor, and have been anxiously awaiting the selection of the man, by the National Board. A letter just received from Mattie Burgess, tells us that Sister Alderman will remain in Mexico until the close of the school year and probably longer. Just as soon as a missionary is chosen for this field, we will issue a leaflet, concerning our special work, for distribution throughout the state. These will reach you some time next month.

In the meantime it is our earnest desire that you may concentrate your efforts on C. W. B. M. day, with a prayer in your hearts that the offerings of that day will relieve our overdrawn general treasury.

We are to have a new C. W. B. M. banner this year, and the board decided that it should go to the auxiliary giving the largest amount per capita. The smaller auxiliaries can enter this contest. Remember that our next convention will be held in June, and that we must begin our work immediately if we are ready.

At the request of the board I give you these plans for the year, so that we may work in harmony, as one body, with one purpose, that of winning souls. The heart given to our Father, the hand given to our brother, the life given to both, will win the world for Christ."

Calamity at the Southern Christian Institute.

Belding Hall the fine new dormitory for boys, at the Southern Christian Institute, was totally destroyed by fire—together with all its contents, Monday evening, Nov. 2.

The rate of insurance for that class of buildings is so high that the Hall had been insured for only $2,000.

Rooms must be arranged for the boys immediately. Winter is coming on, and this requires haste. Churches and societies could aid by sending boxes of muslin for sheets, and cotton blankets. The sheets can be made in the sewing department there. Send to J. B. Lehman, Edwards, Hinds county, Mississippi. I know there are many who will wish to aid the Southern Christian Institute in this time of loss and calamity.

We will also need $2,000, in addition to the insurance, to put this building back where it was. Many churches and individuals will be glad to help in this also. Send offerings for this purpose to C. C. Smith, 1342 Locust St., Walnut Hills, Cincinnati, Ohio. J. B. Lehman writing of the calamity says: "What has caused us anxiety and hard work for four years went into vapor in one short hour."

C. C. SMITH.

[This most worthy institution ought to have generous aid at once. It is an industrial school which is doing a valuable work by something of the same methods that Booker Washington uses at Tuskegee. Brother and Sister Lehman are devoting their best energies to this excellent work. Help them in this calamity. EDITOR.]

Greetings from Dr. Rijnhart.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON—I am just sending you greetings for yourself and for the dear people in the homeland. We are five hundred miles from Honolulu on our way to Yokohama, and our thoughts are with you much and often.

Our voyage has been a very good one. The weather good. Though the waves have been too high to have our puts open very much. There are one hundred first-class passengers forty of whom are missionaries. Every morning we have a family prayer-meeting. Yesterday Brother Madden led it.

Geo. W. Sweeney from California is on board with Cook's party round the world, and he preached last Lord's day.

Dr. and Mrs. Shelton, as you know, are my co-workers for Tibet, and I am finding them very congenial and better still, good, consecrated, capable people. God has done much for Tibet in sending them out.

We had a pleasant visit in Honolulu. Brother Muckley and others of our church there met the boat, and that evening we had quite a good meeting in the church. Brother Madden and I both gave addresses. The work in Honolulu is prospering—Brother Muckley seems to be the man for them.

October 17.—It is early Saturday and we are nearing Yokohama. At least, they tell us so, but it is raining so hard that we cannot see any land. The party breaks up here—with Christian love to all—and the request that we may be remembered in prayer.

I remain yours in His name.

Blue Springs a short time ago was discouraged and under shadows, but J. W. Boulton came to them, now on his second year, and all is changed. Inside of house very neat and attractive, membership united and happy, Bible-school growing and prosperous and the protracted meeting by home forces looks most hopeful. What a change in so short a time and how happy, too, under a good man.

S. G. Newlon gave us $25 for some good work and we used it in R. B. Havener's meeting at Gamma, with a new congregation organized, nearly sufficient funds for a new house in which a new Bible-school will go. Splendid investment, and we will do the same for another friend who wants to put into our hands a special fund for just such a work.

Dade county meeting in brief has been sent out by a committee and it is just the thing to circulate among those not present and it shows $111.25 raised for Dade county work, and we will hear of some revived and strengthened congregation before the year is ended. The committee is now looking for an evangelist.

The Verona people made great preparation for the Lawrence county meeting, but lack of previous preparation of program, announcement and such like hindered us. Those present enjoyed the meeting and it was decided to have the meeting at the same time and place the coming year. The few present made a splendid offering to our work, helping us greatly over a hard place.

We have no two better friends in all our service for Christ than has Brother J. R. Hargrove and his Christian wife and wish for hundreds like them.

Write B. L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Bldg., Cincinnati, Ohio, for Boys' and Girls' Rally Day supplies, free and keep the day soon as you can make the preparations. Do not defer it, as you love the children and the Master and human souls.

Christian county has just had the best county meeting held in Southwest Missouri, with H. Eichelberger president and W. B. Moore secretary. The attendance was beyond the average for day and night sessions, while the entertainment by the Nixa brethren was very hospitable and fraternal. Reports from churches and schools were good in number, but clearly showed the need of work, while the hearts of the people were open to the appeal and the brethren gave to us over $16 for our work alone, best offering ever received in that region. An apportionment will be made by which the co-operation hopes to help the weaker churches and needy places of the county. Nixa is one of the prettiest farming regions of all south Missouri and our brethren have a great opportunity for Christ.

By keeping Boys' and Girls' Rally Day, you help the children, help home missions and help state Bible-school work, either and all of which are worthy of your best efforts and all of which depend upon you for the training and assistance. H. F. DAVIS.

In 1889 she was united in marriage to Amos Buchanan, Sr., one of our prominent pioneer preachers, who is left to mourn her loss. In her youth she united with Christ and has ever faithfully manifested many of his graces.

J. N. LESTER.

HALE.

Mrs. Evalyn Morris, wife of Elder W. P. Hale, died at New York City, Nov. 5, at 4 P. M., aged 54 years, 2 months and 15 days. She had gone to New York to the bedside of her daughter, who was seriously ill. While there she became sick and died after a brief illness. Her remains were brought to Mountain Grove, Mo., for interment. The life of the deceased abounded in good works. Like her Lord and Masters, she went about doing good, relieving the sick and bringing comfort to the afflicted. She leaves a husband, a son and married daughter to mourn her loss.

W. S. WILLIAMS.

HUSTON.

S. M. Huston died at his home in Irvington, Ind., Nov. 4, at the age of 77. His early life was spent in and near Crawfordsville, Ind., where he was united in marriage to Miss Margaret McCollough, who survives his death. In 1873 he removed to Irvington, and became actively interested in the welfare of Butler College. He was one of the charter members of the church at that place. Intending in early life to devote himself to the ministry of the Word, but prevented by throat trouble, his whole life was a conspicuous example of that ministry which may be given by those who can not preach. About 1884 Bro. Huston made his home in Springfield, Mo. He found the church weak, with about 150 members. As an elder and chairman of the board of officers, he gave his heart to the work and left a church of 600 members, when he returned to Irvington some twelve years later. While at Springfield he served as County Judge for three consecutive terms. He lived a pure, devoted Christian life, esteemed by all who knew him. Four children mourn his loss, James H. and Edward M. Huston, of Springfield, Mo.; Mrs. Alice Taylor, of Crawfordsville, Ind., and Mrs. May Thornton, of Indianapolis.

Harrison, O., Nov. 13, 1903.

COLORADO.—Trinidad, Nov. 9.—Three more additions here Sunday, Nov. 8.—DAVID CARY PETERS.

FLORIDA.—Jacksonville, Nov. 9.—The Congregational Church of this city extended courtesies to the Church Street Christian Church yesterday in a union service in their magnificent new church building recently completed, the writer speaking to splendid audiences morning and evening, and addressing between services the Y. P. S. C. E. in their lecture room. We have had two accessions to the Church Street Christian Church since our last report. We leave this week for a short meeting at Quitman, Ga., making the sixth or seventh meeting we have held for the Quitman Church in the last few years.—T. H. BLENNIS.

ILLINOIS.—Marion, Nov. 9.—I have just entered upon my second year at this place. Three additions since last report. One by letter, two by statement.—W. W. WEEDON.

Sandoval, Nov. 14.—Evangelist F. T. Davis is holding a very profitable meeting for the church at Sandoval. There have been 7 confessions to date. The interest is growing.—R. BURT DOAN, Pastor.

Worden, Nov. 14.—We have just closed a very successful meeting here, with 50 additions to the church, making a working force of 80 members. Bro. I. N. Jett, of New Douglas, did the preaching. The writer conducted the song service. I have been employed to take charge of the work for all time, and the future of the cause in Worden looks very bright.—WILL J. SLATER.

Fairbury, Nov. 13.—Eight additions. Will commence a two weeks' meeting here Nov. 23. We are building a new church at Forest to cost $2,500. Foundation now finished and work on church will commence at once.—WILLIAM WOOD.

Carmi, Nov. 12.—One confession and two added by letter last Lord's day at regular services.—FRANK B. THOMAS.

Rushville, Nov. 9.—Baptized 3 at Bethany Church Saturday afternoon.—C. B. DABNEY.

Centralia, Nov. 11.—Our meeting here grows in interest and additions—9 last two nights; continue another week.—H. C. PATTERSON.

Kankakee, Nov. 9.—Two were added to the church by letter yesterday and six by confession and baptism. Two others have been added recently by baptism. The Sunday-school is in the beginning of a revival, using the gold and silver buttons. The prospects are very encouraging.—R. E. THOMAS.

Murphysboro, Nov. 9.—Six added last night. This church needs a pastor immediately, as the former preacher resigned and left before the meeting began.—LAWRENCE WRIGHT AND L. R. SMITH, General Evangelists.

Nebo, Nov. 8.—Last Friday night we closed a very successful meeting at Pleasant Hill. This place is my regular work for one-fourth time. We received 42 additions to the church in a three weeks' meeting; 5 the night we closed. Since I took charge of this church last March we have received 50 additions, 41 of these by confession and baptism. This is my second meeting alone in evangelistic work. The other one resulted in 11 additions in 7 days, held last year.—O. C. BOLMAN, Roodhouse, Ill.

La Harpe, Nov. 13.—Having closed my work in California, Mo., and conducted a successful meeting at Fortuna, Mo., I am open to further engagements, either as pastor or evangelist. Have the very best commendations from every church that I ever served, and I have worked in Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska and Illinois.—THOS. J. THOMPSON.

Danville.—The first week of our meeting with Bro. J. W. Street and the congregation of the First Church, Danville, has brought 15 persons to the front; 5 by confession. There are obstacles to be overcome before a great meeting can be held, but I believe the wise head and strong heart of the pastor and the power of the meeting will go a long way toward gaining the desired end.—JAMES SMALL.

INDIANA.—Bedford, Nov. 9.—Seven recently added to the Lord in this fruitful field. Six came forward at the close of an address on our convention in Detroit. The inspiration of that gathering spread from preacher to congregation like a contagion. We are planning new work on the borders of this town. God's blessing on our labors here is manifest. That we are permitted to aid him is a marvel of his grace.—E. RICHARD EDWARDS.

Manville, Nov. 6.—There were two accessions by letter last Lord's day to the Madison church. I have had 10 confessions here so far, and look for others. We hope to revive the work here considerably, as we have already done. This is a good community. Brother Lanham has done a noble work here for the past fifty years. They now want and need a good young man.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

Madison, Nov. 9.—Three accessions yesterday by letter at regular services. Work in splendid condition. Return this afternoon to resume my work in the meeting. Twenty confessions there last week.—J. MURRAY TAYLOR.

Indianapolis, Nov. 9.—Five added at regular services at North Park Church yesterday. Ten added in a short meeting held by A. L. Orcutt.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—South McAlester, Nov. 11.—Our congregation continues its steady growth, two added Nov. 1, three added Nov. 8. J. C. Howell, who resides here, but preaches for Atoka and Checotah, is doing a good work at these points. A number of additions recently at Checotah. We of the Indian Territory have many reasons for encouragement.—I. H. FEEL.

IOWA.—Shenandoah, Nov. 13.—One more confession; two baptized last night, one having made the confession last Lord's day.—H. C. LITTLETON.

New York, Ia., Nov. 11.—Bro. J. F. Adair closed a meeting for us at Bethlehem last night. Visible results: two confessions, one from Baptists, one from U. B.'s, four by statement. The church is stronger in every way because of his work. He did us no harm, but a great deal of good. His next meeting is at Sewal, this county. Address him at Stuart, Ia., if you want him to hold a meeting. We will soon begin a meeting with home forces at New York.—O. L. ADAMS, Pastor.

Woodbine, Nov. 9.—One confession and one by letter since last report.—J. H. WRIGHT.

Restores Eyesight.

SPECTACLES A THING OF THE PAST

"Actina," A Marvelous Discovery That Cures All Afflictions of the Eye and Ear Without Cutting or Drugging.

A marvelous discovery has been made by that Scientist and Inventive Genius, Prof. W. C. Wilson. He has invented a restorer known as "Actina," through which all afflictions of the eyes and ear, such as blindness, granulated lids, cataracts, sore eyes, deafness, etc., are cured without cutting or drugging. It is a simple contrivance, known as the Actina Pocket Battery, and through it the patients cure themselves in the privacy of their own homes. It not only abolishes the butcheries and torturous methods practiced by oculists and aurists, but at the same time perfects a positive and lasting cure.

Mr. A. O. T. Pennington, Massachusetts Bld., Kansas City, Mo., writes: "'Actina' saved my mother, who is eighty years old, from an operation for cataracts."

Rev. W. C. Goodwin, Moline, Kansas, writes: "My honest opinion of 'Actina' is that it is one of the most marvelous discoveries of the age. It saved my eye from an operation."

Mrs. R. Elkins, Neal, Kansas, writes: "I am pleased with 'Actina.' It cured my granulated sore eyes."

Mr. A. L. Howe, Tully, N. Y., writes: "'Actina' has removed cataracts from both my eyes. I can read well without my glasses; am sixty-five years old."

A party of prominent citizens have organized a company known as the New York and London Electric Association, and they have given this method so thorough a test on hundreds of cases pronounced incurable and hopeless that they now positively assure a cure. "Actina" is sent on trial postpaid. If you will call or send your name and address to the New York and London Electric Association, Dept. 203 B, 929 Walnut St., Kansas City, Mo., you will receive, absolutely free, a valuable book—Prof. Wilson's "Treatise on the Eye and on Diseases in General," and you can rest assured that your eyesight and hearing will be restored, no matter how many doctors have failed.

ries of meetings here last night in which M. L. Anthony assisted by doing the preaching. There were 26 additions; 4 by letter, 14 by baptism, 7 by statement, 3 from Baptists and 1 reclaimed.—C. H. STRAWN.

Shenandoah, Nov. 9.—Our meetings here are good. Audiences fine. One confession yesterday.—H. C. LITTLETON.

KANSAS.—Kansas City, Nov. 18.—We are in the midst of a series of meetings with our two churches here. Eighteen added up to date. Bro. O. W. Thomas preaches for the Central Church and C. P. Smith for the North Side. These brethren are unifying our work in this city and bringing it out of its chaotic state. Next meeting at Maryville, Mo.—OMER AND KERR.

Independence, Nov. 14.—Meeting here about two weeks' old. Brother Longston is interesting the people and has good audiences and attention. Largest crowd last Sunday in the history of the church here. Many were turned away. Could not seat them.—L. D. SPRAGUE, gospel singer.

MISSOURI.—De Soto, Nov. 15.—One confession and two additions by statement to-day.—W. E. GARRISON, St. Louis.

Joplin, Nov. 13.—Our great meeting with Harlow and Ridenour has taken on new interest and power. We have passed the fortieth day with 482 additions. It is wonderful. We will continue. Brother Harlow is certainly one of our greatest evangelists; Brother Ridenour one of our sweetest singers.—W. F. TURNER.

Odessa, Nov. 14.—Meeting in progress with J. J. Lockhart; three additions the first week, nine the second and 30 the third.—DAVID LYON.

Kirksville, Nov. 12.—There were two additions to the church here last Sunday, and two the Sunday before.—H. A. NORTHCUTT.

Palmyra, Nov. 9.—Four additions Sunday; one confession and baptism Sunday week.—W. HENRY JONES, Minister.

Calhoun, Nov. 5.—Just closed a 13 days' meeting at Hayden's Grove congregation with two added by confession and two otherwise. Our Bible-school is doing fine under the supervision of Dr. Robert Jennings.—W. H. SCOTT.

SCOTT & BOWNE, 409 Pearl Street, New York.

Richland, Nov. 9.—We had one confession and baptism at our last appointment at Crocker. Had four yesterday at Swedeborg; three by letter and one from the Presbyterian. Also one by letter at a previous appointment.—J. P. BLUNT.

Knob Lick, Nov. 15.—I had the pleasure of taking the good confession of the railroad agent at this place last evening.—S. W. ROBINSON.

Rushville, Nov. 9.—Our great meeting conducted by Joseph Lowe, of California, closed last night with 82 additions; 56 confessions, 7 from other churches, 10 reclaimed, one by letter, 8 by statement. Brother Lowe held a meeting for this church just before going to California several years ago with 57 additions. The church built a baptistry for the meeting which added greatly to the convenience and pleasure of immersing. Brother Lowe organized a Christian Endeavor Society with 55 members. He is an earnest and fluent speaker and a Christian gentleman and as such I can heartily recommend churches needing an evangelist to employ him.—W. A. GARDNER.

Lebanon, Nov. 9.—Returned from Detroit and began meeting at this place with the pastor, Bro. S. G. Clay. Meeting one week old. One addition last Lord's day.—IDA SIMPSON, Singing Evangelist.

St. Louis, Nov. 11.—Three more additions at Elvins, Mo., since last report. Two are men. The writer has been requested to preach the Union Thanksgiving sermon in the Methodist church. A good business meeting in which the value of each member was considered, proved very helpful.—J. G. M. LUTTENBERGER.

Cameron, Nov. 10.—On Sunday night, Nov. 8, we closed a meeting here of three weeks duration, which was conducted by home forces. There were fourteen accessions to the congregation; six by letter, one by reclamation and seven by confession and baptism. There have been twenty additions to this church since the beginning of my work here as pastor, Sept. 20. We trust and believe, that our series of revival services resulted in more good to the church and community than is indicated in the number added to the membership of the congregation.—RICHARD W. WALLACE.

Monroe City, Nov. 12.—I closed a nine day's successful meeting with the Ariel church near Hatch, Mo., Nov. 8, held over two Lord's days. It was with regret we had to close at this time. The best of feeling prevailed through the meeting. The audiences were large and the interest intense. We think a great strength was added to the congregation. The brethren presented me with a pocket of dollars, and my wife plenty of good things to eat. The church tendered me a call for one-fourth time. I have not as yet accepted.—F. BOYD.

Marshfield, Nov. 14.—The co-operation meeting of the Christian churches of Webster county, held their annual meeting with North View Church beginning Nov. 11, closing Oct. 13, F. M. Hooten presiding. We were ably assisted by T. A. Abbott, H. F. Davis, Joseph Gaylor, also J. N. Blunt and wife, of Richland. The meeting was a success in every way; $177 was pledged for special work in Webster county the coming year. North View cannot be beat for hospitality. Our next annual meeting will go the Niangua Church.—Mrs. J. P. CALLAWAY, Secretary.

Nevada, Nov. 9.—The Christian church here has recently closed a meeting of almost four weeks. Result, 89 accessions to the church. There were 56 baptisms. Prof. C. M. Sharpe, of the Bible College, Columbia, Mo., did the preaching. Albert Bellingham, assistant pastor and musical director of the Christian church had charge of the music. Prof. Sharpe has made a fine impression on our people. He is a perfect gentlemen, talented, bright, interesting, earnest. He resorts to no tricks or sensational methods, but appeals to the whole man. He addresses himself to one's understanding, convinces his judgment and wins his heart. Whatever emotion he arouses has a solid foundation, and the good done can be reasonably counted on as permanent. The influence of the meeting has been excellent. A good taste is in everybody's mouth. The church may count herself doubly blessed who is able to secure Brother Sharpe for a meeting before he enters permanently on his work as teacher at our Bible College. Mr. Bellingham is a genial, whole-souled Christian gentleman, whose pleasing personality counts for much in his singing. His voice is clear, of good quality, and rich in sympathetic power. He himself is sincere, frank, and without affectation. Worthy also of note is the excellent service rendered by Mrs. Gertrude Stanford. She was faithful and most efficient, adding by her ability very materially to the interest and success of the meeting.—G. D. EDWARDS.

OHIO.—Salem.—Eleven confessions in the Coombs-Saxton meeting here. They go to Lorain in December.

Newark, Nov. 9.—One confession yesterday and one by statement. Three by letter one week ago.—H. NEWTON MILLER.

Geneva, Nov. 10.—Church report for regular services: Six added by letter last Sunday, Nov. 8; one added by primary obedience Nov. 1; five added by letter Oct. 25. Held two weeks' meeting at Thompson Church in October. Result, seven added by primary obedience.—H. L. ATKINSON, pastor Church of Christ.

Modoc, Nov. 14.—At this date there have been in our meeting at Green's Run, O., (Modoc P. O.) 18 from the world, 3 from the Baptists and 5 from sister congregations—in all 26. Meeting goes right on indefinitely.—J. A. WALTERS.

Steubenville, Nov. 11.—Four additions at the morning service Sunday. In the evening our pastor exchanged pulpits with Rev. Hanna, of the North Presbyterian Church. Our Bible-school mission will soon be ready for dedication. The ninth district convention met here last week.—.

OKLAHOMA TERRITORY.—Oklahoma City, Nov. 13.—I will close my work with the First Church here next Lord's day, and leave for home. I am at liberty to engage for other work for the first of the new year. Could aid in a meeting in December. Address me at Lexington, Ky. Two more added here last Sunday; additions at almost every service.—C. M. HUGHES, Gospel Singer.

OREGON.—Wasco, Nov. 9.—I came here at the earnest solicitation of brethren who came here from Illinois. Meeting 15 days; 10 added: 6 by commendation, 4 confessions. Only one other Christian Church in the county—at Lucas, 10 miles away. Neither has a pastor. The cry for help stirs the soul of the faithful preacher. Oh that I were able to come here and help them. Will continue another week.—A. H. HARRELL, Windsor, Ill.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Shamburg, Nov. 13.—The meeting here, conducted by Thomas Martin, has awakened much interest and good attendance. Prospects encouraging. Two confessions up to date.—W. H. H. MONROE.

Wilkes Barre, Nov. 9.—We opened here yesterday to 10 persons at morning service and 22 at evening, from which we received offering to the amount of $4. It is a wide-open field, nothing in the way of organization. It is said to have 30 or 40 Disciples in and about the city. We should begin organizing auxiliaries at once. Start prayer-meeting this week. We are pleased with start.—E. E. COWPERTHWAIT.

Scranton, Nov. 9.—Three additions yesterday; two week before. Work is progressing nicely.—ROBT. W. CLYMER, Pastor.

SOUTH DAKOTA.—Miller, Nov. 13.—Our church is nearing completion. The following is a compliment paid us by one of the three Miller papers, The Gazette: "Rev. A. O. Swartwood, pastor of the Christian Church, deserves much credit for the change he has made in remodeling the old church. The building as it now appears is an ornament to our town and speaks well for the Christian congregation." We are holding services in the opera house while we are building. One confession Lord's day morning, Nov. 8, a young lady, president of the Epworth League of Huron, S. D. She was immersed in the baptistry of our unfinished church.—A. O. SWARTWOOD.

WASHINGTON.—Tekoa, Nov. 10.—Since coming to Washington last July, my health has improved very much. The work here promises to be both pleasant and prosperous. Pray for us. Bro. Melton W. Smith, of Pullman, Wash., and Bro. F. O. McCauley, of Tekoa, have joined forces in evangelistic work. Their first meeting was at Mt. Hope, Wash., where a permanent organization of 40 members was perfected at the close of the fourth week. Before the meeting began there were 13 loyal Disciples of Christ in the community. To this number there were added by baptism, 17; from the M. E. Church, 2; from the Evangelical, 2; from the U. B., 1; from Christian connection, 1; and 4 others reclaimed. Mt. Hope is the center of a rich farming community. The church was formally organized at 11 o'clock, Oct. 28, 1903. After this service the church was turned into a banquet hall, and all partook of a "basket dinner." The occasion was delightful and inspiring, and the work is the best testimony to the faith of these people and of the men who lead them. Brother Smith and Brother McCauley go to the needy fields, regardless of financial strength. They have just commenced a meeting at Waverly, Wash., against great odds.

WEST VIRGINIA.—Huntington, Nov. 12.—Bro. W. P. Dorsey and C. E. Millard, singing evangelist, are in a great meeting, not yet three weeks old. Twenty three additions and interest undiminished. Church crowded. Prof. Millard is the sweetest singer ever in our city. His solos are very touching, and when sung with illustrations on canvas, appealing to the heart through both the eye and ear, cannot fail to make deep impressions upon all hearers. Our church is coming to the front, and the best people are listening attentively every night to the gospel. Meeting will continue indefinitely.—W. D. KEISTER, Church Clerk.

WISCONSIN.—Madison, Nov. 11.—One confession at Packwaukee last Sunday. This makes five confessions—three unreported. Our little band there gave over $30 for missions this year. Will organize here Friday night.—ROLLA G. SEARS.

The Moral Content of Faith.

Much has appeared recently in our religious journals concerning the tendency of certain doctrines or theories of biblical criticism to undermine one's faith and foster infidelity. Occasionally an example of some one whose faith has thus been weakened or destroyed is held up as a warning. Certainly anything that would tend to destroy religious faith is to be regarded with apprehension. But have we not placed the emphasis in the wrong place? Does not faith have a moral content and basis quite as well as an intellectual? Jesus said to certain ones, "How can ye believe, which receive honor one of another and seek not the honor that cometh from God only?" Where there is one whose faith is shattered by intellectual difficulties, there are scores whose faith is destroyed by moral causes. One only needs to interrogate those around him or look into his own experience to see that this is true. The severest test my faith has ever had, has been when some one in whose Christian integrity I have had the greatest confidence has proved unworthy. Is it not true that the age of low morals has always been the age of weak faith? Just now we are laying the emphasis upon doctrinal soundness. May it not be well to shift it to moral earnestness? Preacher and Politics.

Since the writer accepted the nomination on the Republican ticket of Davis county, for representative, numbers of my friends have written, some with congratulations, others with criticism but all very kindly. First let me say that the Republican party in Iowa, stands for "local option."

In a community where the people demand high license, the party stands for license in that place, and in a community that says we will have no saloons, the party stands for prohibition in that community. It is as much pledged to prohibition in such communities as it is to license in the other. For the past two years I have been making temperance speeches in this county. We have not a saloon in the county. This is a prohibition county so far as saloons are concerned. I have repeatedly said, that the man who would represent this county other than as a temperance man, as against the saloon would be false to his constituency. This, I believe. If elected by the good people of this county it will become me, first of all, to stand as a representative of my constituency, which I can do and be true to my convictions. This is a Democratic county, and it remains to be seen whether the people will vote party, as against principle. My opponent must stand for the license saloon, or must openly oppose his state platform. With me it is simply a question as to where I can render the best service to humanity. D. A. WICKIZER.

"Honor to Whom Honor is Due."

I have read with interest and pleasure the article by R. Moffett, calling our attention to the work of others, who in days long gone wrought mightily for our mission work, and made possible our present attainments. His tribute to Thomas Munnell is worthy both Moffett who made it and Munnell who earned it.

But the story should not stop there. In my eight years as corresponding secretary I have realized, as never before, the work of these splendid men, and I want to say that to no man living or dead, are we more indebted for our missionary training than to Robert Moffett.

He led our work when it was in the wilderness; he brought us into the borders of the promised land.

There is scarcely a plan in all our work that Moffett did not inaugurate; we are simply carrying out the details.

When others faltered he pressed on; when others had grown weary he had only begun to labor. There are churches that he visited and enlisted in missions that have never ceased to send in their offerings from that day to this.

When the church writes the names of her jewels, especially those who have loved and labored for the great work of missions, high on the roll will be the name of that quiet modest, but strong man, Robert Moffett. May the Lord keep him and bless him.

BENJ. L. SMITH.

EDITOR OF CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, DEAR BROTHER:—In a recent editorial comment relative to W. J. Bryan, and wife and his connection with the Bennett will case, I wish to say that in my opinion your article is clearly out of line, especially as it was published in advance of the ruling of the court, which ruling and finding, as it now appears in print, thoroughly exonerates Mr. Bryan from criticism for his connection with the preparation of Mr. Bennett's will.

To my mind it was far more frank and honest to do the thing directly, than to accomplish the same object by indirection, by having it done by another. The course Mr. Bryan pursued was characteristic of the inherent honesty of the man and less to be criticised than many of the diplomatic subterfuges often used to cover the tracks of the beneficiary in matters of this kind.

The article bears to my mind the impression that the author finds some satisfaction in forestalling public opinion of a noble and able man in regard to a matter utterly out of place in any publication and especially in one of our leading Christian newspapers. . . . Whatever you may hold against Mr. Bryan's monetary theories, Christian people throughout this land see in him a consistent Christian character, worthy of the love of all Christians.

Fort Wayne, Ind.

S. F. SWAYNE.

[Readers who recall the paragraph referred to, will remember that we brought no charge against Mr. Bryan's motives and distinctly disavowed the least suspicion that he was guilty of either a criminal or a dishonest act. What we said was that in writing a will in his own favor, he showed a certain "lack of delicacy." The decision of the court does not bear upon this point.—EDITOR.]

A Lurid Picture.

What you say about a "Lurid Picture" in a recent number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST presents to me the great opportunity of your life. It is true the World's Fair will gather of all kinds, but the best part of the year is before you to prepare for that event.

John says of Christians, "Greater is he that is in us, than he that is in the world." Now prove it. One of the prophets says, "When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the spirit of the Lord shall lift up the standard against him. Show the world that the spirit of the Lord is there."

A great opportunity for practical Christian union and there can be no other. Say to all the churches there—I mean by churches local worshiping congregations—let us all go in together for victory. Trust over sin in the individual, then the community. Drop all distinctions of names, only to distinguish each other as to locality, and think of and speak of and pray for each other as a local congregation of the church of Christ in St. Louis. In this church there should be no schism, much less divisions, on lines of difference. So in the name of Christ, close up.

Three points are essential to gain: 1. To work. 2. To work together, and 3, to work with God. These points gained, and success and victory as certain, if God's promise is sure. The first essential is the one object, the one end to be gained. Let this be that for which Christ came into the world, to save it from sin, "and we can hardly fail of unity. Let us feel we are in Christ's stead, as though God was beseeching by us, while in Christ's stead we pray men to be reconciled to God." Or in the words of Christ's commission to Paul,

WHAT SULPHUR DOES

For the Human Body in Health and Disease.

The mention of sulphur will recall to many of us the early days when our mothers and grandmothers gave us our daily dose of sulphur and molasses every spring and fall.

It was the universal spring and fall "blood purifier," tonic and cure-all, and mind you, this old-fashioned remedy was not without merit.

The idea was good, but the remedy was crude and unpalatable, and a large quantity had to be taken to get any effect.

Nowadays we get all the beneficial effects of sulphur in a palatable, concentrated form, so that a single grain is far more effective than a tablespoonful of the crude sulphur.

In recent years, research and experiment have proven that the best sulphur for medicinal use is that obtained from Calcium (Calcium Sulphide) and sold in drug stores under the name of Stuart's Calcium Wafers. They are small chocolate coated pellets and contain the active medicinal principle of sulphur in a highly concentrated, effective form.

Few people are aware of the value of this form of sulphur in restoring and maintaining bodily vigor and health: sulphur acts directly on the liver, the excretory organs and purifies and enriches the blood by the prompt elimination of waste material.

Our grandmothers knew this when they dosed us with sulphur and molasses every spring and fall, but the crudity and impurity of ordinary flowers of sulphur were often worse than the disease, and cannot compare with the modern concentrated preparations of sulphur, of which Stuart's Calcium Wafers is undoubtedly the best and most widely used.

They are the natural antidote for liver and kidney troubles, and cure constipation and purify the blood in a way that often surprises patient and physician alike.

Dr. R. M. Wilkins while experimenting with sulphur remedies soon found that the sulphur from Calcium was superior to any other form. He says: "For liver, kidney and blood troubles, especially when resulting from constipation or malaria, I have been surprised at the results obtained from Stuart's Calcium Wafers. In patients suffering from boils and pimples and even deep seated carbuncles, I have repeatedly seen them dry up and disappear in four or five days, leaving the skin clear and smooth. Although Stuart's Calcium Wafers is a proprietary article, and sold by druggists, and for that reason tabooed by many physicians, yet I know of nothing so safe and reliable for constipation, liver and kidney troubles, and especially in all forms of skin disease, as this remedy."

At any rate, people who are tired of pills, cathartics and so-called blood "purifiers," will find in Stuart's Calcium Wafers a far safer, more palatable and effective preparation.

"to open their eyes, to turn from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God; that they may receive forgiveness of sins and an inheritance among the sanctified."

Then follow this move right up, or have it go along with it, the prohibition of the liquor traffic in both Illinois and Missouri. You are at the center where you can lift the flame so all will see it, and I believe if you do as you can and should, there will be such a response as will astonish the world, gladden the heart of all the good and strike a higher strain in heaven. A great danger, a great opportunity, a great responsibility—will you face it manly? The opportunity of your life! God help you to lay all upon the altar, and all is safe. S. M. FOWLER.

The New Birth of John Storkins.

quiet laugh, indeed, for he had been years without practice, but it was prophetic of plenty more to follow. In his room he made his toilet with a nervous haste no one had ever noticed in John Storkins before. He was in so great a hurry that it was much longer than usual before he was ready to go out. But he actually laughed, did John Storkins, as he stood before the glass trying to brush his hair, making unaccustomed wrinkles about his mouth, as he thought how Arthur Storkins would stare when the monster fowl was delivered at his door.

The turkey was ready wrapped up when he called at the market. Nothing, however, would satisfy John Storkins but to have the package opened that he might gaze upon the magnificent proportions of the noble bird. Then a new idea came into his mind. He scrawled a hasty note expressing his compliments and saying he hoped he would be welcome to dinner—for he intended to give himself that pleasure—which was carefully placed within, and minute directions given as to the early delivery of the precious package. Then, when John Storkins went away, the butcher, who had not said a word, went out upon the street and watched him out of sight. He then went back to his place, shaking his head as though he couldn't make it out.

From the butcher's he went directly to the Magdalene Refuge. The hour was early, and the gentleman he wanted to see was in bed. But John Storkins was impatient. The gentleman was therefore awakened, and after a hasty toilet appeared. There is no reason for relating minutely what was said or done. At the next meeting of the board of managers, this same gentleman made a somewhat impassioned speech in which he said that such munificence, such open-hearted generosity he had never seen before. John Storkins himself, however, had modestly said he was merely paying a debt with interest. He went away quietly with his hands in his pockets, and unless a small boy who happened to meet him was mistaken, he actually tried to whistle, though making but an indifferent success in the attempt.

He walked about the street for an hour or more. It was not the same street he had known yesterday. It was in fact a new world. There was a life and color about it absolutely non-existent until John Storkins had felt the joy of his new birth. The butcher had, as it turned out, told a friend he really supposed at first that he was intoxicated. He was not far wrong, but truly it was the intoxication of one who gets his first view of the true meaning of life. He was happy in the flush of new-born purpose.

As we said, he walked about for an hour, when the church bells rang out. They were no longer iron throated, clamoring bells. On the contrary they sent forth deep, sweet music, as new as his many other experiences since his companion of the night had taken him on his fateful journey. He followed them, too, and spent an hour with people who certainly saw nothing sour or harsh in his visage, the memory of which had only the day before caused careless people to say there would be no tears shed at his death. More than that, when an appeal was made for the poor and contribution boxes were passed, a grave deacon, who looked as though nothing could perturb him, was observed to raise his eyebrows with astonishment when John Storkins dropped a double-eagle among the lighter coins of the offering.

But the crowning event of the day was the dinner. John Storkins appeared promptly at the home of his nephew, who met him at the door and shook him by the hand. The turkey was the first surprise. That his uncle should care to visit him was another and a greater one. That there should be an expression of pleasure on his face, or any expression at all but a sour, unpleasant one, was a greater one still. But here John Storkins was, at all events. There could be no question about it, however difficult an explanation of it might be. He shook hands with Alice, and greater surprise than any yet, he actually kissed her. Yes, first on one cheek and then on the other, as though he had always been on the most affectionate footing in the family. Indeed, she was a very pretty woman, was Alice, albeit worn with care and plainly dressed. Then he went directly to Robert's bedside and took a look at him. He had no thought but that his night's experience had been real.

"He is better, is he not?" he asked.

"Better, yes," said Alice, "his fever left him in the night."

"A change of air and scene," said John Storkins, taking a look about the room, "is what would help Robert more than medicine."

"So the physician says," said Alice, "but of course—"

Here Arthur's uncle took Alice by the arm and led her to the sofa. He spoke a few words in a whisper. Alice, as her husband said, was one of the tenderest hearted creatures in the world. Whatever it was her uncle said, was told in too low a tone for Arthur to hear, but at once she threw her apron over her face and began to sob, though it was perfectly plain her tears were those of joy and not of grief. It was some moments before she could tell her husband, and even then Uncle John had to make it plain that they needn't wait to take Robert away if money was all they lacked, because it would afford him more pleasure than he could express to be the means of restoring him to health.

"You see, Arthur," said he solemnly, "I have not many years to live. When I go I hope to have at least one tear of gratitude to my credit on the books of the recording angel."

If Arthur understood, he gave no sign, though he blushed and said he had misjudged him, and was never so happy as when he could acknowledge his error.

The dinner? They could not possibly, they three, do more than make a mere feint at mastering the mighty turkey. But there it was, rich, brown and juicy as ever graced a table, and it was a good sign that Robert himself asked to be lifted up to have a view of it, which act was done ever so tenderly by John Storkins. But before fork or knife touched it, Uncle John said he must say a word. He had been, he said, a skeptic in religion. He was not sure that his doubts had had any deeper root than his own selfishness. Very likely they had not. Certainly, since he had been led to see the narrowness of his own life, the idea of a God who cares for all had become singularly bright and clear. Therefore he felt that the present time was most auspicious to express his love and gratitude as well as his determination to obey and serve Him. "Which," said he, "I am persuaded can be done in no better way than through acts of mercy and helpfulness to his children."

John Storkins never had been a reader of many books; but if he had read all that the world contains, it may be doubted whether he would have stumbled upon any sounder religious philosophy than this.

The Quiet Hour

Suddenly.

No time for a last farewell,

No time for the shock of fear,

Scarcely a moment's halt on the shore,

With the guide and the boatman near—

Dear, how surprised you were to go,

With nothing to suffer, little to know.

Only a moment of dark,

A dream of the fleeting night,

And then the beautiful break of day

And the quiet peace of the light,

And you found yourself, where you longed to stand,

In the calm repose of the Fatherland.

Did they know you were coming—they

Who had won in the race for home?

Had they heard that the Lord had sent

The message for you to come?

Perhaps to the friends whom you loved was given

The joy to make you at home in heaven.

But I know that you would not wait

So near to the King of Grace

Until you had gained your heart's desire—

To look on your Savior's face.

Ah, victor! whose triumphs were nobly won!

There was no delay in his kind "Well done!"

You had learned your lessons in pain,

There was nothing to fear at last.

Dear, I am very glad for you

That all the trouble is past.

And I would that as swiftly and silently

Some day the summons might come to me.

The Brighter Day Dawning.

Age creeps on; the sight grows dim; the hearing is less acute; the step is less elastic; the hands are less steady. All these are but reminders of the fact that the earthly course is almost run. Life's sun is sinking low, the term of probation is almost ended, and the record is about to be closed and sealed.

But, blessed be the Lord, immortal youth is just as certainly approaching. As surely as the mortal powers decay, just so surely for us does the time for taking on immortality and eternal youth draw near. "I give unto them eternal life, and they shall never perish." As the physical sight grows dim, the spiritual vision becomes more acute. As the shores of time are receding in the gloaming of the night of death, the enduring hills of a blissful eternity are perceived, clearer and clearer by the eye of faith, just out yonder across the Jordan of death, and there is seen standing the glorified Conqueror of death and the grave, with the prints of the nails in his outstretched hands, and the unfading crown of glory adorning his brow, ready to welcome home the way-worn traveler.

Glorious prospect! The soldier of many battles about to be crowned by his captain. The weary marches, the hardships of the campaign, the conflicts, the sorrows and tears incident to life on earth all left behind, and immortal youth and eternal glory inherited forever! This, this is the prospect of the veteran Christian as the infirmities of age are gradually loosening his hold upon the earth-life.—Religious Telescope.

"Beloved, now are we children of God, and it is not yet made manifest what we shall be. We know that if he shall be manifested, we shall be like him; for we shall see him even as he is." And everyone that hath this hope set on him, purifieth himself, even as he is pure."—John.

Father, keep us, comfort us, strengthen us for service and for suffering, lead us all the way, until we get home, where we shall greet our loved ones and rejoice in Thy love forever more!

"There go the Ships."

Psalms 104:26.

By Walter G. Menzies.

Missionaries in coming to India must come part if not all of the way in ships. Two years ago on our way to India the words of the sweet singer of Israel brought new lessons to me. Our week's sail on the Atlantic, and three weeks on the Mediterranean, Red Sea, and Indian Ocean served anew to impress lessons from the above words.

The first lesson we gather about a ship is, that it must be built ere it can sail. The foundation must be laid. The framework erected and daily the small plates are riveted on until it becomes a large and safe vessel.

Boys and girls you are builders. You are building a ship that will one day be tested and tried, and that ship is your character. In building your character so that it will stand against the wind and waves out on the sea of life, you must build on Jesus. He alone is a sure foundation. Cling to him. Obey him. Daily rivet on to your character, the plates of righteousness, truth, purity, and love, and your building will be safe.

After a ship is built, then comes the launching. This is a most interesting and anxious time for the shipbuilders. Here comes the first great test. I remember a few years ago of standing on a high wall near to a large river, that I might see a ship launched. Hundreds stood around to witness the scene. As the ship glided slowly down the gangway all stood breathlessly silent, but when it struck the water with a splash, a shout of hurrah went up from the onlookers.

Some day, boys and girls, you will be launched out on the sea of life to take upon yourselves responsibilities. This is an anxious time to your parents, to your pastor and Sunday-school teacher also. With anxious hearts they look toward you. Jesus and the angels of heaven are interested in you. Like Moses, Daniel, and Jesus, you may be tried, but if your faith be strong in God, the victory shall be yours. Happy are those who can say in launching out upon the sea of life, "I will lift up mine eyes to the hills; from whence cometh my help and aid. My safety cometh from the Lord."

After the ship is launched it goes forth to do its mission on the mighty waters of the deep. There are two kinds, sailing vessels and steamships. No doubt some of you have stood by the lakeside or on the seashore and watched with interest the little white-winged boats as they glided along under the influence of the wind. They have no power within, only dependent upon outward circumstances, and like the ship in which Paul was wrecked "are driven by the wind and tossed."

To-day a great number of people in the world are just like sailing vessels. They are greatly dependent upon outside circumstances. Not sure as to where they are going and are carried about by the wind and tossed. The steamship is not like the sailing vessel. It is not dependent upon outward causes, its power is stored up within. The winds and waves may beat upon it but it changes not. Onward it ploughs through the mighty waters of the deep towards its goal. Your mission in life will only be successful as the power of God comes into your life. The church needs young people who are willing to battle against the winds and waves of wrong. We need manly Christians, those who are determined to do right in fare of wrong, those who are willing to be a blessing in face of opposition.

Our eyes and our hopes are placed upon you boys and girls, and we have every reason to place confidence in you.

"Quit you like men be strong."

Look at the ships in a wreck. One of the saddest sights I ever saw was in the Red Sea, the remains of a ship wrecked at sea.

It suggested so many things, the loss of life, the loss of loved ones, the loss of goods, the loss of a valuable

Children, there are dangers out on the sea of life, and one of the saddest sights that comes before our vision is to see the young make shipwreck of their lives. God has placed danger signals along the way for us. If we neglect them our lives will be wrecked.

meet you there and give you blessing. You love good company, in the church you are sure to find it. There are joys in the church for you. Don't neglect it.

Another rock which is very dangerous is "Impure Reading." Many a boy and girl has been led away from the church and from Jesus through little books with impure thoughts and stories. The dear Christian children of India love one book above all others, and one book they read more than all others. It is the Bible. They read it in a different language, but the truths are just the same. They know of its preciousness and drink from its fount.

May you each be able to say daily, "Thy word is a light unto my feet and a lamp unto my path."

A captain is necessary for every ship. We need one, too. Jesus alone is our captain. He knows this world. He has gone before us. No soul under his keeping ever comes to grief. He is willing to guide us. He will direct us along this life's course, keep us from stranding on the dangerous rock. The winds and waves of the tempter have no power against him who has won the victory.

"He will guide us, safely guide us
Where no harm can ere betide us."

Let Jesus have the guiding of your life. Consecrate yourself to him, and a safe journey will be yours through life and a safe arrival on heaven's beautiful shore. May the vessels which have helped so much in carrying the gospel message into heathen lands, continue to bring messengers and light-bearers until the lands that sit in darkness shall be flooded with the knowledge of him who is the light of life.

Rath, India.

A Fern Hunt.

"Mamma, Mamma! Clover has hidden her calf down in the glen, and papa says he will give Fannie and me a dollar if we find it; may we?" shouted ten-year-old Addie Perry, as the two girls rushed into the dining-room, where their mother was cleaning the china closet.

"Have you done your Saturday morning work?" asked Mrs. Perry. "You know you never get back from the glen till supper time, no matter how early you go."

"I've done mine," said Fannie.

"I'm all through but practicing half an hour," said Addie. "Can't that go just once, mamma?"

"How often during the week do you ask that, Addie? Six times?"

"That's so," laughed Fannie, "once every day. Addie," she whispered, "we can't go much before half an hour, anyway, for I looked into the kitchen a little while ago and Helen was just beginning the pies and cookies."

The two laughed gleefully, and Addie turned to her music lesson. Mrs. Perry's eyes twinkled as she caught the word "cookies." The children always took lunch when they went to the glen on Saturday, and part of the fun consisted in getting it out of the pantry so slyly that neither mamma nor sister Helen knew. Many were the schemes for getting them out of the kitchen while the children captured a pie, a turnover, gingerbread or cookies, which seemed nicer on Saturday than other days, and great was the mystery when Helen would say: "Mother, some one has stolen a pie right out of the pantry window. It is lucky I baked one extra. Some of the cookies are gone, too, but we'll have enough I guess."

"I'm going to ask Mabel and Grace to go, too, mamma."

"Very well," replied the mother, "but I want no more bad tempers when you four are together. Somebody was naughty last Saturday. Mrs. Sargent doesn't want her little girls to be quarrelsome any more than I do."

Fannie colored but answered bravely: "It was my fault, mamma, I won't do it again."

"Say so to Mrs. Sargent, then," and Fannie went off rather soberly, through the gap in the hedge to the next house.

In less than an hour four merry little girls set off with well-filled lunch baskets to the glen, a deep ravine back of the two homes, well wooded, with a clear but tiny stream rippling over stones and between mossy banks.

"Where do you suppose Clover can have hidden her calf?" asked Fannie. "She is so big, we will soon find her, and the calf must be near."

"Oh, there she is now!" shouted Addie, "wouldn't it be funny if we earned our dollar right away?"

There was Clover, sure enough, lazily nipping grass close to the stream, and the sun shone through the leaves making patches of shadow on her glossy red sides, but hunt as they might around her, no calf was to be found. Not once did she turn her head to watch them, though they pretended to go in different directions to test her.

"Isn't she queer?" said Grace.

"Let's leave our basket on the 'butter-bowl' by the spring until we hunt down to the big tree," suggested Fannie. So the baskets were put on the smooth round rock, like an inverted butter-bowl, just at the spring, where the water ran all around it, and the branches overhead kept all cool and shady.

This was the favorite lunching place for the four children, and nearly every pleasant Saturday found them here. In the spring they knew just where to find the earliest adder-tongues, violets, Dutchman's breeches and fern fronds. Through all the summer, the birds were watched, and their nests known year after year, and in the autumn the bright leaves and the nuts drew them to their beloved glen.

Up and down the hillside, and on each side of the little stream, they searched faithfully for the hidden calf; behind stumps, in tall bushes, in fern beds, everywhere, except, as Mabel declared, in the trees. Addie even poked with a stick in a deep place in the water to see if it had fallen in.

When they heard the church bell ring for noon, four tired little hunters were glad to sit down around the "table," a flat rock near the "butter-bowl" for their lunch.

"Now let's watch Clover all the time," said Grace, "and if she starts, let's go, too."

"Where is she?" chorused the others.

"There by the big tree," replied Grace, whose back was toward the tree. "She was there when I sat down."

"She's gone!" they cried. "The sly old thing, and the bushes are so thick down there, too!"

"Let's eat, anyway," urged Fannie. "I'm awfully hungry."

Such fun as they had eating the good things they had pilfered out of the pantries, and drinking cold spring water out of cups fashioned from big leaves. One opened at the bottom and emptied itself into Mabel's sleeves before she could get it to her mouth.

At last, the fragments were put on the "bird's table," a flat stone fitted in the crotch of a tree.

"The birds don't get it all," said Grace. "I saw a squirrel there once with a chicken bone in his paws; he looked so funny."

"Now, let's find Clover and that calf," said Addie.

"There's Clover by the big tree," exclaimed Grace. "I told you she was there," and they all laughed.

"Wasn't she smart to give the calf its dinner while we were eating ours?" said Addie.

"Girls, let's carry our baskets, then we can go home by the lower path," suggested Fannie, "that calf must be below the big tree."

So farther down the glen the search was continued. The bushes were thicker here, and the children found several new nests, some with eggs, others holding tiny birdlings, and the afternoon wore away before they knew it.

"I'm going up to my fern bed," announced Fannie, pointing up the hill to a level spot where another spring came from under a rock, and up she climbed.

"Oh," called the girls, "here's Clover coming!"

"Oh," screamed Fannie, "here's the calf!" and sure enough there was the littled red calf lying right in Fannie's fern bed!

As Clover gave a gentle "moo," the calf slid and tumbled and ran down to meet her, and the children patted them both, and named the calf "Fern" on the spot.

They drove Clover and her baby home in triumph, and Mr. Perry gave them a shining silver dollar.

In their room at night, undressing for bed, Fannie said: "Didn't she look sweet on that fern bed?"

"Yes," assented Addie. "Hark, it is raining! I know Clover is glad that Fern is in the stable, and not down in the glen."—Ada P. Buck in the Advance.

Successful Men Who Were not Rich.

We have fallen under a universal witchcraft. A sense of the power and luxury in money, beyond all the wonder-tales, has suddenly come to us. It has turned our fashionable society into a materialism which is no longer ashamed of its poverty of ideals. It is hard and merciless of heart; it is sceptical of unworldly motives, its smartest relish is for the strokes and ruses of the manipulators of finance. In times like these, it is good to remember Agassiz, who refused to lecture at $500 a night because he was too busy to make money; Charles Sumner, who declined to lecture at any price because, he said, as senator all his time belonged to Massachusetts; Spurgeon, who refused to come to America to deliver fifty lectures at $1,000 a night, saying he could do better—he could stay in London and try to save fifty souls; and Emerson, who steadfastly declined to increase his income beyond $1,200 because he wanted his time to think. Such stories of fine haughtiness did not seem quixotic to the young men in college thirty years ago. A generous idealism was abroad, and it was unashamed.—Francis Bellamy in the November Everybody's.

Joseph Parker's Library.

Dr. Joseph Parker was once asked how he managed to draw thousands to his city temple simply to hear him talk. His reply is characteristic:

"You would understand if you read my library."

"Oh, it's good, bad, indifferent, grand and squalid," answered the mighty talker. "It's everything. It's in underground trains and on busses, in aerated tea-shops, smart restaurants, at churches, stations, parties, receptions, meetings, jubilees and sick beds; you find it in prisons and boudoirs. The fact is, you can never get away from it. We call it 'human nature,' for want of a better name. I study it—that's why I call it my library. Most men don't, you see. But that's why I'm listened to."

Fidelity Won.

The story is told of Mr. Stephen Girard, the infidel millionaire, of Philadelphia, that on one Saturday he bade his clerks come the following day and unload a vessel which had just arrived.

One of the clerks, who had strong convictions and the power to act upon them, refused to comply with the demand.

"Well, sir," said Mr. Girard, "if you cannot do as I wish, we can separate."

"I knew that, sir," said the hero. "I also know that I have a widowed mother to care for, but I cannot work on Sunday."

"Very well, sir," said the proprietor, "go to the cashier's desk and he will settle with you."

For three weeks the young man tramped the streets of Philadelphia looking for work. One day a bank president asked Mr. Girard to name a suitable person for cashier for a new bank about to be started. After reflection Mr. Girard named this young man.

"But I thought you discharged him?"

"I did," was the answer, "because he would not work on Sunday, and the man who will lose his situation from principle is the man to whom you can intrust your money."—Ex.

Before and After Taking.

One of the duties of Archbishop Temple is to examine young curates who come to him for license. One day a young curate was asked by the archbishop to read a few verses from the Bible, that the examiner might judge of his fitness for conducting public worship. "Not loud enough," was the criticism of the archbishop when the young man had finished. "Oh, I'm so sorry to hear that, my lord!" replied the curate. "A lady in the church yesterday told me I could be heard most plainly." "Ah! Are you engaged?" suddenly asked Dr. Temple. "Yes, my lord." The archbishop smiled grimly, and said: "Now listen to me, young man. While you are engaged don't believe everything the lady tells you; but," he added with a deep chuckle, "after you are married, believe every word she says."—Current Anecdotes.

(20th qr.); Grace Read, Dermid, Ontario, 2nd); A. Per Lee, Grand Rapids, Mich. (3rd); Melvin Ledden, Osapur, Ill. (10th qr., hurrah for Melvin!) Orville and Effie Pennock, Chetopa, Kan.; Emma Simpson Bland, Grayson, Mo. (I met Emma Simpson on the street the other day—Grayson isn't so very far from my town—and she gave me 30 cents for our Av. S. orphan, without my saying a word to her. I think that's the best thing about our orphan; nobody has been asked to give money for it when they don't feel like it. And yet the money keeps coming in. At my last report, we had $9.15; this makes us $9.45.) Ada Miller (you understand I am still going on with the Honor List), Sprague, Mo. (2nd qr.); Edna Bear (1st and 2nd qrs.), Iberia, Mo.; Nannie D. Chambers, Richmond, Ky. (19th qr. She and Madge Masters are our veterans.)

Harriet Dunn, Malta Bend, Mo.: "I have just got my Av. S. colors, and like them ever so much. I have a new teacher—a lady teacher; and I like lady teachers best." (Yes, you couldn't be any other kind if you wanted to.) "I sit with my cousin Emza on the front seat. Don't tell teacher I wrote this letter instead of working my problems. Yesterday I had to sit in Miss Lewis's chair and read to our class a chapter in geographical South America. But I don't feel so bad about it, because some of the other girls had to do the same." (I know I'd have felt worse if I'd been one of the class having to sit there and listen to it.) "Oh, my! but it makes me feel guilty to look over there and see how many examples Emza has worked! But then, she doesn't have the pleasure of writing to you." (And of course you'll copy off her problems and look like you got them, yourself.) "I don't suppose you approve of writing letters in schooltime, but I've done worse than that, such as eating turnips." (I might say something here, if it wasn't for the mammas and papas who will scan these lines.) "I wonder what Bertha Beesley would do if she should happen to catch one of her pupils eating turnips?" (She might make some turnups.) "We have great fun sometimes, as Emza and I stay for dinner. The large boys play football. We kick it when it comes our way, but know better than to pick it up, for in the scramble they forget all manners and we sometimes get hurt. In painting our house, the little kitten got a daub of paint on her which just spoils her looks because she was nearly snow-white." (Wash her in gasoline.) "You must be very forgetful, for shortly after I said my cat's name was Pitpaw, some one else wrote saying he—I think he was a boy" (he surely was) "had a cat at home that he was going to call Pitpaw. In my last letter I asked how the other Pitpaw was getting along. You said you did not know there were two Pitpaws. I hope you understand, now." (I can't keep the run of all the cats in this society.) "Last Saturday morning, Florence, Emza, mamma, aunt Annie, my brother Ross, and my cousins William and Ralph, started for the hickory grove west of town." (Where were the rest of them?) "Oh! I know you would have split your sides laughing, if you could have seen us." (Glad I didn't see you, then.) "It was rather cold; we girls had on old jackets much too small for us, and Emza and I had sun-bonnets. The boys had overalls, and to cap the climax, we had the oldest horses and rickiest buggy in Saline county. One horse was 18, the other 21. We got warmed up when we reached the woods, bumping over stumps and down into ruts. The nuts were few and far between. The folks went out of sight of the buggy, and we girls were sent back to watch it. We were tired of picking nuts, anyway, so we went down to the creek to have some fun." (And they had it; but I will have to omit that part, as some people might not understand it, having forgotten when they used to play church with plenty of water near at hand.) "Then the folks came and we got home in time to eat our share of grandma's pumpkin pie."

Madge Masters, Ozark, Ark.: "Our branch of the Av. S. sends $3.10 to help support our Av. S. orphan. I think we all ought to take a great interest in it. Yes, we caught our 'possum, and it was good, too. One night we caught 2, and another night 4. The last time we went we got so cold while waiting for the dogs to tree a 'possum we had to build a fire, and such fun as we had sitting around it!" (And did you think of me?) "We are going again next Monday night, and you had better come down and eat dinner with us Tuesday, for we will be sure to have 'possum and sweet potatoes. Well, I must close now, and rescue my cats from the boys." (Ought I to know their names? If so, I'm ashamed to own that I don't. This postal order is the largest we have yet received, and brings the Av. S. Orphan Fund up to $12.55; enough to support an orphan an entire year in India; I think last week I said Japan—did I? now of our orphan. But I think it would be much nicer to support an orphan in this country, and I hope enough money will be raised for that purpose. If it isn't—so much the better for India!

Florence, Olive and Glenn Leavitt, Frankfort, S. D.: "We inclose $1.00 to help support the Advance Society Orphan." (In the same mail came an envelope from Roubaix, S. D., containing 50 cents with only these words on the card: "Fifty cents for the orphan." Which makes us $14.05—I hope somebody will tell me if I add up wrong. Was that right, Emza? I have another dollar to report, the very first one given for our orphan. I held back its announcement, thinking the money would come in so slow I'd need it later on to report, as a means of encouraging the faithful. But responses are so prompt, I'll hold it back no longer. Of course you guess who gave this first dollar—the boy and girl who have always encouraged me in every good work I ever undertook, and who, just as soon as they read about the Orphan in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST said, "We'll give a dollar!" even before I gave one myself. Now, if you don't know that that boy and girl are my papa and mamma, you don't know as much about dear papas and mammas as I do; which makes us $15.55.)

Elyria, O.: "I enjoy 'With the Children' very much. You will find enclosed $1.00 for the Orphan. If enough money is not raised, send this to the Foreign Society." (But the Foreign Society needn't be whetting their teeth for it, yet!) "Please do not publish my name." (Total, $16.05. I have more money to report next week, and wish I had space here to give it, and other letters, but time's up and we must adjourn our meeting. Are you praying that we may have enough to support our Orphan? I believe you are by the way the money comes in. May heaven bless you all, as you bless others.)

What We Stand For.

For the Christ of Galilee,
For the truth which makes men free,
For the bond of unity
Which makes God's children one.

For the love which shines in deeds,
For the life which this world needs,
For the church whose triumph speeds
The prayer: "Thy will be done."

For the right against the wrong,
For the weak against the strong,
For the poor who've waited long
For the brighter age to be.

For the faith against tradition,
For the truth 'gainst superstition,
For the hope whose glad fruition
Our waiting eyes shall see.

For the city God is rearing,
For the New Earth now appearing,
For the heaven above us clearing
And the song of victory.

There is a right way and a wrong way to wash flannel outing garments. Try this—the right way:

Cut some Ivory Soap into shavings and dissolve; add this to the water and wash quickly by repeatedly immersing in the suds and drawing through the hands. The water for both washing and rinsing should be warm, never hot or cold.

Wring, stretch into shape and hang to dry in a place where there is no exposure to wind, sun, too hot or too cold air. Iron before they are entirely dry.

Shrinking is caused by the interlacing of the wool fibers, that have small, sawlike teeth which catch on each other. In washing, therefore, it is desirable to keep the material well stretched out to prevent the fiber from becoming matted. A washboard should not be used, nor should the soap be rubbed on. Pure soap and an even temperature are essential.

THANKSGIVING DAY AT GRANDPA'S

Nixon Waterman.

Thanksgiving Day at grandpa's is a round of rare delight!

Beneath the old, familiar roof the children all unite,

And mid the scenes of other days, where hearts would linger long,

Their lives are strangely sweetened by a sorrow and a song.

The past that in its strength and stress was touched with grief and pain,

In retrospection comes as does the sunshine after rain;

Its cares are gone and now it lives its sweetness to disclose,

Like some old book whose leaves enfold the petals of a rose.

The grandsire's quavering words of grace are made more sweet and fair

Because a baby's lilting laugh runs rippling through the prayer:

And grandma's silvered locks seem less of wintry frost to hold

When nestling close against them lies a grandchild's wealth of gold.

Beneath the smiling surface of the merriment and mirth

There flows the prayerful current of a deeper, grander worth,—

A faith that in our gracious gifts of bounteous good can see

The great enfolding arms of love through all the years to be.

Current Events

The events of the past week in Panama have confirmed the right of the isthmian rebellion to be known as a bloodless revolution. The Colombian government succeeded in landing five hundred soldiers at Colon, but transportation for them on the railway to Panama was refused, and their operations in Colon were checked by a squad of United States marines from the "Nashville." Thus ended Colombia's attempt to win back the seceding province by force. There is still large talk of sending to the isthmus an army of 100,000 men to annihilate utterly the new Republic, but the new Republic refuses to be frightened. It feels justified in believing that the threats will be larger than the army. Meanwhile a conciliation commission from Colombia, headed by General Reyes, has been negotiating with Panama for a peaceful settlement. It is said that through this commission Colombia offers to reconsider and ratify the canal treaty and to make other important concessions if Panama would acknowledge the sovereignty of the Bogota government. The proposition, however, was not seriously entertained. The provinces of Cauca and Antioquia are reported to have revolted from Colombia, and it is predicted that they will join Panama. The former of these provinces is on the Pacific Coast and is the largest in Colombia, both in area and in population. The latter is an inland province, and is the richest of all in mineral wealth.

Senor Buneau-Varilla, the representative of Panama, whose reception by Secretary Hay and the President marked the formal recognition of the new republic, came to Washington authorized to negotiate a canal treaty. No time was lost in beginning that work and, as Panama knew exactly what it was willing to grant and Secretary Hay knew precisely what our government wanted, the negotiations took very little time. Within a week after the reception of the new Minister, the canal treaty was drawn up and signed by both parties. Its terms are slightly more favorable to the United States than those of the treaty which Colombia rejected, but not enough so to justify a charge that we have taken advantage of Panama's weakness. The treaty provides that the United States will maintain the independence of the Republic of Panama; that a strip of territory five miles wide on each side of the canal shall be ceded to the United States; that the United States shall exercise all the functions of sovereignty within this territory; and that the United States shall pay to the government of Panama $10,000,000 in gold upon the exchange of ratifications, and the further sum of $250,000 annually, beginning nine years after date. It is understood that no effort will be made to secure the ratification of this treaty by the Senate until it has been fully ratified by the government of Panama.

The example of our government in formally recognizing the new republic as a member of the family of nations, has been followed by France, whose interests are obviously in the direction of anything which will make possible the building of the canal over the Panama route. The other European governments are somewhat slower in taking action, but there is no reason to believe that they will fail to recognize the new government as soon as its organization has been completed. It was inevitable that the extraordinarily prompt action of President Roosevelt in recognizing the Republic of Panama should be eagerly seized upon by some as offering a political issue. There is a short crop of serviceable issues this season anyway, and there are some very obvious things that can be said in criticism of the latest act of the President. But if the attitude of leading newspapers indicates the direction of public opinion—and it does—it will be hard to make a party issue out of the Panama case. A very great majority of the leading papers have approved the President's action. This is true, not only of the Republican organs, but of the independent and Democratic papers. Some of the strong anti-imperialist papers express entire sympathy with our attitude toward Panama. Some of the most influential of them, however, including the Springfield Republican, the New York Evening Post, the New York Times and the Philadelphia Ledger, see in it "a policy of piracy and spoliation." Strong Democratic papers like the Atlanta Constitution, the New Orleans Times-Democrat and the St. Louis Republic heartily endorse the President's action. Some of the southern papers are taking great delight in the alleged vindication of the principle of secession, as embodied in the Panama incident and approved by a Republican administration. It would be untrue to say that there is no serious opposition, but with such Democratic organs on the President's side, the opposition can scarcely arrange itself on partisan lines or crystallize into a political issue.

The Chicago street car strike is still far from settled, but the issues are narrowing down. The company offers to arbitrate the scale of wages, and the strikers are willing either to do this or to continue the present scale. They have some fear that arbitration will result in a reduction. The union has abandoned its demand for the "closed shop," i. e., the employment of only union men, and the company is willing to agree that there shall be no discrimination against members of the union. An approach is being made to an agreement upon a time schedule, an important point which involves some of the most serious grievances of the strikers. The company agrees to receive the officers of the union as spokesmen for the employees with regard to future grievances, but insists that there shall be no cessation of work pending the settlement of these grievances by a board of arbitration. Practical agreement has been reached on this point. The chief point of difficulty now relates to the retention of the men who have been employed by the company during the strike, and the arbitration of the grievances of the allied unions in the city railway system, which struck in sympathy with the trainmen.

The strike of the miners at Cripple Creek is becoming more and more serious. A dynamite explosion in the Vindicator mine on Saturday, resulting in the death of two men, has greatly increased the excitement. It is charged, though not yet proved, that the explosion was caused by an infernal machine placed by strikers. State militia are already on the ground under the command of General Bell, and on Monday of this week General Bates arrived on the scene, who will determine whether federal troops are needed to protect life and property.—The coal strike in northern Colorado has been in progress three weeks and virtually everything that the strikers demanded has been conceded. President John Mitchell has been urging them to return to work, but the strike is still maintained on the ground that they wish to make the tie-up throughout Colorado as complete as possible, so that the miners in the southern part of the state may be successful in their strike. The situation is considered very serious, and disorder may break out at any time in any one of a dozen places.—The American Federation of Labor in session at Boston last week declared unanimously in favor of strictly union shops in government enterprises, as well as in private concerns. A resolution was also adopted petitioning the President to take up again the evidence against Miller, who was re-instated after being removed from the government printing office because of non-membership in the union. The request for the removal of Miller is based on charges of unfitness, and not ostensibly upon his relation to the union.—An employers' union was organized last week in St. Louis on similar lines to those recently formed in Chicago, Kansas City, Denver and many smaller cities. It is a semi-secret organization, which expresses its approval of the principle of organized labor, but protests against the use of the boycott and of such violent and intimidating measures as often make it impossible "for the business man to conduct his business without dictation from the walking delegate."

The foot-ball season is over, thank heaven! Not that there is anything necessarily wrong with foot-ball, but during the fall months [which constitute the period of its practice and popularity, it assumes among the events of the day a fictitious importance not at all commensurate with the interests involved. There are a great many criticisms against foot-ball with which we could never find ourselves quite in sympathy. It is a rough game, but life itself is rough game, for that matter, and the chosen sport of strong and healthy young men is sure to have more or less roughness about it as an outlet for their physical energies. If it is only played fairly and honestly—what the college men and coaches call "clean foot-ball"—its roughness is not essentially barbaric, and it does not deserve all the strictures that are made upon it. Timid and delicate maiden ladies will continue to hold up their hands in horror at the idea of a scrimmage, however the rules may be modified for the prevention of inordinate roughness, but so long as red blood bounds through the arteries of young men, and the love of a contest thrills their hearts, so long will there be a place for games which are, in some sense, battles.

But the worst thing about foot-ball is not its roughness, but the exaggerated importance of it in the minds of a large section of the public, especially the college public. Metropolitan dailies devote long columns to minute descriptions of the physical condition of this or that foot-ball star, and the probable outcome of the great games is prognosticated as carefully and seriously as the issue of a presidential election. To be sure, this does the public no great harm, for there is a large section of the public which always feels the necessity of filling its mind with some inconsequential matter, and it might as well be foot-ball as anything else. But the effect of this inordinate over-emphasis upon athletics is little short of disastrous to the college. The true values of things are lost sight of, the perspective of life is distorted and things which should appear large dwindle into insignificance in comparison with the one absorbing theme—foot-ball.

It is perhaps a typical American trait that we take our recreations so seriously that we soon need recreation from them as much as from our business. But it seems a pity that the good old game of foot-ball has so completely ceased to be a matter of play. It is a life work for the participants (during the season at least), and a thrilling spectacle for the spectators. Where does the element of play come in? It is reported that the Yale foot-ball team this year, after paying all expenses—which are as high as they can be made by the combined ingenuity of everyone concerned—has a net balance of over $50,000 as its share of the gate receipts for the season's games. This is not play; this is business. Perhaps President Harper of Chicago was right in his recent commendation that there ought to be free admission to all college athletic events. But something beyond this is needed to correct the over-emphasis on athletics which characterizes the colleges and the college public to-day.

A fight is being made against the ratification by the Senate of General Wood's appointment as Major-General. Mr. Rathbone, who came into unenviable prominence in connection with certain scandals in Cuba and was defended by Senator Hanna, is working up the case against General Wood and has presented specific charges against his administration in Cuba.

The revolutionary movement in San Domingo is, according to the most credible of the somewhat conflicting reports, attaining a large measure of success. The whole country, with the exception of the capital city, is apparently in the hands of the rebels, and the capital has been bombarded by them, though without much result. The United States cruiser "Baltimore" is protecting American interests there and has found it necessary to land marines.

There is food for reflection in the recently published story of a man who has agreed to sell one of his ears for $5,000. A surgeon will attempt to graft the amputated member upon the head of a wealthy miner who lost an ear in a fight with a grizzly. We are not in the habit of considering our bodily organs as cash assets, but if an inventory is taken with $5,000 per ear as a basis of valuation, the poorest of us will find that he has a good deal of uncounted wealth to be thankful for.

The CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST is strictly non-partisan in politics, but we have never found it either possible or desirable to keep aloof on that account from the whole field of politics. Most of our readers understand this. Occasionally one does not. A friend who has been traveling through a certain state writes: "Brother—claims to have fallen out with the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for political reasons. At—I found a brother who said the same thing. But the funny thing was that they are on the opposite sides. Well, people will be people." If they only would! But some of them will be geese.

The Cuban reciprocity bill was passed by the House of Representatives last Thursday by a vote of 335 to 21. The division was not upon party lines, and the very small opposition vote was almost evenly divided between the two parties. It is considered improbable that the measure will come to a vote in the Senate before the adjournment of the special session. It will be remembered that at the last session the Senate ratified a Cuban reciprocity treaty, but it was deemed best, in order to avoid a contest over the constitutionality of the measure, since it involved the question of revenue, to have a similar bill passed by both houses of Congress. Now it is the House that is willing and the Senate that is reluctant to act in favor of reciprocity.

The World's Fair and the Disciples of Christ.

It was only just prior to our national convention in Detroit that we learned, definitely and officially, that no provision had been made by the authorities of the Louisiana Purchase Exposition for any exhibit by any of the religious bodies of the country. Early in the year a committee had been appointed by our Evangelical Alliance in this city to confer with the proper authorities of the World's Fair as to a suitable building to be used by the various religious bodies of the country. We had learned that the project of having a separate building for such purpose had failed, but we never understood the facts in the case until we learned them over the telephone from the chairman of the committee on the evening before starting to Detroit. It seems that the Directors of the Exposition had agreed to erect a building for religious purposes at a cost of $100,000, provided the various denominations using it would provide for its maintenance at an estimated cost of $20,000. The committee stood out, we learned, for the additional $20,000 which the Directors declined to grant, and the committee allowed the whole matter to fall through. By a previous interview with the chief of the department of exhibits and others, we learned that no space had been set apart in any of the buildings for the use of the different religious bodies, these officials explaining that they supposed that the whole matter of making any sort of religious exhibit had been dropped.

When these facts came into possession of the chairman of the committee, which had been appointed to report at Detroit on an exhibit at the World's Fair, he determined to recommend that the Disciples of Christ refuse to allow this great opportunity to go by default because the committee from the Evangelical Alliance of St. Louis had failed to secure all it asked for, but that we proceed to secure a location on the World's Fair grounds, and erect a suitable building of our own in which to make an exhibit of our principles and progress, and to serve as a center and rallying point for our people visiting the World's Fair during the seven months of its existence. This recommendation was unanimously adopted by the convention at Detroit, and a committee appointed to carry it into effect. An appeal was also made for funds for the erection of a suitable building and for such an exhibit as would present to our visitors from all the world, at least a bird's eye view of the origin of our movement, its principles and its progress, along educational, missionary, benevolent and other lines of activity, by means of tracts, pamphlets, books, charts, pictures, etc. The response to this appeal indicated a deep interest on the part of the brotherhood in this enterprise, and over $1,500 was subscribed on the spot, as has been reported in our columns. It has been estimated that about $5,000 will be needed to erect a suitable building, prepare a proper exhibit, and provide for the care of same during the fair.

The committee, after conference, has decided to erect a building after the unique style of Alexander Campbell's octagonal study at Bethany, in enlarged form. It has been thought that an octagonal building, with each of its octagonal faces 30 feet broad, making a circumference of 240 feet with a dome above, perhaps the size of the original study, and lighted from above, would afford ample room for the purposes mentioned. This can be built of lumber, planed on both sides, and painted to harmonize with the other buildings on the ground. As announced last week, the committee has secured a most desirable location, on an eminence near the Art Building, overlooking the main buildings, and on one of the great thoroughfares leading from the Government Building to the Art Building. It is also the second door from General Grant's log cabin, which will be an attractive feature of the fair.

It can be readily seen, we hope, that a unique building of the character mentioned, in the size and finish indicated, filled with the best historical treasures we have, and with specimens of the best literature we have produced, or may produce especially for that purpose, with pictures of our colleges and of their faculties, some of our principal church buildings, and of historic characters, with maps illustrating our progress in this country and our missionary work in foreign lands, with tracts in various languages of earth to be circulated free among foreign visitors, as well as in English, offers one of the finest opportunities in our history for disseminating a knowledge of the gospel and of our plea for the restoration of New Testament Christianity. Our example, it is hoped, may stimulate others to make similar exhibits, but if not, our effort in that direction will be the more conspicuous by reason of its uniqueness. So far as we know, we are the only religious body now planning for such an exhibit.

The committee desires the co-operation of all our papers, our ministers, our business men of public spirit, our missionary societies, our publishing houses, our colleges and every other form of organized activity among us. There is no time to lose in perfecting plans for this exhibit, and in securing funds for the erection of a suitable building. We trust our ministers will interest themselves in asking people of means in their congregation to contribute to this work, and report names to this office, or to the treasurer of the committee, J. H. Allen, 104 S. Main St., St. Louis. Let us appreciate the magnitude of this opportunity and make the wisest use of it, if we would commend ourselves to the approval of Him who said that "The children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light." Let us use the same enterprise for the advancement of the kingdom of God, that men of the world are using for the promotion of science, of education and of material interests.

A Key-Note for the Coming Year.

It is the time of year when editors of religious journals are wont to think seriously concerning the contents of their papers for the coming year. The question which every conscientious editor asks himself is, how he may best serve the interests of his readers and of the kingdom of God. Much, of course, will have to be determined through the progress of the year, as events arise and questions present themselves, but there are certain general lines which may be determined by consideration of the general conditions and needs of the religious world, and particularly of that part of the religious world which the paper is most likely to influence.

As we have been thinking of the condition and needs of the times, and of our religious movement which is making such rapid, numerical progress, it has seemed to us that the one word, education, expresses as fully as any other the line of work which the religious press should pursue. While this has been a prominent aim of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST for many years, there are reasons why it should have special emphasis during the coming year. Evangelization, which has always been a marked feature of our work, has received a fresh impetus of late, as is manifested in the organization of an Evangelistic Bureau with a view to more general and systematic efforts in this direction. We hope to give much attention to that subject. Unless education keep pace with evangelism, there is bound to be a lack of coherency and efficiency in our local congregations, and of articulation between the churches in co-operative work. Underlying all effective organization is the spiritual development and power of the individual members which make up such organization.

For this educational work, so necessary to the fulfillment of the mission of the church, there are three principal agencies—the pulpit, the college and the press. Of course, the educational influence of the home lies back of all these, and is initial and formative in its character. We perhaps might better have said church, instead of pulpit, thereby including the entire educational influence of the local congregation. The college has to do mainly with the preparation of teachers, the number of its graduates being so small a part of the entire population. When all these agencies have done their utmost, there remains much for the religious press to accomplish in the way of instruction in righteousness, which cannot be accomplished so well by any other agency.

The second reason for the timeliness of any emphasis now upon education, in the wider ranges of meaning which we attach to that word, is the fact of the great World's Fair to be held in the city of St. Louis during the coming year, to which the eyes of the world are now turned. The key-note of that exposition of the world's progress in civilization is to be education. It is intended to furnish higher ideals in every department of human industry: in art, in pedagogy, in science, in invention, and in the co-ordination of all these departments of activity and of human thought in a vast unity working for the progress of mankind. Such an exposition is bound to influence, in a large measure, the lines of thought men will pursue the coming year.

It would seem to be in harmony with this great phenomenon of history that the religious press should seek to give instruction on the questions of chief interest to mankind. In the forthcoming volume of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST the idea of education will be prominent—education as relates to the welfare of our colleges and other educational agencies; education as relates to Christian truth and Christian life; education as relates to our Christian obligations, both as citizens of the kingdom of God and as citizens of a government "of the people, for the people and by the people." There is a wide range of instruction open here, and we shall hope to make the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST one of the educational forces of the times, working for the inauguration of a higher type of Christian civilization. We shall utilize the World's Fair in carrying forward this work of education, as far as possible, and try to keep our readers in touch with the great lines of interest which shall center there.

In such a work as that which we have out-lined, we invite and expect the co-operation of the great brotherhood of Christian reformers, which the paper represents, and above all we shall seek and expect the divine blessing and guidance, that the paper may prove a source of blessing to the homes, to the churches, and to the kingdom of God.

The Central Christian Advocate says: "Of course it is dangerous to read that oldest and noblest of literatures, the Holy Bible, in our educational institutions. But trained professors are hired to teach 'The Midsummer Night's Dream.'" That illustrates the absurd position to which we have come in our public school system—thanks to infidelity, Roman Catholicism and sectarianism. Some day we will learn better and act differently in reference to this matter.

Citizenship vs. Partisanship.

The political pot is beginning to boil early. This is particularly so in Missouri, where we have an exceedingly interesting state of things. "Coming events cast their shadows before," and the shadow of our quadrennial political campaign is already seen lying athwart the movements and speeches of politicians. We would not have the people take less, but more interest in their civic duties. But we would have them, if possible, do it as citizens, and patriots, rather than as blind partisans whose sole aim is party triumph, regardless of what it costs. That is the one trouble with our presidential campaigns—so many people lose their heads, not to say their consciences, and say and do unreasonable things.

What we plead for in the coming campaign is that our readers shall keep sweet and reasonable. We cannot expect this of people in general, but it is not too much to expect of Christian people, and especially do we think we have a right to expect this of readers of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST. They have been drilled in the principles of tolerance and of charity, and have been taught that differences of opinion on political or religious questions are no just cause for alienation and strife. They ought, also, to be sufficiently free from party shackles to view questions from a nonpartisan point of view. This does not mean that they are to have no party alignment, but only that they ought not to allow themselves to be blindfolded by their party leaders.

We can not promise our readers that we will make no mistake in our statements of facts and our moral interpretation of them, for we are fallible, like other people; but what we do promise, is, that we shall deal with all questions of a political nature from a purely independent point of view, not to promote any party ends but the welfare of our common country. This will be all the easier for us to do because the editors of this paper are not partisans. Our critics are about equally divided between the two leading parties.

If ever there was a time in the history of our state and of the nation for voters to look deeper than partisan politics in seeking for the issues of the coming campaign, it is the present. Gigantic frauds have been exposed. A state of political corruption has been uncovered in this city and state, which ought to bring the blush of shame to every honest citizen, regardless of party, for the crimes have been regardless of party. If we do not misunderstand the plain, honest people of Missouri, they are tired of machine rule, disgusted with official dishonesty and venality, and are determined to purify the political atmosphere of the state. In this they have our hearty sympathy and support. See resolution elsewhere, passed by the Christian Ministers of St. Louis.

Editor's Easy Chair.

This number of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will reach many of its readers on, or before, or about, Thanksgiving Day. The Easy Chair hopes it will enter no home where there is an absence of gratitude to God for all his blessings and mercies. No doubt it will enter some homes where the shadow of some great sorrow rests, or where sickness has prostrated some member of the family, or where misfortune and poverty will put severe limitations on the Thanksgiving banquet. But in all such homes there will still be reasons for thanksgiving. Indeed, the very clouds that shadow them may contain showers of blessings. Mr. Gough used to tell of an afflicted saint whom he visited, 'bed-ridden for years with rheumatism, whose heart was running over with gratitude because she had left her the use of one thumb with which she could turn the leaves of her Bible. Another old lady of whom we have heard, had lost all her teeth but two, and she was very grateful that these were opposite each other so that she could use them in masticating her food! This disposition to make the best out of the worst that may befall us will always find reasons for being thankful.

It is a strange fact that we are often least grateful for the very things which are most vital to our welfare and happiness. There, for instance, are God's free air and sunshine, and his great, glad, out-of-doors that we take as a matter of course, and seldom thank God for them. The same is true of our health, which we seldom appreciate until we get sick. Then there are our home relationships, out of which comes nearly all of the real unselfish, disinterested love which we receive in this world, which we rarely appreciate for their true value until they are sundered by death. How little gratitude many of us feel for that love which makes home the dearest spot on earth! There is the loving, faithful wife and mother, toiling day by day that her husband may fill his place in the world with honor, and that her children may be trained for useful lives, whose unselfish love meets with too little recognition, often, from her husband, and too little gratitude from her children. Brothers and sisters of the home frequently fail to appreciate the sacredness of their relationship until time separates them one from another. It is well to make Thanksgiving Day a time for the strengthening of the family bonds.

But the truly grateful heart overflows and expresses its gratitude to others than those of the family group. It goes out to neighbors and friends, and would extend the radiance of its good cheer to everyone within the circle of its influence. Especially will we, if we be grateful for God's mercies to us, be careful to seek out those who have been less richly blessed than ourselves, in order that we may supply what may be lacking to give them a glad Thanksgiving Day. It is wonderful how much a little token of friendship—a kind act, or even a word of sympathy—may do toward disseminating good cheer and happiness in homes where there have been more shadows than sunshine. It will be remembered how the good Apostle John discounts any love which we may profess for God, whom we have not seen, which fails to express itself in kindly deeds toward our brother whom we have seen. We are coming more and more to understand that we cannot serve God in any way more acceptably than by ministering to the needs of humanity. We are learning, too, that the highest happiness which we may enjoy on earth comes, not in ministering to ourselves, but in ministering to others, and especially to the poor and the needy. This is one of the lessons Thanksgiving Day and Christmas are continually teaching us, and one which we cannot too well learn, or too faithfully practice.

The world is slow to learn that happiness is not an end to be sought for its own sake, but that it is a by-product, resulting from doing good, and from pursuing the highest and noblest aims. Happiness is sure to elude us if we set out to make its possession the chief end of our lives. The person, or group of persons, that starts out to have "a good time," as they call it, generally makes a failure. If we will allow our own experiences to teach us we will find, on looking back over our past lives, that the happiest days, the purest joys, that have come to us, were incidental to some worthy aim, and were perhaps the result of unconscious and unpremeditated acts of kindness. Truly our own poet-laureate has sung:

"Not enjoyment and not sorrow
Is our destined end and way,
But to live that each to-morrow
Find us further than to-day."

The Easy Chair hopes that its readers may so spend Thanksgiving Day that when it shall have passed, the morrow will find them further on toward the real goal of life.

Notes and Comments.

Dr. Joseph Luccock, pastor of a Methodist Church in this city, is doing London. In an article in the Central Christian Advocate he says: "I have been a careful student of recent English religious thought for some years. I regard it as the safest, the sanest, the most wholesome religious thought of our times. I prefer to take my German thought filtered through English brains." That is, no doubt, the safer course for those who have no filter of their own, but we have not set down Dr. Luccock in that class. Perhaps, however, he refers to the translation from the German into the English language. If so, that is a filtration which most of us would find convenient.

This brief extract from the President's Thanksgiving proclamation manifests something of that spirit which characterized the first official proclamation on this subject. It is a sermon in itself.

Therefore, in thanking God for the mercies extended to us in the past, we beseech Him that He may not withhold them in the future, and that our hearts may be roused to war steadfastly for good and against all the forces of evil, public and private. We pray for strength and light, so that in the coming years we may with cleanliness, fearlessness and wisdom, do our allotted work on the earth in such manner as to show that we are not altogether unworthy of the blessings we have received.

Henry Ward Beecher had a very striking way of stating truths, and this is the way he expressed his opinion of the doctrine of succession:

"Though you have a straight line of apostolic successors, if your work is poor you are not in the line of succession; and, if your church does not make full-grown men, it is not. I do not care anything about the line of succession of my grapes, if my vineyard brings forth better wine than your vineyard does. You may say that yours came from those that Noah planted; but they are not so good as mine after all. 'For by their fruit ye shall know them.' And the test of all churches, as of all orthodoxies, and all doctrines, and all usages, and all governments, is this: what is their effect upon the generations of men?"

Dr. Alexander MacLaren, of Manchester, England, recognized as one of England's leading preachers, in a letter to Dr. Theodore Cuyler, of Brooklyn, says:

"We are greatly secularized in this country, and need the winnowing fan in all our churches. I fear it is not much better with you. Many a time I am ready to thank God, when I see the deadness in the churches and the awful problems to be faced, that I am nearer the end than the beginning of my course."

We can sympathize with Dr. MacLaren in his lament over the prevailing worldliness in the churches, but not in his rejoicing that he is soon to be out of the conflict. We confess, that, as we look forward to the problems to be faced in the twentieth century, we can but regret that we are not nearer the beginning than the end of our course. We would like to be in the fray.

We call attention to the article elsewhere from Bro. G. L. Wharton on the Bible college enterprise in India. It is a matter of experience, confirmed by all religious bodies doing mission work in foreign countries, that our native helpers should be trained for their work in their own fields, in order that they may be better adapted to the needs and conditions of such fields. This is, therefore, an essential feature of our foreign mission work, for we must rely, in the main, on native preachers to do the larger part of the work, under the supervision of those whom we send from this country. This enterprise will cost, it is estimated, $25,000, $7,000 of which has already been secured. It will be remembered that General Drake started this work with a contribution of $5,000. Since then $2,000 additional has been secured, leaving $18,000 still to be raised. We bespeak for this Bible Collège in India, the generous support of the friends of missions throughout the country.

Anent the "Letters of a Chinese Official," which give us such a glowing account of China's civilization under the influence of Confucianism in contrast with the barbaric civilization of the occident, we publish below these statements from an article by Bishop Charles H. Fowler, published in the Central Christian Advocate:

"Li Hung Chang gave safe conduct and assurances to the seven leading captive generals of the Tai Ping Rebellion to dine with him on his boat, and the next morning their heads were knocking about in the bay.

"I saw up in the hills, along the Yangtse, the castle of a great viceroy, who had cut off within threescore of ten thousand heads, and I saw some of the heads hung out over the street in iron baskets like ancient torchlights. This viceroy was praying to his gods to spare him till he rounded up the full ten thousand. Yet he would quote from Mencius and other ancient classics beautiful sentiments about the 'sacredness of human life.'"

When an oriental romancer wishes to conceal the moral rottenness of his own country, he doesn't mention such unpleasant facts as those given above. The Chinese official tells us a great deal of truth about our western civilization, but very little concerning the real condition of China.

The Commoner, Mr. Bryan's paper, says:

"The time is ripe for the conscience campaign. Will you enlist? Can you be counted on, not for a year, but until our nation is redeemed from plutocracy and made 'a government of the people, by the people, for the people?'"

Honest men may differ with Mr. Bryan on some of his financial or other theories, but we do not see how any honest man can take exception to the idea of having a "Conscience Campaign." That is precisely what this country needs in the coming and all subsequent elections. We give it our hearty endorsement. Let every man vote conscientiously, that is, in harmony with his honest convictions. It does not follow, of course, that they will all vote the same ticket, for men honestly differ; but it would follow that there would be no buying or selling votes, no betting on results, no ballot-box stuffing, no repeating, no false counting, no surrendering of one's independence to the crack of a party lash, no stultifying of one's moral judgment by voting for a corrupt man because he is on the "regular ticket." By all means let us have a "conscience campaign."

Religion in the Home

[With the view of eliciting information on certain practical phases of the subject above mentioned, we have asked a number of brethren to answer the following questions:

1. Should the worship and the religious instruction be blended, or would it be better, in addition to such explanation of Bible passages as may be given in connection with the daily worship, to have a stated time for Bible instruction, say once a week?

2. What method or methods of worship or instruction would you recommend as best adapted to the average family, and especially to such families as have not been accustomed to have any religious exercises?

3. What does your experience and observation teach as to the best time for family worship?—EDITOR.]

1. Where practical, it would be better that the instruction should be made a part of the daily family worship, the household having some hour during the day given to waiting upon the Lord in these ways. But in many homes this might be impossible, owing to duties of certain members of the family, which require the worship to be brief. In such event, an hour on Lord's day afternoon might well be used in careful study of the Word of God, and the holy day be thus made more sacred and helpful.

2. Let there be variety in methods of worship and study, and to this end let the parents confer with each other, and make the daily worship a real spiritual exercise, and not merely formal. Scripture reading, hymn and prayer might all find a place therein.

3. The best time for family worship is when all the family can be together, and when there is leisure from pressing duties and pleasures. In some cases this will be in the evening, in others in the morning. If no other time can be found, let brief worship be a feature of the morning meal or the evening meal, when a few minutes at least can be given to prayer and Scripture reading. We need a revival of family worship and Bible study in our homes, above everything else.

W. F. RICHARDSON.

Kansas City, Mo.

1. It appears to me that it would be wise not to attempt to blend worship and religious instruction. Let the reading of the Scriptures proceed, with only such explanatory remarks as may be necessary to make the meaning clear to all. In addition to family worship, it would be well if on Sunday afternoon, or at some other stated time in the week, religious instruction could be given. The difficulty in the way of giving instruction on Sunday afternoon is that in many homes Sunday is the busiest day in the week. The numerous services, and the necessary preparation for them, take up almost the entire day. If there were fewer public services and more family instruction, the results might be more satisfactory.

2. Any family can read a selection of Scripture, or the different members can each recite a verse. If no one is accustomed to pray in public, a beginning might be made by repeating the Lord's Prayer in concert. Or the prayers found in some devotional book, like "Alone with God," might be used. After a little the head of the family or some member might lead in prayer. In the Christian Endeavor Societies so many have been taught to pray in public that it should not be difficult to find someone in almost every Christian home who can offer audible prayer.

3. In most homes of which I have knowledge, the best time for family worship is in the morning. Either before breakfast or after, a convenient season can be found.

Cincinnati, O. A. McLEAN.

1. The three things in the way of religious worship and instruction in the home are (a) disinclination, (b) time, (c) ability. If there were inclination the other obstacles would largely vanish. As a practical thing, I should judge it would be best to combine instruction with worship. It adds an element of interest and saves time. Otherwise you have two things instead of one, and there is always a problem of time in these matters with many families.

2. A book of devotions, with Scripture selections prepared—and even prayers to be read if they prefer. A great deal is lost out of family worship where singing is omitted as it generally is, sometimes from necessity, of course. I was in a family once where two or three stanzas of a hymn were always sung. It seemed very sweet and appropriate, and added a completeness to the worship which it otherwise lacks.

3. I think the best time for family worship is in the morning hours, just before breakfast.

ALLAN B. PHILPUTT.

Indianapolis, Ind.

1. With small children, I find it difficult to maintain anything but the briefest forms of worship. As the children grow older, I am inclined to think that the element of regular daily instruction should be introduced.

2. I am convinced that a small manual for use in family worship, which should contain simple suggestions about the development of the worshipful spirit, indicate desirable times for worship, refer to Scripture lessons which could be followed by the calendar and present short, beautiful prayers to be read by some member of the family, indicating that in closing all join in repeating the Lord's Prayer, is very much needed.

3. For families that breakfast together, the morning hour is by far the most desirable. Others will find difficulty in finding any hour in which the whole family can assemble for worship.

CARLOS C. ROWLISON.

Kenton, O.

1. Blend the religious instruction and worship. Let the instruction be informal. If the father and mother are full of knowledge and enthusiasm, this knowledge can be imparted and the religious nature developed around the breakfast table in a way that will be interesting and pleasant to the young.

2. I would have the worship at the breakfast table. Let the sentence thanksgiving be enlarged until it shall become a brief prayer as well as thanksgiving in prayer for guidance and help during the day. Each member of the family might be encouraged to recite or read a verse or paragraph before the prayer and thanksgiving. The reading should be devotional in character.

3. In these days of the strenuous life the morning hour is, I think, usually the best time for the family devotions.

B. B. TYLER.

Denver, Colo.

It is devoutly to be hoped that the thought embodied in your latest editorial on the subject, "Religion in the Home," may find practical realization in the rearing of many family altars, and in reviving others, among our brotherhood. Your proposed "Small Manual of Family Devotions" would no doubt go far towards this consummation in a large number of homes. For those homes, however, that may not supply themselves with such manual, but where the Sunday-school lesson is regularly followed by more or less of the members, I have a suggestion. It is that for the Scripture selection in the family worship the list of "Daily Bible Readings," commonly printed in connection with the lesson, be used. This list of "Daily Readings" might well be included in the Sunday-school lesson exposition given in our church papers—as well as in the Sunday-school papers and quarterlies.

W. P. KEELER.

Chicago, Ill.

1. In most families only such explanations of Scripture can be expected as may accompany the reading and prayer day by day. Not many can find a clear period, nor have they in them persons competent to lead in more extended instruction.

2. Most families starting family worship for the first time will find a manual almost a necessity. I would strongly advise such to use this method.

3. In our family we have found the conclusion of the morning meal, while all remain seated round the table, the best time. The members of the family are more likely to all be present then, than at any other time. The time spent comes to be thought of as a consecration of the first moments of the new day to God. The distractions of the day before are generally gone with the night; those of the new day have not yet come. The impressions made by the lesson and the prayers go with one through the day to restrain, to strengthen and to inspire. It has been our custom ever since we became a family, to read the Bible and pray every morning before leaving the breakfast table. J. H. HARDIN.

Boston, Mass.

1. Any adequate attention to family worship will, in the nature of the case, be an aid to religious interest. I think, however, that the definite effort to acquaint the members of the family with the contents of the Scriptures should be made a special order apart from the daily worship. An hour or two a week, say on Saturday or Sunday afternoon, may very profitably be devoted to Bible study by the family. Of course very much more time could well be given to this task, but one needs to keep in mind the very full schedule of our family life, and not demand too much in this regard.

2. Family worship might well be undertaken where it is now neglected, by the reading of a short passage of Scripture, to be followed with prayer by the head of the family, or some of its members. It is often possible to vary and perhaps improve this plan by the recitation of verses of Scripture by each member in order, or by the entire group. In this manner is combined the value of the use of Scripture and its permanent possession in the memory. The greatest difficulty is likely to lie in the prayer, for public prayer, even in the restricted circle of the family, is with a very large number an unaccustomed habit. As an aid in this direction I should suggest at first the use of the Lord's Prayer, or some simple forms of prayer, which I am hoping the editor of the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST will frame for the use of such families as I have indicated. It may be that by some such simple helps as this, the practice of extempore prayer may be encouraged.

3. I believe the morning hour immediately preceding or following the first meal of the day is the best for family worship, and that the exercises may well take place at the table, the reading or recitation occurring while the group is seated, to be followed by the prayer offered kneeling or standing. The whole may not take more than five minutes where the busy family life may seem to make a longer allotment of time inexpedient.

BY W. J. LHAMON.

It is absolutely necessary that our presentation of Christ, and the claims of Christ, should be brought into keeping with the thought-trend of our age. The preacher and apologist may, and many times must, row against the current of morals, for there he has conscience on his side. But he cannot successfully pull against thought-currents. There he must adjust himself and his plea to the style of the time.

The old deductive and dogmatic method is now no more than a ghost, and it frightens nobody. We have passed away from Greek speculation and Roman dogmatism. We are bound to go out and with our own eyes and fingers searching the universe—all we can get at of it—for facts, and when we have found them we persist in drawing our own conclusions from them. We are nothing if not inductive, independent, experimental and progressive.

In keeping with this spirit, if Christ is a fact men want to know it; and if his claims are valid, they want to know that also. If his life and death and resurrection have vital values for them they welcome such values, but they must be so presented as to commend themselves not alone to the good will, but also to the reason of the recipients. In the best sense of the term, faith must be rationalized to the men of to-day.

Brother Garrison's work should be welcomed as a very laudable essay looking in this direction. His chapter on "The Self-revelation of God," leading up to the chapter on "Jesus as a Revelation of God," presents the Old Testament revelation as progressive but incomplete. "It is educative, illuminative, and prophetic of something higher." This "something higher" is found in Jesus who is the full and final revelation of God. By reason of the "fact of Christ" the taunt can no longer be thrown at religion that, "It confesses its inability to furnish knowledge with any available data."

Suggestive as is the chapter on "The Meaning of Christ's Death," personally I could wish that the author had gone further, and had presented the death of Jesus in the light of the life of Jesus, and as the climax of the life, thus introducing to us the whole career of the Christ as being sacrificial. As it seems to me we must more and more emphasize the truth that the whole Christ is the atoning Christ, and that his death has atoning value in kind precisely as his life has atoning value. In degree the atoning value of the death is climacteric. But I do not present this as a criticism. To many minds, and to that of the author, such a presentation might seem undesirable.

The chapter entitled "What Must We Believe," is especially happy in its adjustment of the relationship between Christ as the object of our faith and the Bible as the medium of our faith. It is also valuable as showing that the various dogmatic interpretations of scripture are not germane to our faith in Christ.

In the chapter on "The Holy Spirit," the author pleads for the recognition of the presence of the Holy Spirit in the Christian people of to-day, "enabling them to cope with the problems of the times, and to overcome the difficulties that hinder the progress of God's kingdom in the world." "The Holy Spirit is none other than God himself manifesting himself as spirit to human spirits in order to complete the work for which he sent his son into the world." As God's work needed the agency of the son, so the work of the son needs the agency of the spirit. That the Holy Spirit is personal, that he is a manifestation of God, and that he is the vice-gerent of Jesus, is in brief the teaching of this wholesome chapter.

I would like to speak particularly of other chapters in this timely work, but must content myself with assuring the reader that he will find much to think about, and I trust much to be grateful for, in the author's treatment of the obstacles of faith. To this treatment a goodly portion of the book is devoted, not so much in the spirit of polemic as of earnest, pleading statement.

On the matter of "Authority in Religion," the author pleads not for less, but for more; more, but of a different kind; more of the authority Christ himself attains over man by his own peculiar appeal to man, and less of the authority of man over man through dogmatic statements and ecclesiastical courts.

The whole book is in the author's well-known style of kindly and considerate, but not uncertain presentation of his convictions. He has read widely in the more recent works akin in spirit to his own, and he does not hesitate to make a judicious use of them.

I wish "Helps to Faith" could be in the hands of every preacher of the Church of Christ. And not only so, but that it might find its way, as it richly deserves to, far beyond the boundaries of our own brotherhood. Such efforts to make the belief believable should be recognized and treasured as a part of the general religious literature of the day.

Christ's Sayings—II. By Cephas Shelburne

Christ's sayings were the natural, spontaneous outcome of the heart, and met the requirements of the moment. Whatever was most exactly needed for the defence of truth, for the blighting of hypocrisy, for the consolation of Israel, for the explanation of heavenly things, or for the conversion of the sinner, was instantaneously uttered, to the very point, and aimed at the mark it was intended to hit. He did not discourse learnedly about a new code or system of doctrine, but he taught by proverbs, illustrations, parables, and these were drawn not from remote truths of service, or from obscure philosophies, but suggested by the commonest, every day sights, sounds, scenes of nature and the most familiar incidents of human life. The rejoicing shepherd bearing back on his shoulder the lost lamb, the toiling vine-dresser, the harvesters in the field of ripe corn, the children gathering tares for burning, the woman seeking for her lost coin out of her forehead-circle, a man going to borrow a loaf for his hungry guest. His pictures and illustrations were drawn from the land of Palestine. Who could not understand the "sower going forth to sow," the "leaven hid in the meal," the "grain of mustard seed," or the "tares in the field." Instead of discoursing learnedly about the kingdom of heaven he said "the kingdom of heaven is like," and then follows a simple parable or illustrations. When he would impress the beauty of humility, instead of speaking in the abstract, he took a little child and set him in the midst of them and bade the disciples receive the kingdom of heaven as a little child. What more beautiful lesson in that land of flowers than "consider the lillies of the field," or what better illustration of a father's oversight than, "Behold the fowls of the air."

Many of these sayings of Jesus were strikingly figurative. He spoke to the Jewish mind, and in the language and idiom of his country, and his sayings in every instance are not intended for literal interpretation or application. The Hebrew mind had its peculiarities. Their literature abounds in figures and seeming extravagancies. They put things in a striking way. It was in this form of Jewish speech that Christ frequently spoke. For instance: In Luke the 14th chapter, when there was a great multitude with him, he turned and said unto them:

"If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot by my disciple."

Here Christ is using the Hebrew form of speech, and he does not mean that one must hate father, mother, wife, children, brothers and sisters, and yea his own life also. He is emphasizing the supremacy of our love for God. In the thirteenth chapter of Corinthians, Paul, using this form of Jewish idiom, tells us that spiritual gifts—pentecostal tongues, prophecy, knowledge, faith, bestowing of goods to feed the poor, giving the body to be burned—these are nothing in comparison to the more excellent way, love.

Again, take Luke 6th chap., 28-30 verses:

"Bless them that curse you, and pray for them which despitefully use you."

"And unto him that smiteth thee on the one cheek offer also the other; and him that taketh away thy cloke forbid not to take thy coat also."

"Give to every man that asketh of thee; and of him that taketh away thy goods ask them not again."

We are not necessarily to apply this literally. Christ is teaching the lesson of forbearance and forgiveness, the superiority of love over hate and resentment. By his own example he showed that he did not mean such paradoxes to be taken literally in the letter, for when the high priest smote him on the cheek he did not turn the other, but rebuked him: "If I have spoken evil bear witness of the evil, but if well, why smitest thou me." Paul did not carry out the strict letter of this text, for when Ananias commanded them that stood by to smite him on the mouth, he resented it, saying: "God shall smite thee, thou whited wall." In the case of the king's marriage feast where it says, "compel them to come in"—the Roman Catholic theologians have interpreted it into a literal command to compel them into the church, and hence we have the inquisition, bitter persecutions, and the hellish crime of burning men to the stake. Take the command: "Be ye therefore perfect as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." We are to keep the supreme ideal before us and strive to it; but the whole doctrine of sinless perfection has been built upon such striking passages, which were never intended for literal application. We must be on guard about pressing every saying and figure into a dogma to be literally applied and enforced. If this were the case the Bible would be full of contradictions. I would love my enemies and hate my father and mother; I would resist not evil and give man a right to my good or to take my own life if he chose to do it; I would tell the sinner God loves him and is angry with him every day; I would be as perfect as God and yet saved only by grace.

F. W. Farrar says that it is "entirely unwarrantable to force the story of the rich man into the proof of the ghastly dogma of endless torments in hell fire." This is a Hebrew idiom or figures of speech that is not intended to be interpreted with stupid literalism, any more than this: "He that believeth on me, as the scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water." This, as well as the other, is to be spiritually interpreted, and refers to spiritual blessings and condemnation. Things must be put to the Jewish mind in this strange and striking way, because if put in the ordinary way they would not have received them.

That Christ adapted himself to the Hebrew mind and spoke in the idiom of their language, is shown from the poetic form of many of his sayings. His teachings sometimes take the form of spontaneous poetry, adopting what is known as rhythmic parallelism of the Hebrew verse. For instance, in the sermon on the mount: "Give not that which is holy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet, and turn again and rend you." Here we have what is known as a "couplet," or two parallel clauses which we find so prevalent in the Psalms. And then the Savior, in the next verse, follows in a "triplet"—three parallel clauses:

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you:"

"For every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

See a lovely, finished specimen of Jewish parallelism shown in our Lord's address to Simon, the Pharisee, (Luke 7:44-47).

These show, not alone the literary structure of Christ's teachings, not simply that he was a Hebrew and spoke to the Hebrew mind; but that he was a true poet, that he had the divine insight, was a revealer, lifting the veil; that he could cleave, split, penetrate, perceive, look into the heart of things—the Divine Poet. Permit me to say, that the very brevity of Christ's sayings, their simplicity and adaptability, their ideal and poetic form, stamp them as divine and himself as the divine teacher, and compel us to say with the man of the Pharisees named Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews:

"Rabbi, we know that thou art a teacher come from God."

A Visit to Buffalo By F. D. Power

It was my privilege recently to visit Buffalo, and meet with the representatives of our churches of that city and vicinity. The occasion was an effort to form a more perfect union among these congregations for work along the Niagara frontier. The empire state is a large one, and we have only one organization for the whole territory. It was thought that for more effective service the churches in and about Buffalo should have some local missionary organization, and their representatives came together for this purpose in the Richmond Avenue Church on the evening of Nov. 10.

This good church has been the mother of most of the missionary enterprises in this region. The state board is located here, and here are the Greybiels and Longs and Kellogg and Chester and Beattie and many others whom it was a pleasure to meet. R. H. Miller is the present pastor, and has the hearts of the people. He is a young man in his second pastorate, but he is filling successfully his important position. A born Disciple, a graduate of Hiram and Auburn Seminary, he comes from Wellsville, N. Y., and understands well the nature of the field where providence has placed him. This church has been blessed with good pastors, but afflicted with short pastorates. Tribble and Wharton worked here, and Jenkins and Darsie and Philputt, and how many more of our finest I know not, but all too brief have been the terms of service; and so the church has suffered. Jefferson Street is one of the daughters which has a membership of 550. B. S. Ferrall is pastor there, coming Oct. 25, after seven years of faithful service at Watseka, Ill., where 400 were added under his ministry. Forest Avenue is the third church. It has a membership of 300 and is now pastorless. Tonawanda, near by, has three good churches, in Tonawanda proper and in the north and south cities. W. C. Hull is in charge of the first church and W. C. Bowen of the Tabernacle and E. O. Tilburn, of Tonawanda.

In all there are twelve churches of "this way," within twenty miles of Buffalo that should co-operate in the proposed movement. Others are East Aurora, C. T. Fredenburg, pastor; Black Rock, H. J. Aldrich, pastor; Clarence and North Lancaster, L. B. Withee, pastor; Williamsville, which is now without a preacher, and Niagara Falls where J. A. Wharton ministers. These churches have a combined membership of 3,000. The population of the territory is perhaps half a million, which will no doubt be doubled in the next fifteen years. the promotion of the social, educational, spiritual and evangelistic interests of the churches along the Niagara frontier. It is proposed to hold monthly meetings in the different churches and to secure leading men as speakers on city evangelization and kindred themes. The meeting on Nov. 10, was a representative one, among others present beside those named, being Mr. and Mrs. Dunstan, Mrs. Laura Gerould Craig, and Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Bellinger. Dr. Eli Long presided, and the matter of organization was referred to a competent committee. There can be little doubt as to the great value of such a move in this important center. One feels with unusual thrill the present greatness and future possibilities of this great city as he realizes that he is borne along its streets by the mighty power of Niagara, and that all its mills and factories and industries of every kind have such a slave to do their bidding.

As far back as 1725, the first attempt was made at harnessing Niagara to operate a primitive saw-mill. After this the prodigious torrent was allowed to go unfretted and unbridled till 1842, when Augustus Porter planned his hydraulic canals. In March 1886, the Niagara Falls Power Company was incorporated and in '89 the Cataract Construction Company. Three years were required to complete the tunnel, surface canal, and first wheel pits. The canal taps the river a mile and a quarter above the falls and draws off enough water to develop 100,000 horse-power. It took a thousand men over three years to excavate the tunnel. They removed 300,000 tons of rock and used 16,000,000 bricks for lining. The turbines work under a head of 140 feet and each develops 5,000 horse-power. And yet they do not utilize even a fraction of the mighty force of the cataract. Think of the power going to waste and which has gone to waste here for ages! It suggests the vast volume of spiritual force allowed to go in the same way, which set to work for God and humanity would move the world.

In a very remarkable way Buffalo connects the remote past and the most advanced present. Its very name suggests Poor Lo and the Bos Americanus which have disappeared from our horizon. We think at once of "Clinton's Big Ditch," when we think of it. From this city to Albany the great canal was constructed which cost New York seven and a half millions and was opened in 1835. When water was let into the ditch the news was signalled from Buffalo to Albany by the discharge of cannon, all captured during the Revolutionary war, stationed ten miles apart. An aquatic procession composed of steam and canal boats floated from Albany to the sea, led by the Chancellor Livingston with the Governor, De Witt Clinton, on board. At New York it passed out the Narrows, and anchored near Sandy Hook, and Governor Clinton stepped to the taffrail of his steamer and holding aloft a keg of water taken from Lake Erie, poured the contents into the sea, thus solemnizing the marriage of the Atlantic and the Great Lakes. The story reads like "The Espousal of Venice and the Sea," a ceremony which for one hundred and eighty years was annually observed with great pomp by the Venetians when the Bucentaur was rowed to the Port San Nicolas and the Doge cast into the waves a golden ring, exclaiming: "We wed thee, O Sea, in token of our true and perpetual sovereignty."

Venice is no longer Queen of the Adriatic, but the Erie Canal proved all that Clinton hoped, and one of the results of the late elections will be the expenditure of $101,000,000 to enlarge the canal to such a waterway that it will accommodate strings of 1,000-ton barges. Buffalo is a beautiful city of homes, of 400,000 souls, and its mighty elevators and ceaseless industries tell of the genius of the American people; and here the call for Christian activity must not go unheeded.

BOTH FEEL

What Proper Food Does For Both Mind and Body.

Physical health, mental health, indeed almost everything good on this earth, depend in great measure upon proper food.

Without health nothing is worth while, and health can be won almost every time by proper feeding on the scientific food Grape-Nuts.

A California trained nurse proved this: "Three years ago I was taken very sick, my work as a trained nurse having worn me out both in body and mind, and medicine failed to relieve me at all. After seeing a number of physicians and specialists and getting no relief, I was very much discouraged and felt that I would die of general nervous and physical collapse.

"My condition was so bad I never imagined food would help me, but on the advice of a friend I tried Grape-Nuts. The first package brought me so much relief that I quit the medicines and used Grape-Nuts steadily three times a day. The result was that within 6 months I had so completely regained my strength and health that I was back nursing again, and I feel the improvement in my brain power just as plainly as I do in physical strength.

"After my own wonderful experience with Grape-Nuts I have recommended it to my patients with splendid success, and it has worked wonders in the cases of many invalids whom I have attended professionally." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Look in each package for a copy of the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville."

The Rainy Season In India

We begin to look for the clouds the monsoon winds blow up from Ceylon about the middle of June, although in our provinces July, August and September are counted the months of barsat (rain) or "the monsoons." How eagerly have we watched after the dry burning months for these soft, gray clouds with their refreshing, reviving store! The average rainfall for our Allahabad Division is about 32 1-2 inches. In 1891 the rainfall in our division was over 40 inches, in 1896 slightly over 20 inches, that was our awful year of famine preceded as it had been by years of scarcity.

Between the censuses of 1891 and 1901 the population in this division decreased between 10 and 12 per cent. In 1893 wheat was being sold at the rate of 27 pounds to the rupee (about 32 cents) and early in 1897 only 19 pounds to the rupee, which makes a vast deal of difference to laborers receiving 4 cents a day in a part of India where the staple food is bread and not rice!

The least rain that has fallen for many years fell in our United Provinces in 1896 when the autumn harvest produced only 2,055,000 tons against a normal of 5,370,000 tons, and the spring crop of 1897 only 4,431,700 tons against 7,468,700 tons of satisfactory years. The influence of the rainfall may, in a measure, be estimated when I say that in May, 1896, 260,000 persons in our Bundelkhand districts were receiving relief from government to keep their bodies from utterly perishing, but when rain appeared in the third week in June, by the end of August this large number was reduced to only 6,000.

We think at least 3,000 children were rescued by your missionaries during the famine of 1896-97. We have now in our orphanages over 750 children saved from death by starvation. Do you wonder that it is with a very peculiar eagerness that we all watch the clouds form when they are due, and that it is with as peculiar a sinking of the heart we watch the brazen heavens above us rain down only heat when the veil of cloud does not shade us by day. This year we watched the weeks go by here in Mahoba without rain, but some six weeks later they came, and the crops were saved which a week more might have burned up.

Since I have spoken of the importance of the rainy season, it would ill befit the subject to take much space in speaking of its accompaniments—prickley heat, mildew, mold, troublesome insects, scorpions, centipedes and poisonous snakes drowned out of their hot weather haunts. But they are all here, and we pray for grace to endure lesser evils in view of blessing and being blessed.

Instead of dwelling on discomforts, I prefer to tell you a little of a business trip Miss Graybiel and I lately took to Allahabad, of our evening ride on the train when the green earth smiled up to the blue heaven and made such a symphony of color as only the artist nature can blend, of our view of "Mother Ganges" meeting the noble Jumna both flowing on with wide sweep in the days when the rains roll down vast floods of water from Himalayan sources as well as from the area of the plains these rivers drain. A grand railway bridge spans the waters at Allahabad and, we thought as we crossed this great, modern engineering feat, of the millions who still regard the union of the Ganges and Jumna as one of the most sacred of spots who, in far away villages, believe if they can once reach these muddy waters, one touch shall wash away the soil and stain of life-long sins, who believe the gates of heaven open here, and that a third invisible river joins at this spot the Ganges and Jumna. The pilgrims of to-day follow the vision of a long, long line of ancestors who believed these rivers veritably "rivers of life." Those of the past named the city "Prayag"—"The Sacrifice"—probably referring to the legend that here Brahma consummated ten sacrifices of the horse in commemoration of his recovery of the four Vedas. How one longs to tell the pilgrims of Prayog, of Calvary and Calvary's sacrifice! When we arrived in Allahabad, our fellow travelers began to pour forth from third-class compartments, pilgrims from all over India, there was Father Time all but his scythe, here a Diogenes with his lantern, there an Indian dandy with umbrella, cane and pipe, all about equal in length! Groups of frightened looking women in many colored draperies fluttered along the station platform, jostled by coolies, venders, gazing strangers with eyes only for the goal of a perhaps weary pilgrimage, the human tide set templeward and ebbed away from us, and left us in the beautiful waiting room for the night. Before seven in the morning, we were out in the cloth market where Miss Graybiel must bargain for two hundred or more ready-made dresses for our girls, ready made without a stitch of sewing! The bales of cloth were hauled out of dark holes, and when Miss Graybiel had convinced the merchants that she actually wished native draperies by the dozen, they at least awoke, and the buying went on right merrily. There was time with all the buying to pay a visit to the Bible house from which, in so many languages, the word goes forth to bless and uplift our India. It was a full day, and we came back to the station with about two hundred draperies in a huge ungainly bundle wrapped in canvass, a modern box full of brass dishes for the orphanage, not "play dishes" either, and nine or ten other baskets, boxes, bags and rolls of bedding, to say nothing of umbrellas, fans, water-bottles, and such necessities. Do you know how we transported them to Mahoba? We took our baggage all into our compartment, as ladies at home do their dainty parcels, and when we sat in the midst of our goods we laughed and then composed ourselves comfortably on the seats, and I read some stories of pilgrims till night closed in. By five o'clock the next morning we were in our dear restful Mahoba home, and found the children had been "good," while the "mammies" were gone, and we rejoiced in our 170 children and were glad we had new clothes, dishes, slates, pencils and school books for them.

We wish we could give you a true picture of the fresh green of these days, but the banyan and palm are no rivals of maple and oak, nor our roses of August of the roses of June. We do not forget the golden wheat fields of the west, the forest of corn on her plains, nor woodland and meadow of childhood! We are glad for every beauty of the tropics, for every memory of home!

Our Older Ministers By T. P. Haley

Referring to a resolution offered by Bro. F. G. Tyrrell at the recent state convention, and adopted as follows: "That special efforts be made to employ our older ministers in the work of the Lord," I am moved to say some things about our "older ministers."

The resolution implies; what is a well-known fact, that many of our "older ministers" are not employed as pastors or evangelists. The precise age at which a preacher becomes an "older minister" has not perhaps been determined, but that at some definite time he reaches what is called "the dead line" is admitted.

That there is a prevalent demand for young men in the ministry is evident from the fact that many of our most prominent pulpits are now filled by young men just out of school. It is doubtless true that many of our preachers dread the approach of age, knowing that, whatever of wisdom and efficiency come from experience and years, age is to be a barrier, if indeed it does not close the doors of the pulpit against them. This would be a most astounding fact, if it was not so common that both churches and preachers have become accustomed to it.

A recently retired Missouri senator left the United States Senate when approaching his 80th year. We do not recall any complaint from anyone of his party on the score of age, except from certain politicians who desired to succeed him. The senior United States senator from Missouri has passed his three score and ten years, and is standing for re-election, and will most certainly be elected, unless previously nominated for the presidency. Every member of the Supreme Court of the United States has passed middle life, and some of them are in the sere and yellow leaf—and no one is clamoring for their retirement on the score of age.

The grandest of the prime ministers of England became premier at the age when the average minister would be voted too old to serve.

The old physicians, like William McLure, and the old lawyers, like Chief Justice Marshall, are loved and honored, in spite of their years.

There are many evils connected with the early retirement of professional men and especially ministers. The young men and women who are teaching as a stepping stone to some other calling are never efficient and successful teachers. It is only such as expect to make it a life work, that reach the highest excellence. A majority of college professors are, even yet, the "older" men and women.

The "younger ministers," when they get their eyes open to the fact that at middle life or little beyond it they are to be regarded as "back numbers" and retired, are strongly tempted to turn aside to some secular calling, and thus prepare for the "rainy day," which they know is inevitable; thus they disqualify themselves for the best service while they preach, and make their early retirement a necessity, whereas if they knew it was a life work into which they had entered, there would be a motive to so store the mind and heart with the treasures of knowledge and piety that their continuance would be a blessing to the church and the world. No doubt the preachers are often to blame for their early retirement. The frequent changes are detrimental to studious habits. A few sermons here and there exhaust the supply. They cease to preach even them with interest, and it is certain that if the preacher is not himself intensely interested in his own sermons, no one else is likely to be.

The "older ministers," however well equipped mentally and spiritually, must of necessity work in the less prominent places, because of bodily weakness and the infirmities of age; but there are many fields in which his experience and wisdom ought to be counted a blessing. When he must retire for any cause he ought to be the ward of the churches he has served. The government does not retire its officers without provision for their maintenance.

It ought to be said for the benefit of those who will soon be our "older ministers," that while they are young and strong, and while they are receiving the larger remuneration, it would be well to "lay by" something for a "rainy day."

The older ministers now unemployed are not likely to be employed by the churches, only in exceptional cases. The resolution of the convention, passed with such unanimity, was a soothing compliment to our "older ministers," but neither the mover nor those who voted it so enthusiastically will be very insistent on their employment when a vacancy occurs. They will not even recommend that the marriage fees, so little to them and so much to the "old man out of a place," be turned over to him.

The only hope is that the men now holding the pulpits will be retained and that their support will be so hearty and their relations to the people so cordial and loving that neither party will think of their age. Dr. Hoge, of Richmond, Va., when asked how he had managed to remain 50 years in one pulpit, replied: "When I was yet a young man I had frequent calls elsewhere, and they would not let me go. When I began to grow old some of my members wanted me to go, and I wouldn't."

These lines are written by one of the "older ministers" who has no cause of complaint whatever. He is still serving a congregation in a community in which he has preached continuously for almost a quarter of a century and occasionally for more than forty years. He sees no abatement of the interest in any class of his hearers.

But there are "older ministers" who have been pushed aside who are still capable of doing valuable service in the work of the Lord. In another paper, I hope to be able to say some things of interest concerning our "older ministers" in Missouri. I crave their pardon, even in advance for the liberty I shall take in using their names.

BAD HABITS

Improper Food Often Leads to Tobacco and Drink.

Improper food creates abnormal tastes, and there are many cases on the medical records where the liquor habit and tobacco habit have been caused by wrong food and have easily been cured by the use of the scientific food Grape-Nuts, which so thoroughly nourishes and rebuilds the nerves that they stop the cry for stimulants.

A business man says: "For 30 years I smoked on an average of 10 or 15 cigars a day, and then my nervous system collapsed and I had about made up my mind that it was all up with me for I had tried many times to break off from the tobacco, but it always failed."

"Last May I was so run down I only weighed 111 pounds and I realized that I must stop smoking and stuck to it for about 10 days, but was so nervous and out of sorts my family told me I had better go back to smoking, as it was impossible to live with me. It was just about this time my wife brought a package of Grape-Nuts on the table one morning, and as I could eat nothing else she induced me to try a little of that. So I took a teaspoonful of it and, strange to say, it tasted good, and by the time I had it down I knew it had gone to the right spot, so I took some more and it was the first food I had relished for weeks."

"So I kept up the use of Grape-Nuts and as my appetite came back added other foods, and I am now back to my old weight of 133 pounds; never felt better in my life and, strange as it may seem, I have no further craving for the tobacco, and I thoroughly believe that only the courage and ambition I got out of the food Grape-Nuts, has given me the strength to quit smoking. If everyone knew the power of this wonderful food you would not be able to build a factory big enough to supply it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There's a reason.

News From Many Fields

Kansas.

Dedications are arranged as follows: Oakland, Nov. 22, Le Roy, Nov. 29, and Pleasant Ridge, near Dwight, Dec. 6. The writer has promised to assist. The churches at Larkin, Peary and Dresden will soon be ready to dedicate new buildings.

R. A. Omer has been assisting Brother Thomas at the Central Church, Kansas City. From there Brother Omer goes to the North Side to aid Brother Smith and his people.

This is State Mission month. Every church in Kansas that possibly can should raise its apportionment for state work. While all bills for last year are provided for, yet we began this year with an empty treasury. We need money. The missionary pastors and evangelists are at their posts of duty rendering faithful service. Send the money now.

The church at Beloit gave Bro. and Sister S. W. Brown a farewell reception just before their departure for their new field at El Dorado. Brother and Sister Brown and also Sister Dillon, the mother of Mrs. Brown, are among our most loyal and consecrated workers. The sixth district loses two of its most valuable officers in their removal.

Neal Overman will hold several meetings in and about Topeka. He is now at the North Side.

Harold B. Wright is at Olathe, Forsythe and Shepherd are at Hartford, and J. E. Halley is at Peabody. J. Ira Jones and wife lay siege to Centralia Nov. 15. All these people are under the auspices of the state board. We are receiving many calls for their services, but the trouble is every church wants its meeting held now. Be patient, brethren. It may be that January or December will prove to be as good a time as October. Indeed, October behaved bad this time. All who want meetings should write us early.

When Adoniram Judson had returned to Burma after a royal reception had been given him in America, he said that his hand had been nearly shaken off by people who were perfectly willing to let missions die. I trust there are none in Kansas who have this spirit toward our Kansas missionaries.

Neal Overman is storming the fort in North Topeka, assisting J. T. Purvis. The meeting is growing in interest. There have been a number of additions.

C. C. Atwood and wife are now in a meeting at Washington. They are successful evangelists. Bro. Atwood sent us quite a list of names for the Kansas Messenger.

C. A. Hill and wife are in a meeting at Stockton. From there they go to Plainville. They are faithful workers and are always a great benefit to a church. A. R. Poe is the pastor for these churches.

Harold B. Wright is assisting C. C. Bentley at Olathe. The meeting is moving slowly, but these brethren intend to preach and pray until victory crowns their efforts.

J. E. Holley has been kept out of the evangelistic field on account of the illness of Sister Holley. This has deprived the churches of the services of a good man.

R. H. Tanksley will hold a missionary meeting at Montana at the request of the State Board. This is a point where the church is very weak, and we are glad that Bro. Tanksley can do this work.

W. P. Jewett, of Portland, will probably hold a missionary meeting at Formosa. This is a field where we have a few scattered brethren, and the prospect is good for rebuilding the congregation.

J. R. Robertson recently began a meeting at Atlanta, where P. H. Guy is the preacher. This is a good field and we believe the meeting will prove fruitful.

W. H. Scrivner, of Girard, is exchanging meeting with Bro. Lockhart, of Paola. These are both good men, and the churches will, no doubt, be greatly blessed by their co-operation.

R. A. Omer is assisting Pastor C. P. Smith at the North Side, Kansas City, Kan. This is a wide-awake congregation, and no doubt the meeting will result in great good. Bro. Smith is greatly loved by his people.

The writer dedicates the new church at Larkin next Lord's day, Nov. 22. This dedication has been delayed for several weeks on account of the non-arrival of the pews.

The Perry brethren are pushing their new house to completion. The writer spent Wednesday evening, Nov. 18, with them. They expect to dedicate about Dec. 20.

The Oakland brethren are putting the finishing touches on their new building. They are working hard to complete it in time to dedicate it Dec. 13.

We are pleased to know that the fine new church building at Reserve is being rapidly completed. It will be one of the finest churches in that town. Joseph Morris is pastor.

J. Ira Jones and wife packed their baggage and laid siege to the town of Centralia, Nov. 18. This is a new field, where our plea had never been presented. Brother and Sister Jones are our pioneer evangelists. Bro. Jones closed up his work at Kinsley and Lewis last Lord's day, Nov. 15. He had been there and at Lewis for nearly two and one-half months. He organized the church, Bible-school and C. E. Society throughout at Kinsley and held a short meeting at Lewis and arranged for the two points to co-operate in employing a pastor. Wm. Ireland, our pastoral evangelist, has succeeded Bro. Jones and will remain on the field until the regular pastor is installed. Bro. Ireland is to work continuously under the direction of the State Board in the above capacity, and we ask the churches to receive him cordially and support him heartily. He is an able teacher, a wise organizer and a safe leader.

All those who have made personal pledges for Kansas missions should remember that now is the time to remit. We are doing the best we can to keep the workers at their posts of duty, and this cannot be done without financial outlay. Besides the evangelistic work, the Board has made appropriations to several mission points for the purpose of assisting missionary pastors. Those who have pledged on the evangelistic fund, and who have not yet responded to the last call, should do so as soon as possible. There are also several of the "Faithful Fifty" who have not as yet paid their pledges. Now is the time to rally for Kansas missions. The individuals, churches and all organized departments. Send us a word of cheer, and say that you will pay, and pray that Kansas may be won for Christ.

Topeka, Kan.

W. S. LOWE.

Kentucky.

I. J. Spencer is now in the midst of a meeting with home forces at the Central Church, Lexington, with Mrs. Princess Long as leader of song. Large crowds are attending the services and a rich harvest of souls is expected before the close of the meeting.

M. G. Buckner is preaching a series of sermons at Harrodsburg on "The Prophets." His work there is prospering.

Joseph Severance has resigned at Newton, Scott county, and accepted a call to Middlesboro, where he expects to begin work about Dec. 1.

At last reports there had been 41 added in the meeting in progress at Mayfield. The regular minister, R. L. Clark, is being assisted by C. E. Moore, of Wickliffe.

W. G. Walker and W. H. Allen have just closed a meeting at Arlington Heights, a suburb of Lexington, which resulted in 15 additions. We learn a mission church is to be established here under the Chestnut Street Church, of which Brother Allen is pastor.

The meeting at the Broadway Church, Lexington, in which the preaching was done by the minister, Mark Collis, closed with 59 additions.

There had been six additions in the Hawkins-Gant-Daugherty meeting at Elkton at last reports.

Jasper Stafford has just closed a meeting with the church at Turkey Foot, Scott county, with 11 additions.

W. H. Alford is in a meeting with the church at Rochester.

The meeting at Milford, in which the preaching was done by Marion Pfanstiel, of Brooksville, closed with 31 additions, 23 by confession and baptism.

P. H. Duncan has resigned at Parkland, Louisville, his resignation to take effect at the close of the present year.

W. F. Rogers has resigned at White Mills and Shepherdsville.

The meeting at Lawrenceburg, in which the minister, H. N. Reubelt, was assisted by C. J. Armstrong, of Winchester, closed with 33 additions.

James Vernon has been called for his fifth year at Nicholasville.

William Clark has begun work with the church at Owenton with bright prospects for a successful year.

The annual convention of the churches in Grant county will be held Nov. 28, 29, with the Fairview Church. There were nearly 50 additions in the Haley-MacLachlan meeting at Shelbyville.

We had two more confessions here at our regular services on last Sunday and one at prayer-meeting on Thursday night.

Midway, Ky.

GEO. W. KEMPER.

It is good to know that Carey E. Morgan is so far recovered from his illness as to be at his post in Paris. The church is delighted and the brethren generally will rejoice in his restoration to health.

The Shelbyville meeting, in which J. J. Haley assisted was a pronounced success. Bro. Haley remained twelve days and there were more than thirty added. Bro. MacLachlan continued the meeting for some days and at last report there had been forty-five and more were expected before the close of the meeting. He is very popular with the Shelbyville people.

R. L. Bussabarger has resigned at Hazel Green and will go west in a short time. He will supply for a while in the spring for Pendleton, Oregon, during the absence of the minister, N. H. Brooks. Bro. Bussabarger is one of our bright young men and we hoped that he would be kept in this state.

W. D. Humphrey has resigned at Bardstown and desires to locate elsewhere in the state. He is a faithful and diligent man and can be had by some church or group of churches and ought to be used. He can be addressed at Bardstown for a few weeks.

Thad. S. Tinsley has just closed a fine meeting at Louisa, Lawrence county, with eleven added. J. H. Stambaugh has been at work there for the State Board for two years. He will not remain there next year. We hope to use him in the same needy section of the state. We have no house at this town, but must build one. H. B. Smith, formerly of Ashland, late of Missouri, is reported to be well enough to resume work in a moderate way. It is hoped that he will preach at Louisa next year.

Harvey B. Smith has resigned his work here and at New Castle and will probably locate at Princeton, where he has been called. He is one of our finest young men and we regret to see him leave our church and people.

Kentucky missions seems to be on the way to the front, if it has not entirely reached that coveted position. H. C. Garrison reports that Danville will have a special missionary this year in State work, having raised $200. The amount asked was $150.

South Elkhorn exceeds the apportionment by 25 per cent. Falmouth has made a similar increase where W. S. Willis ministers. Frankfort exceeded apportionment, as it has done for twelve years. George Darsie keeps things going in that way. That church will have a special missionary. Winchester expects to do the same thing and to have their own missionary in state work. Other churches have done equally as well. Every day brings us good tidings. We confidently expect the most general observance of State mission month that we have ever had. We trust that the churches will send their offerings as fast as possible.

Sulphur, Ky.

H. W. ELLIOTT.

Ohio.

The Buckeye churches are now getting down to business for the fall and winter campaign. What a vast amount could be gained if preachers did not change so much! How much is lost to the kingdom in this way cannot be estimated.

Fred Kline has resigned at Ravenna after a successful pastorate, with the future unknown to this scribe.

Mansfield Church has called Howard Cramblet, of Iowa, to begin Dec. 1. We welcome Brother Cramblet to Ohio and assure him that he will find a strong and mighty force at Mansfield.

It has not been noted in the Ohio letter yet that S. J. White had returned to Ohio and become the bishop at Bowling Green. We are glad, indeed, for this, even if we are slow in saying it. Brother White was loaned to Missouri for some years.

J. V. Coombs has been preaching in a meeting at Salem, where Walter Mansell ministers. The meeting has not yet been reported as to results.

A. B. Moore is being assisted by W. E. M. Hackleman, at Alliance, in a meeting. This is a good team that ought to bring results.

The Central Church at Marion has finally settled on a pastor in the person of Frank Mahoney, of the state of fair women and fast horses. Brother Mahoney is to be congratulated, as he is the man of about 60 applicants. Who said there was a dearth of preachers? There is a good opportunity at Marion, and we shall watch the work with interest.

Percy H. Wilson is in a meeting at Modest in Clermont county. After this meeting he will work under the McDonald fund in Columbiana county.

The Birch Street Mission in Cleveland has been organized into a church with about 30 charter members. Wm. Kraft is the missionary here.

W. P. Murray reports a new Christian Endeavor at Southington. A short meeting resulted in 15 additions and the Ohio day offering in $17-$10 more than last year.

At the Cleveland preachers' meeting last Monday about 60 additions were reported. Every preacher reported unusual activity in the churches. For the benefit of any who may wish to attend this meeting the program is here appended. The meetings are on the first and third Mondays of each month at 10 A. M. in the Y. M. C. A. Building.

The Franklin Avenue Church in Columbus gave a reception to J. H. Dodd and wife on Friday night, Nov. 13. At this meeting $550 were pledged on the church debt to be paid by Jan. 1. Brother Dodd writes that he has already fallen in love with the people at Franklin Avenue. At this we are not surprised. A meeting will be begun Jan. 1.

The meeting at Hiram closed with 40 accessions, mostly by baptism. Jay E. Lynn, of Springfield, Ill., was the preacher.

Aching Joints

In the fingers, toes, arms, and other parts of the body, are joints that are inflamed and swollen by rheumatism—that acid condition of the blood which affects the muscles also.

Sufferers dread to move, especially after sitting or lying long, and their condition is commonly worse in wet weather.

"It has been a long time since we have been without Hood's Sarsaparilla. My father thinks he could not do without it. He has been troubled with rheumatism since he was a boy, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine he can take that will enable him to take his place in the field." Miss ADA DORY, Sidney, Iowa.

E. B. Cross has come from Paw Paw, Mich., to minister for the saints at Leipsic, O. In exchange for Brother Cross, Ohio has given Michigan J. S. Raum, of Piqua, who goes to Saginaw, Mich.

John W. Moody has been called from Seymour, Ind., to the churches at Bylesville and Harmony. We cordially welcome him.

Bowman Hostetler has accepted a call from the church at Quaker City and is on the ground.

Ohio Disciples will be surprised to know that M. L. Bates has resigned at Warren. He has just finished two years of very successful work. Last June Brother Bates refused the presidency of Hiram College. He now goes, Jan. 1, to take the church at East Orange, N. J., and will pursue a course in Columbia University, looking to a doctor's degree. This work will be done with a view of fitting himself for college work. We shall follow Brother Bates with a keen interest and fervent prayer.

Collinwood, O.

Virginia.

The Virginia Convention of 1903 is now numbered with the things of the past. It has carried with it a story of victories and defeats, but a history of the onward sweep of the current of the restoration movement in the old dominion.

The numbers attending the convention this year were not so great as at other times, but the air was filled with a tense enthusiasm that foretells greater efforts for the Master in this section of the Southland.

L. A. Cutler, whom all Virginians revere, delivered a splendid address on "Twenty-eight Years of History," V. C. M. S. He was the first president of the society, and spoke with a personal knowledge of the facts. His eloquence moved the hearts of all hearers, and thrilled them with an earnest desire to win many more victories for Jesus in this good state.

F. F. Ballard gave a good address on "The Preacher." It should be published and read by every young minister in our brotherhood.

Peter Ainslee, of Baltimore, spoke three times during the convention, and each time with telling effect.

W. G. Johnston, of Roanoke, spoke on "Our Relationships to the Denominations," and again on "The Holy Spirit in Evangelism." Both addresses were timely, and both brought out considerable discussion. Brother Johnston is one of Virginia's strongest thinkers, and is always heard with delight and profit.

F. M. Rains spoke on his own theme and again on state missions. At the close of the latter address, more than $1,000 was raised for state missions. R. P. Shepherd, of East Orange, New Jersey, presented in his delightful way the claims of church extension.

A number of addresses were made by local brethren on state mission work. One brother said, "This is surely a state convention." Another said, "It is our best."

The secretary made the following report of work: 14 men, 2,897 days, 1,705 sermons, 480 baptisms, 242 other accessions, 722 total accessions, 6 churches organized, 5 Bible-schools organized, and 48 churches aided.

Last year Virginia averaged 25 cents a piece for Virginia missions. This year our watchword is "One Dollar a Member for Virginia Missions."

Seventh Street, Richmond, gave $650.95 to state missions last year, and Marshall Street Richmond, $320. Seventh Street, we think, is not surpassed in the United States in her gifts to state missions; Seventh Street is a living link church in foreign missions.

A chapel was dedicated by the writer at Riverview, between Hampton and Newport News the first Sunday in November. A Sunday-school was begun here less than a year ago with only two or three pupils aside from those who were there from Hampton Church. Now there is a school of 40, several members of the church and a neat chapel. This is the work of one of our wide-awake young men, A. J. Renforth and his faithful helpers the Hampton Church. Virginia is a good mission field, and always yields splendidly to faithful persistent workers. H. C. COMBS.

O. O. Felkner, after an excellent year's work at Montague, goes to Wichita Falls.

E. S. Bledsoe goes from Vernon to Winnsboro and Sulphur Springs, dividing his time equally between the two places.

Frank S. Hutton has accepted the ministerial responsibility of the church at Marshall.

B. J. Vaughn is spending the month of November with the church at Orange.

The Tabernacle Church Sunday-school, Fort Worth, Jas. S. Myers, pastor, superintendent, had 800 in attendance last Sunday. They aim to reach the 1,000 mark by Jan. 1.

W. L. Swinney, of Quanah, becomes minister in charge at Weatherford. Brother Swinney is one of our safest and best men, and we predict a splendid work at Weatherford.

The first service was held in the new East Side Dallas Church Sunday, Nov. 15. The prospect is for a good working church from the start.

J. H. Douthit, our state Sunday-school evangelist, is pushing the matter of Boys' and Girls' Rally Day. We hope that Texas Sunday-schools will fall into line on that day with a good offering for home missions and Texas missions.

The November offering for Texas missions is encouraging. It is believed to be much the best ever made as a state offering. One good point is in the number of churches which have made their first offering for missions. Twenty thousand pieces of Texas mission literature was sent out from the corresponding secretary's office. Much of this reached places and people where special mission workers have not gone, and it is gratifying to know that it is bearing fruit. We will close our first six months of this year with 25 workers in the field and without debt.

The Texas Christian Lectureship will meet at Cleburne Dec. 7-10. A first-class program is provided for. We had as chief lecturer two years ago Dr. H. L. Willett, of Chicago. Last year Burris A. Jenkins, of Lexington. Now comes our old man eloquent, Pres. J. W. McGarvey. Texas gave the first two a cordial welcome, and we were amply repaid in the character of work done by them. President McGarvey has made a reputation as a Bible teacher that causes us all to look forward to his coming with a keen interest. Pres. Addison Clark and Chalmers McPherson, two of our ablest Texans, are also on the program.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.— 1 Kings 3:4-15.

Memory Verses: 12, 13.

Golden Text: The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.—Prov. 9:10.

The Beginning of Solomon's Reign.

After a reign of forty years, David was gathered to his fathers, leaving Solomon heir to a great and prosperous kingdom. Solomon had already been anointed and proclaimed as king before his father's death, so he inherited that rarest blessing of an oriental prince, an undisputed title to the throne.

Nevertheless, to make assurance doubly sure, he put to death his brother Adonijah who had organized an unsuccessful rebellion some time before. Others whom he had reason to hate or fear were either put to death or driven into exile or forbidden to go forth from their homes under penalty of death.

Solomon's Inheritance.

The kingdom which Solomon received was greater in extent than the Hebrew kingdom ever was, before or after. The Canaanitish tribes which gave such constant trouble in the days of Samuel had been completely conquered, and perhaps to some extent absorbed. The old tribal jealousies had largely disappeared. The neighboring kingdoms to the east had been laid under tribute. The treasury was full. There was peace. Solomon inherited great resources, and with them he inherited a great task. David, a more profoundly religious man than Solomon ever was, wished to round out his achievements by building a house of God which should be a central place of worship for all Israel. He was not permitted to carry out this plan, and it was handed over to Solomon as a part of his inheritance.

Builder and Trader.

In view of the resources at his command, the wealth in his treasury and his peaceful sway over so much new territory, it was natural that Solomon's activities should take the forms which they did. He became a builder and a trader; a builder of a great group of magnificent buildings, of which the Temple was only one, and a trader in the new provinces from which vast stores of riches were poured into his coffers. Both of these activities were conducive to worldliness and unspirituality. In earlier days there had been plenty of savage warfare and not a little treachery and cruelty. But the perils of war and the constant presence of threatening enemies served to remind the people of Israel that Jehovah was their only stay. Now comes a time of peace and plenty. "Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war." And peace has also her perils. The events of Solomon's reign afford material for a study in the perils of prosperity.

Solomon's Choice.

To everyone there comes, at some turning point in his career, an opportunity for making a great choice. The roads fork, and one must choose what the chief purpose of life is to be. The voice of God brought that choice before Solomon in an especially vivid form. His opportunities were great. Many shining paths opened before him, wooing him to their glittering goals—wealth, wisdom, political greatness. Which would he choose? His choice was a wise one. The greatest of his needs was wisdom—wisdom to keep him true to God, to enable him to rule his kingdom wisely, to teach him how to control himself in the midst of his multiplying temptations. And wisdom he chose. The very choice shows that he was not without wisdom, for it was a wise choice. A fool does not ask wisdom. The choice was pleasing to God, and as a reward for the wisdom which he had shown in choosing wisdom, the other blessings of riches and long life were added to him.

Solomon the Sage.

Solomon became the type of a class of sages, or wise men, who acquired great popularity in Israel. They were the popular philosophers. They coined into maxims and apothegms the best current conceptions concerning the conduct of life. Sin they represented as folly. The virtuous course of life is wise because it is profitable. Ideas of right and wrong are interpreted according to a strictly utilitarian scale of values. For example:

"Blessings are upon the head of the righteous, But violence covereth the mouth of the wicked."—(Prov. 10:6.)

The Book of Proverbs is a great collection of such maxims, some by Solomon and some by other sages, all reflecting this same view. The Hebrew language lends itself with peculiar fitness to this form of gnomic literature and, in the absence of anything corresponding more nearly to philosophy, the makers of these proverbs may be called the philosophers of Israel. It was Solomon's distinction that he brought this form of literature to its highest point of perfection and, though he had many successors and imitators, he stands as the father of the "Wisdom Literature," as David was the father of the Psalmody of Israel.

LET YOUR STOMACH HAVE ITS OWN WAY.

Do Not Try to Drive and Force it to Work When it is Not Able or You Will Suffer All the More.

You cannot treat your stomach as some men treat a balky horse; force, drive or even starve it into doing work at which it rebels. The stomach is a patient and faithful servant and will stand much abuse and ill treatment before it "balks," but when it does, you had better go slow with it and not attempt to make it work. Some people have the mistaken idea that they can make their stomachs work by starving themselves. They might cure the stomach that way, but it would take so long that they would have no use for a stomach when they got through. The sensible way out of the difficulty is to let the stomach rest if it wants to and employ a substitute to do its work.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets will do the work of your stomach for you and digest your food just as your stomach used to when it was well. You can prove this by putting your food in a glass jar with one of the tablets and sufficient water, and you will see the food digested in just the same time as the digestive fluids of the stomach would do it. That will satisfy your mind. Now, to satisfy both your mind and body, take one of Stuart's Dyspepsia tablets after eating—eat all and what you want—and you will feel in your mind that your food is being digested because you will feel no disturbance or weight in your stomach, in fact, you will forget all about having a stomach just as you did when you were a healthy boy or girl.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets act in a natural way because they contain only the natural elements of the gastric juices and other digestive fluids of the stomach. It makes no difference what condition the stomach is in, they go right ahead of their own accord and do their work. They know their business and surrounding conditions do not influence them in the least. They thus relieve the weak stomach of all its burdens and give it its much needed rest and permit it to become strong and healthy.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets are for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a box. They are so well known and their popularity is so great that a druggist would as soon think of being out of alcohol or quinine. In fact, physicians are prescribing them all over the land, and if your own doctor is real honest with you, he will tell you frankly that there is nothing on earth so good for dyspepsia as Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

HEROES OF THE FAITH.— Heb. 11:1-40.

God teaches us His greatest lessons through the lives of great men. When He has a great truth to communicate, a precious promise to convey, a far-reaching principle to announce, He embodies it in a life, and those who witness that life, or read the story of it, are more deeply impressed than they could have been even by an announcement by angel voices or in trumpet-tones from the clouds. A voice from heaven once proclaimed: "This is my beloved son." But the echoes of that wonderful voice died among the Judean hills and its testimony ceased. In the life of Jesus was embodied the truth of his divine Sonship, and that testimony is still reverberating through the world.

Human life is a very complicated thing. When God undertakes to make a special use of a man, He does not solve all his difficulties for him, or give him an entirely different mental and moral constitution, or make him infallible. Some of the heroes of the faith fell into sin more than once. In the case of some of them, like Moses and David we can learn almost as much from their mistakes as from their most heroic deeds. When they sinned they left the red flag of danger as a warning against the temptation which caused their fall.

But with all their imperfections, how great were some of these men whom God chose as His special instruments. Some were great in their natural abilities, but more remarkable was their moral and spiritual greatness.

Noah—the very type of a hero who is incorruptible in the midst of corruption, and who cannot be laughed out of doing what he knows to be the will of God.

Abraham—the father of the faithful, willing to leave his ancestral home to follow the voice of God in a hazard of new fortunes; the typical pioneer of the Orient and fore-runner of our heroic western pioneers, strong to conquer a new and hostile land in the name of his faith.

Moses—hero enough to leave an enviable place in a king's palace and become the leader of a band of fugitive slaves, because he believed that God was with them.

David—as a shepherd boy, faithful in few things and chosen to be ruler over many.

Elisha—the eyes of whose soul were keen enough to see the horsemen and chariots of the Lord upon the mountains when the eyes of flesh might well have seen with terror only the chariots of the enemy. Faith gives a vision of spiritual realities and makes them not less real than the things that are seen with the bodily eyes.

And so on with all the heroes of faith whose deeds are catalogued in that wonderful eleventh chapter of Hebrews. By faith they obtained an inheritance incorruptible, and the record of their faith has come down as an incorruptible heritage of inspiration to the faithful of all ages.

The heroes are not all dead. Modern missions have developed a roll of heroes, many of them martyrs, whose names are worthy of everlasting remembrance and whose deeds should be studied as examples for the Christians of your time.

The best thing we can learn from heroes, either ancient or modern is—to be one. An example is valuable only when it is followed. Let us learn of the heroes of old that we may, each in his own place and measure, become heroes of the faith.

"HELP THOSE WOMEN."—Phil. 4:1-3;
Rom. 16:1-4; Luke 8:1-3.

Looking to C. W. B. M. Day.

Men are in power. They have enthroned themselves by might, by prerogative, by precedent, by long-established custom. They hold the reins in government and in industry, in church and in state. But when Christ came, he opened up a new history. From thenceforth woman reads her emancipation. Our theme to-day is the admonition of an inspired apostle, "Help those women." Do not put obstacles in their way; do not criticise them; do not condemn them to silence and idleness and parasitism in the church of the First Born; help them in their noble ministries. They are servants of Christ and the church.

Going back to the Master himself, we find that he was accompanied by the twelve and "certain women which had been healed of evil spirits, . . . which ministered unto them of their substance." We remember that in the home of Mary and Martha he was a welcome guest. In all his words and acts we find a sentiment of respect for woman, a recognition of her as a human being, entitled to a place in the ranks of the redeemed, and to a post of duty. How different is the attitude of some disciples of the Master, even to this day! There are those who accept the pagan estimate of woman, and would keep her banished in the homes, as the pagans themselves do. They would silence her voice and fetter her with traditions. They seem almost to have forgotten that Christ was born of a woman.

The march of progress never halts. From the time of the apostles on to the present, there have been steady gains in the cause of the weaker. Women and children in Christian lands have privileges undreamed of elsewhere. Think what a paralysis the churches would suffer if all the women who are now active in religious and philanthropic work were suddenly to cease their efforts! Why, there are churches that would immediately go out of business. Read the history of the C. W. B. M., consider the fields occupied, the missionaries supported, the moneys contributed, the enterprises projected, all by women, and imagine the loss, if you can, were this society suddenly to be disbanded.

In the growth of the C. W. B. M. and the National Benevolent Association, we have within our own ranks, and immediately under our eyes, most gratifying evidence of the power of consecrated Christian womanhood. The work they do is a noble work. It is a part of the grand enterprise of redeeming the world, of preaching the gospel to every creature, and teaching them to observe whatsoever the Master has commanded. We should help them, because of the justice and merit of the cause. In it they are authorized and commissioned to labor. We have both apostolic precept and precedent for it.

They are entitled to our help, because of the fact that after all, the work is one. The field is the world, and the world is not subdivided. We avail ourselves of the economic principle of division of labor in forming these separate organizations of men and women; we obey the injunction, "To everyone his work." And who will say that there is not more work and better work done as a result? "Help those women."

Again, they are entitled to our help, because in many churches they are not fully understood, and their unselfish purpose is not grasped. They encounter unusual difficulties, because they are women. They cannot assert themselves, as men can. They suffer from misunderstandings, misgivings and reproaches. Help them! If a worker anywhere is timid and fearful, that worker ought to be encouraged. No matter for what reason, whether personal, or arising out of our social organization, if the workers hesitate, encourage them; cheer them.

NOT RECOMMENDED FOR EVERYTHING

But if You Have Kidney, Liver or Bladder Trouble, You Will Find the Great Remedy Swamp-Root, Just What You Need.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorder of these most important organs.

Therefore, when your kidneys are weak or out of order, you can understand how quickly your entire body is affected, and how every organ seems to fail to do its duty.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking the famous new discovery, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince anyone.

Doctors Prescribe Swamp-Root.

Gentleman:—"I have prescribed that wonderful remedy for kidney and bladder complaints, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, with most beneficial effect and know of many cures by its use. These patients had kidney trouble, as diagnosed by other physicians, and treated without benefit. Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root effected a cure. I am a liberal man and accept a specific wherever I find it, in an accepted school or out of it. For desperate cases of kidney or bladder complaint under treatment with unsatisfactory results I turn to Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root with most flattering results. I shall continue to prescribe it and from personal observations state that Swamp-Root has great curative properties."

L. Stanton Irish, M.D.

276 9th St., Borough of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease, and if permitted to continue much suffering with fatal results are sure to follow. Kidney trouble irritates the nerves, makes you dizzy, restless, sleepless and irritable; makes you pass water often during the day and obliges you to get up many times during the night. Unhealthy kidneys cause rheumatism, gravel, catarrh of the bladder, pain or dull ache in the back, joints and muscles; makes your head ache and back ache, causes indigestion, stomach and liver trouble, you get a sallow, yellow complexion, makes you feel as though you had heart trouble; you may have plenty of ambition, but no strength; get weak and waste away.

The cure for these troubles is Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the world-famous kidney remedy. In taking Swamp-Root you afford natural help to Nature, for Swamp-Root is the most perfect helper and gentle aid to the kidneys that is known to medicinal science.

If there is any doubt in your mind as to your condition, take from your urine on rising about four ounces, place it in a glass or bottle and let it stand twenty-four hours. If on examination it is milky or cloudy, if there is a brick-dust settling, or if small particles float about in it, your kidneys are in need of immediate attention.

No matter how many doctors you may have tried—no matter how much money you may have spent on other medicines, you really owe it to yourself to at least give Swamp-Root a trial. Its staunchest friends to-day are those who had almost given up hope of ever becoming well again.

If you are already convinced that Swamp-Root is what you need, you can purchase the regular fifty-cent and one dollar size bottles at the drug stores everywhere. Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root—Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Sample Bottle of Swamp-Root Sent Free by Mail.

SPECIAL NOTE—If you have the slightest symptoms of kidney or bladder troubles, or if there is a trace of it in your family history, send at once to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., who will gladly send you by mail, immediately, without cost to you, a sample bottle of Swamp-Root, and a book containing many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from men and women cured. In writing, be sure to say that you read this generous offer in the St. Louis CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST.

After all, is it not reciprocal? If the women are helped, do they not help the church, the preacher, and everybody concerned? Why should they be ignored or alienated? A strong C. W. B. M. in the church is a spiritual stimulus to it. "Help those women," for they are helpers of others.

PRAYER.

O God, we thank thee for the charity of the gospel; for its all-inclusiveness; that we can stand together with faithful souls of every rank and condition, and war a good warfare. Bless, we beseech thee, the women to whose hands thou hast committed a great work. Increase them in numbers and in faith, and reward them with a rich fruitage of all their toil, through Christ, the world's Savior. Amen.

Our Budget

—Let us place here at head of this column the latest word from the Joplin meeting:

Joplin, Nov. 22: "There have been 666 additions in the Harlow and Ridenour meeting. Sixty-six of these to-day. We close with a membership meeting to-morrow night."—W. F. TURNER.

—That is a great meeting, and if its fruits are to be conserved to the cause, it must be followed up with efforts correspondingly great. These converts must be trained in Christian living and established in the faith and doctrine of Christ. The great meetings reported in the New Testament seem to have been followed up by continuous teaching. We trust it may be so in Joplin. We are sure Bro. Turner will do all that one man can do to this end, but he will probably need a co-worker to assist him in so great a work. It would be very apostolic for Bro. Harlow to remain there six months or a year, or two whole years until these young disciples were confirmed in the faith and enlisted in Christian work.

—J. R. McIntyre has moved from Ft. Dodge to Guthrie.

—C. H. White is doing splendid work at Perry, Oklahoma, and is also preaching at Ceres.

—Brother Duff, of Chapon, Ill., was married last week to a daughter of Prof. B. J. Radford at Eureka.

—J. T. Ogle has resigned the pastorate of the church at Guthrie, O. T. He is one of the strongest men in that territory, and will be greatly missed.

—T. D. Wharton has closed a meeting at Newkirk, O. T., with good results and will assist C. H. White in a meeting at Perry.

—W. W. Wharton has recently returned to St. Louis after a short stay in Oklahoma. Mrs. Wharton still remains in the territory.

—Sister Helen E. Moses has returned to her home in Indianapolis from her quest of health without receiving any great benefit, we regret to learn.

—W. W. Frost has so far recovered from typhoid fever as to be about, and will soon take his place as pastor of the church at De Land, Fla.

—Allen T. Shaw, of Greenville, O., is delivering his popular lecture "Then, Now—What Next?" for Christian churches, under the auspices of the C. E. Society.

—E. T. McFarland, of the Fourth Church, St. Louis, is holding a meeting with G. F. Assiter at Belleflower. Bro. Assiter will preach for him Sunday at the Fourth Church.

—The dedication of the Clifton Christian Church, Louisville, Ky., occurred on last Lord's day. The church has been remodeled throughout, and a re-dedication was thought appropriate.

—T. J. Shuey has closed a meeting for the church at Carlinville, Ill., with 15 additions. Brother Shuey's evangelistic work is being well received, and his services are in constant demand.

—Roy Linton Porter has been called by the church at Vanceburg, Ky., for the year 1904, and has resigned his work at Butler to take effect Dec. 31, in order to enter upon his work at Vanceburg.

—We are called upon to record the death of Mrs. Etta Belle Bellows, Nov., 6. Mrs. Bellows was a sister of Mrs. D. A. Wickizer, and of F. A., O. T. and Leslie W. Morgan. Obituary notice later.

—V. E. Ridenour, of Topeka, Kansas, is to do the work of singing evangelist in a meeting at West Side Christian Church, Springfield, Ill., beginning November 29th, the pastor to do the preaching.

—An "Anti-worry" meeting is announced in one of our exchanges. That is an "anti" meeting with which we are in hearty sympathy. The fact is, it is all right to be an anti if one be anti the right things, that is the things that are wrong.

—The Congregationalists of St. Louis have recently completed the task of raising $20,000 for the payment of their church indebtedness in this city. There will be a rally of Congregationalists at the First Church on Thanksgiving day to celebrate this event.

—The Christian Church, of Urichville, O., announces that its new Bible-school room is nearing completion and will be dedicated November, 29, 1903. Bro. Z. T. Sweeney will be the officiating preacher on the occasion. J. P. Allison is the pastor of the church.

—Last week the Foreign Society received a gift of $5,000 on the Annuity Plan. The society hopes to receive $40,000 on this plan during this missionary year. This is a good start. Full information concerning the plan may be had by addressing F. M. Rains, Cor. Secy., Cincinnati, O.

—The 38th annual convention of the Missouri Sunday-School Association will be held on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, December 4, 5 and 6, 1903, in the Pilgrim Congregational Church, Washington and Ewing Aves., St. Louis. Speakers of national reputation will address the convention.

—Word comes from the office of the American Christian Missionary Society that the receipts from Boys' and Girls' Rally Day have begun coming in. This is a good indication and shows that our schools are wide-awake and eager to give to the cause of General Home and State Missions.

—For various reasons a number of schools cannot give the exercise prepared for Rally Day. To all such, we would make the suggestion that at least an offering, even though small, be taken and sent in to the Home Office. Every Sunday-school superintendent should see to it that his school is enlisted in this great cause of winning America to Christ.

—Some of our Sunday-schools will combine the Rally Day exercise with their Christmas exercise and send an offering for Home Missions. If you did not observe Rally Day on Nov. 22nd, perhaps you could make the above combination in your school.

—The Year Book is now being prepared for publication. All ministers who desire to correct their address on record last year, or ministers who are about to change their present address, please send the new corrected address at once to Benjamin L. Smith, Y. M. C. A. Building, Cincinnati, Ohio.

—J. M. Lowe has begun a meeting at Pleasant View Church, near Camp Point, Ill., the home of his childhood. It was in the cemetery of that old country church where the body of the late Mrs. E. Garrett was deposited. It is a substantial brick building, surrounded by a good community of prosperous farmers.

—We learn from the Central Baptist that the Baptist Church in Joplin, Mo., is in a protracted meeting with 106 additions to date. The influence of Brother Harlow's meeting in that city is not limited to the one church, but is pervading the whole city and stirring up all the churches. Joplin, henceforth, ought to be a better city, everywhere.

—I congratulate you on striking such a chord. It will be responded to in thousands of lives with a hearty "Amen." What America needs to-day, what our churches need so intensely, homes in which every day the Bible is read and prayer offered. The dear Master will bless, I am sure, your efforts in this line greatly.—F. O. FANNON.

—S. H. Givler, pastor at Eureka Springs, Ark., had the misfortune to lose, by diphtheria, his little boy, Homer, in his ninth year, on Oct. 30. The death by diphtheria made it necessary for their friends to remain away, but in their loneliness they had the consolation of God's presence and blessing. Our sincere sympathies are extended to the bereaved parents.

—There are notable exceptions to the rule that people who are not converted in their younger years never turn to the Lord. The Brookfield News, referring to a meeting of Bro. Prunty's, mentions the names of three venerable men, one in his 69th year, another in his 71st year and another in his 77th year, who confessed their faith in Christ and were baptized, during the late meeting at Linneus.

Cheap eggs are as good as cheap lamp- chimneys. MACBETH.

—Geo. L. Snively, general secretary of the Benevolent Association, reports that Mrs. Elizabeth James, of St. James, Mo., a Presbyterian sister, has just presented our National Benevolent Association with $100 for the support of its ministries to helpless age, orphanhood and friendless sick. This benevolent work strikes through all denominational lines, and is not even limited to the household of faith.

—W. R. D. Winters, missionary under the employ of the American Christian Missionary Society, reports the following: "I commenced yesterday my third month here, and we have every reason to feel encouraged. The Lord has greatly blessed us, for which we are very thankful. We have had four additions to the church, and at every service we have a larger audience than at the preceding one. All departments of our church are working, and harmony of feeling rules. We hope to make encouraging reports each month." Fulton Ave., Baltimore, Md.

—Greenville, Ala., to the American Christian Missionary Society: "A strong man is needed here, one to work this big territory. We all feel it is time to have a preacher. As a Sunday-school we can't bring the people into the church, nor can we get the ear of the people for our divine plea as a preacher can. Bro. O. P. Spiegel says a preacher is what we need, and soon we will begin to gather our harvest from these four years of sowing the "Word." Please, if you can, come to our Alabama convention, investigate our field and work so you will know what to do and say for us.—Mrs. C. H. McMULLAN."

—D. S. Domer, of Council Grove, Kan., has been on a trip to the east to see his aged mother and friends from whom he has been separated many years. He preached three sermons while there, one in the Evangelical Church in the town of his birth, East Petersburg, Pa., the other two in the town of Salona. He reports the greatest ignorance of the Plea and work of the Disciples of Christ among the people of that section, who asked him many strange questions concerning their belief. He thinks that great good could be done by an evangelist holding a meeting in that section. He reports his work in Council Grove as prospering finely.

—"The Young Man," organ of the Y. M. C. A. of Denver, Col. has this to say concerning our well-known correspondent, Bro. B. B. Tyler: The Sunday-School Lesson Study Saturday afternoon in the Y. M. C. A. auditorium, meeting at 4 o'clock, is one of the most attractive and popular meetings held in the building. Dr. B. B. Tyler, the veteran Sunday-school war horse, has been re-enforced with so many new ideas on biblical illumination by his trip to the Holy Land last year that his class is even more of a delight than in former years. Attendants at the class is not confined to Sunday-school teachers, but is open to anyone interested in the study of the Sunday-school lesson.

—Bro. J. S. Hughes writes: "My work on the Revelation of St. John having now been before the world seven years and not a single position taken having ever been assailed, I now propose to open a correspondence institute to continue the study. I shall add to it my new studies of St. John's gospel, that gospel being now the storm center of the greatest Christian controversy in the world and involving the greatest results to the future. I request all who have read my book and all who wish to keep abreast of the Christian progress of the age to send for my prospectus, inclosing stamp. Address J. S. Hughes, 1203 Chamber of Commerce Bld., Chicago.

—Two scholarships amounting to $100 have been provided for Eureka College, one by Peter Whitmer, of Bloomington, Ill., and one by the First Christian Church, of Springfield, Ill.; to be awarded to two young men in the graduating class of 1904, to be used in study in the Disciples Divinity House, University of Chicago, during the year 1904-1905. A third scholarship amounting to $100, provided by Mrs. H. M. Meier, of St. Louis, for a year's study at the University of Chicago, has not been assigned to any college as yet. Other scholarships will be provided for other colleges in the various states. The plan of the Divinity House is to make such scholarships permanent by an endowment of $2,000, by which one young man will be given the advantages of a year's study in the Divinity School every year.—ERRETT GATES.

Chicago, Ill.

—The Christian ministers' meeting in the office of the Christian Publishing Company last Monday, adopted, unanimously, the following resolution, which was moved by J. H. Garrison: "In view of the fact that the lines have been clearly drawn in Missouri between boodlism and political corruption in general on the one hand, and political purity and official integrity on the other, we as Christian ministers of St. Louis, without regard to our political affiliations, do express our convictions in favor of the candidacy of Joseph Folk for governor, or of some man who represents the same issue as that for which he stands." What the ministers wished to do was to put their influence emphatically on the side of honesty in politics, and against the desperate efforts now being made by the ringsters to down the man who stands for the prosecution of dishonest officials regardless of their party connections.

—The following poetic description of an American habit, from the Chicago Times-Herald, explains the prevalence of indigestion in this country:

He didn't have time to chew

The food that he had to eat,
But he washed it into his throat

As if time were a thing to beat.

At breakfast and lunch and dinner

'Twas a bite and a gulp and a go—

Oh, the crowd is so terribly eager,

And a man has to hurry so!

A bite and a gulp and away

To the books and the ticker. A bite

And a drink and a smoke and a seat

At a card table half of the night;

A pressure, a click and a pallor,

A cloth-covered box and a song;

A weary old fellow at forty,

Who is deaf to the noise of the throng.

—Answering a correspondent's question, which may be a question others are asking, "Helps to Faith" is not simply a reproduction of the articles which appeared in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST, under that title. Every chapter has been revised, new matter added to many, footnotes have been added, and one entire chapter of the book never appeared in the paper. The author is deeply gratified at the numerous testimonials which have already reached him from readers of the book whose faith has been greatly strengthened by it. For this purpose it was written. Why not select some one of your friends who is honestly skeptical, but who would like to believe, and send him a copy of the book for a Christmas present? The book is not intended for vaunting infidels who rejoice in their unbelief as superior wisdom, but for those of weak faith who can honestly pray, "Lord, I believe; help thou mine unbelief!" The author would like to test the book on that class of persons, and to have their candid criticisms, that he may make it more valuable in future editions.

—The Dallas Daily Times (Texas) announces the organization of a new congregation in East Dallas, Texas, on a recent Lord's day, by John A. Stevens, who is laboring under the American Christian Missionary Society in the Southwest. The church is to be known as the Peak Avenue Christian Church. The paper states that one week has been spent in raising the money to make the cash payment on the beautiful lot, 102x150 feet; "Three weeks ago it was covered with a cockle-burr patch. In that time a neat structure, 40x60 has been erected and furnished without a cent of debt for any part of the constructive work." Nothing very "languid" about that enterprise, if it did happen to occur in the great southwest.

—R. E. L. Prunty, editor of the Brookfield (Mo.) Messenger, and pastor of the Christian Church at that place, has recently received an indefinite call from the church to continue his labors, with increase of salary. The man who fills these two offices in a community deserves a good salary, especially when he fills both as satisfactorily as Brother Prunty seems to be doing. The Linneus News announces a successful meeting at Linneus by Brother Prunty in which "members of every church in town have assisted in the good work." The News says he "did much in the line of promoting a fraternal spirit between the religious organizations of our city." In Editor Prunty's editorial report of his Linneus meeting he mentions the various preachers of the different churches by name with a word of appreciation and praise, acknowledging their courtesies in dismissing their services for the benefit of his meeting. All this is very delightful, and prophetic, as well, of the time when a good meeting by one church need not disturb the fraternal relations existing between it and other churches in the community.

General Drake's Death.

The following card has just reached this office:

EDITOR CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST:—General Drake died at 12 o'clock to-day at his home in Centerville, Ia. A great and good man has gone to his reward. All mourn his death. We loved him for his true worth. C. F. B.

It is known to all our readers that General Drake has been in feeble health for many years. In spite of that fact this news of his departure comes with a suddenness that finds us unprepared for it. General Drake, by his large generosity, had come to fill so large a place in the enterprises of the brotherhood that his loss will be keenly felt. It was only a few days ago that the Detroit Convention was loudly applauding a telegram announcing a gift from him of $5,000 for a Bible College in India. We remember his generous gift to a similar enterprise in China. He was a generous giver to all our missionary enterprises. Of course Drake University, upon which he lavished his most generous gifts, is his enduring monument. How much better for a man to link his name with a great educational enterprise, like that, by his generous gifts, than to erect a costly mausoleum to perpetuate his memory!

We have no space now, nor is it the time to present a worthy sketch of the life of this good man. No doubt some one who stood close to him, and who knew him well, will furnish a suitable notice for us in due time. It is enough here to record our high appreciation of his personal worth, of his conscientious devotion to duty as he understood his duty. We did not approve of every official act during his governorship of Iowa, but we never doubted for a moment but that he did that which seemed to him to be his official duty under the circumstances.

It is some comfort to us now to know that it was our privilege to defend his good name and character against the imputation of many of his former friends who disapproved of his

IT IS A JOY TO BE CURED.

Painful Piles Become Painless at Once
and are Cured in Short Time.

It almost pays to have the piles so great is the feeling of relief when Pyramid Pile Cure is applied. They are in the form of suppositories and reach the affected parts at once, and the pain ceases and a mild feeling of ease and comfort takes its place. The healing process begins immediately and continues as long as the cure is administered until the sufferer is perfectly and completely well.

How much more sensible is this method than the barbarous torture inflicted by the knife and instruments? How much more satisfactory to be able to administer a simple, effective remedy in the privacy of the home than to submit to the humiliation of an examination and operation in the physician's chair!

Pyramid Pile Cure cures piles to stay cured. Thousands and thousands of sufferers the country over have found this out through the testimony of their friends and others, and the sale of this remedy is increasing enormously every week and month. It is certainly a glorious thing to be able to make great numbers of people happy, and nothing will cause happiness so much or do it so quickly as relief from pain and a cure of a dreadful disease. The proprietors of Pyramid Pile Cure, therefore, have a great feeling of gratification and happiness themselves when the letters from former sufferers come pouring in on them telling of the wonderful cures and rejoicing and giving thanks for their deliverance from this terrible disease.

Pyramid Pile Cure is for sale by all druggists at 50 cents a package, or will be sent at once in plain wrapper on receipt of price by Pyramid Drug Co., Marshall, Mich.

official action in connection with the Mullet law in Iowa. We believed at the time, and have always believed, that much of this criticism was unjust. We believe he was a conscientious official of the state, as well as a conscientious Christian man, in all the relationships of life. We loved him for his modest bearing, and for his moral worth. It gives us pleasure to lay this tribute of respect and affection on his grave, and we tender our sincere sympathy to his bereaved family and friends.

A Favorable Verdict After a Careful Test.

Having read and re-read "A Modern Plea for Ancient Truths," I cannot refrain from expressing my hearty appreciation of its brief message so simply told. Its freshness and strength make it helpful reading for thoughtful people everywhere; and its broad and reasonable statement of the basic faith of the Disciples of Christ will certainly commend it to the favorable consideration of all who seek to recast the broken bonds of a universal Christian fellowship.

Typographically, "A Modern Plea for Ancient Truths" is more than excellent. The above testimony is a fair sample only of what the multitude who have read the book think of its contents. Its popularity is extraordinary. Less than 75 volumes remain of the third edition. Oxford Gray Binding; price 35 cents.

South Australian Letter.

Adelaide always dons her gayest attire for "show week." It is a sort of state agricultural and industrial fair that gives the second week in September its name. It is perhaps the most representative gathering of the year, drawing as it does the enterprising farmers and fruit-growers and grazers from all the settled districts in the state. The week is well chosen for the purpose, for the chill and rain-laden winds of the winter have given place to balmy skies and a pleasant sun, and the whole landscape is one mass of green—not a coming, but a passing green, for the showers of the southern autumn and winter make the months from April to October as green as in the northern hemisphere, although the seasons are reversed; while the dry and scorching heat and the winds from the desert have as desolating an influence upon the remaining months as do the frosts of other climes. So just now we look forth upon velvet, grassy parks and smiling lawns and blossoming orchards, upon a plain full of fresh pastures and wheatfields, and a long, bold range of densely green-clad hills; and we try to put out of mind how glaringly red and brown and hard-featured those rounded slopes will be by Christmastide.

The Churches of Christ in South Australia always choose this time for their annual conference; and this, the nineteenth, was the most successful ever yet held. It had been duly advertised by a special conference number of the The Australian Christian, and the opportunities of "show week" filled the meetings to overflowing. As usual with state conferences here, there were a number of visitors from other states—every state in the commonwealth except Queensland being represented. When we remember that the continent of Australia is about the size of the contiguous portion of the United States, and that many of our visitors traveled more than a thousand miles, the value of the fact will be appreciated.

The report of the evangelistic committees showed a total of 506 baptisms in the 30 churches of the state during the year; a net gain of 361, a total membership of 3,749, a Sunday-school enrollment of 2,888, and an addition of 245 Sunday-school pupils to the church; $1,709.33 was expended for state missions, and $18,612.14, for all purposes by the churches. Special features were the favorable results of the gospel meetings in the new tent, and the recommendation to employ a state evangelist. This was followed up by a resolution authorizing the committee to select and employ a suitable man in that capacity. The committee has since taken action on the matter, and contemplate importing one from America. Brethren Mark Collis, J. W. McGarvey, and A. McLean have been asked to select a man and send his application.

The annual conference essay was the occasion of much discussion. It was by the writer of this letter, and was entitled "The Evolution of the Religious Reformation." It pointed out that the inevitable alternative of everything living was to adapt itself to its surroundings, or perish. This was declared to be true of religious reformations, and the forecast was made that, if the Disciples of Christ did not present in their life and thought and worship what the times demanded in Australasia, a union movement would soon arise in some other quarter, and leave us behind. The essayist proposed, as necessary changes, the abandonment of close communion, freer exchange of pulpits with representatives of other religious bodies, more intelligent distinction between principles and method, greater congregational liberty of action and worship, and a more tolerant attitude toward those who differ from us in opinion. The criticism of the essay was spirited and mostly adverse. A resolution was passed, asking for its publication; and further discussion awaits its appearance in

The Australian Christian.

The report of the Foreign Mission Committee showed that $1,024.45 passed through the hands of the committee during the year. This included the entire support of a missionary among the Kanakas, and South Australia's quota of the salaries of five European and two native missionaries. In addition to this, two European missionaries and several native evangelists and orphans in India are supported by local churches and societies in this state, independently of the committee. There is no federal organization in Australia corresponding to the Foreign Christian Missionary Society in America; instead, each of the leading states has its local foreign missionary committee, the appointments being made, and the routine business transacted by the Victorian committee, and all important matters being referred to the other states for ratification.

A discussion on education was the occasion for the introduction of an important resolution. The Australasian brotherhood has for years been trying to devise some educational institution that should be recognized throughout the commonwealth, and should stop the exodus of our most ambitious young men to America. Adelaide, Sydney and Melbourne have their own local classes for training young men in church work, but their scope is not at all adequate to the needs of the brotherhood. The state conferences have separately resolved and recommended, but instead of advancing we seem to be only marking time. The same lack of concerted action confronts and hampers every enterprise of the brotherhood. The resolution, introduced in the midst of a discussion of our limitations, voiced the need felt by all the workers by endorsing the calling of a general conference of the Churches of Christ throughout Australasia. It was earnestly discussed, and finally carried unanimously. A simultaneous agitation in this direction is being carried on in all the states, and promises to issue in a permanent and central organization.

The meetings on Wednesday and Thursday nights were held in the town hall. This is one of the peculiar features of the Australian municipality. It is usually a fine one, and is often the best building in the town. Every village has one. The town hall of Adelaide is a comfortable and handsome one, with a large pipe organ, a choir loft seating 500, a dress circle of equal capacity, and sittings on the main floor for 1,000. It was practically full on both occasions. The Wednesday night meeting was a Sunday-school demonstration, and included the reading of the annual report. The amount handled by the union during the year was $598.31. A prominent feature of Sunday-school work here is the competitive Scripture examinations, in which, for the past year, prizes valued at $40 were distributed.

On Thursday the "big tea" was given in the town hall. No assembly of any kind in Australia is complete without a tea. The entire floor of the town hall was occupied with the long tea-tables, and the dark, strong tea (with milk and sugar), sandwiches, "scones" (a sort of biscuit), cakes and fruit disappeared by wholesale. As soon as the tea-tables were cleared and the seats replaced, the crowd poured in—or rather it seemed to crystallize where it was; for hundreds had not left the hall at all. The grand home mission demonstration that followed was abundant evidence that we are very much alive. The speeches were rousing and pointed, and the offering exceeded $500 in cash and pledges. The singing was in every way worthy of the occasion, and the contributions of the Grote Street Quartette party were particularly fine. The meetings served remarkably well to advertise the plea, and made the public ask, "Who are these people?"

The conference closed on Friday with that other typical and indispensable Australian institution, the picnic. At ten in the morning a long line of vehicles, such as are popularly termed "band-wagons" in America, started for the mountains. The scene was a beautiful forest reserve of several thousand acres, called National Park. The distance was some advertisements costs money. I must have a remedy that cures and that people will buy after they have tried it or I could not continue in business. I have it and that is the reason I shall continue in business. That is the reason my business is increasing so much more rapidly than I ever expected. My expenses are very heavy and I must sell a great deal of my remedy to make it pay. I am doing both.

The name of the remedy is Gauss' Combined Treatment. It is called Combined Treatment because it combines a thorough constitutional treatment that cleanses and clears the system of all poisons and impurities with a local treatment that relieves suffering and heals and builds up the diseased parts. It is a combination that never fails to cure. It has cured thousands of others, I want it to cure you. If you will write me to-day, sending your name and address—a postal card will do—requesting a trial package of the Combined Treatment, I will see that you get it by return mail and it won't cost you a cent. eight miles, and the elevation about 1,500 feet. The road wound up a partly wooded glen, through grassy pastures and resinous eucalyptus woods, and the sweet-scented silvery and golden tufts of wattle, every turn of the road giving a new and ever brighter glimpse of the broadening crescent of the sea. The day was spent in careless picnic fashion—gathering the yellow and scarlet treasures of the spring wild flowers, playing cricket with the sturdier spirits, or wandering with the more romantic ones along the sombre, murmuring avenues of pines. The inner man was not forgotten, either—it never is, in Australia. And then the drive homeward—who can describe the balm of the breeze, and the freshening scents of the spring-tide evening? And as we came out of the wood, and rounded the brow of the mountain, overlooking the plain and the western sea, a sight greeted us that could never be forgotten. I have seen the west all glorious with its bars of gold, and I have seen the sea all burnished with the setting sun; but somehow there seemed to be a new glory filtered through those old scenes that made the land seem re-created. There was not a mist, for we could see the landscape and the city in nearly all their details; but the spirit of the wonderful Australian atmosphere seemed to be robed in blushes. A delicate rosy glow was at our feet, and all to right and left, and far away, over all the plain, to where it met the dim gray and purple of the sea, and then vanished in the gold of the western sky. Only a moment so—and then it quickly faded, and left us driving gaily homeward in the sweet-scented dusk, singing the songs of youth and joy, wondering at the violet and purple and amethyst of the southern night sky, and cherishing in our hearts a memory as gentle and lovely as those mystic tints.

Why Should We Observe It?

That the whole church may know that the Christian Woman's Board of Missions is one of our great national organizations for the evangelization of the world, and that the whole church may have fellowship in the work which is being carried on through this organization.

Its work is both home and foreign. Wherever a door has been opened and the means provided, the woman's board has entered.

Jamaica.

The first foreign mission field was Jamaica, and the first missionary, W. H. Williams, of Platte City, Mo. During the twenty-seven years in which we have worked in Jamaica, thirty-four missionaries have been in the employ of the board. From one church in Kingston with fifty faithful members and a few scattered brethren in the country, we have now 22 congregations with a total membership of 1,837. These people in their poverty have contributed over $3,000 for religious work during the past year.

We have not yet found any one to take Brother McLeod's place, and Bro. A. C. McHardy is laid aside on account of illness. We need a man for Kingston. We also need at least $10,000 in order to rebuild our chapels and other mission property destroyed by the tornado.

India.

In 1882 our first missionaries sailed for India. During the first decade of our work in India, six missionaries were sent from America. Three of these are still in the field. During the second decade, 24 were sent from America and 7 were employed on the field. Of this entire number, 24 are now in the employ of the board. From a single station at the end of the first decade, we have seen the work grow until we now have eight stations with many out-stations, in which we have schools for boys and girls, and medicine is dispensed once or twice a week.

In Bilaspur we have a hospital, two schools for girls, a girls' orphanage of 140, and zanaana work.

In Deoghur we have hospital, girls' orphanage and a girls' school. Thousands of pilgrims come annually to the shrines in Deoghur, and our missionaries have an excellent opportunity to preach the Word, to sell portions of the Scripture and distribute religious literature. We need men for evangelistic work in and about Mahoba and Deoghur. We also need men for our English Bible work and evangelistic work in Calcutta.

Mexico.

We began work in Mexico in 1895. M. L. Hoblit was our first missionary. A. G. Alderman took charge of the work in 1901. A year ago we were fortunate in securing the services of T. M. Westrup and family. Brother Westrup has an excellent knowledge of the Spanish language, has composed many beautiful hymns in this language, and is the editor of our little 8-page paper which carries its message of peace every week to hundreds.

During the past year several benevolent physicians have assisted us in our free dispensary. More than 500 patients have thus been treated. There are four Sunday-schools and a Junior Society and an active Y. P. S. C. E. Beside the central mission in Monterey there are two out-stations; one in the southern part of the city, where a Bible-school is maintained, and the gospel preached on Sunday afternoons and Thursday nights. Another out-station is in the western part of the city, where we have another Bible-school and gospel preaching on Tuesday and Friday nights.

We have purchased a lot on which we must build during this year a schoolhouse which will accommodate at least 600 children, and provide apartments for our printing establishment.

Porto Rico.

In 1899 the city authorities of Bayamon Porto Rico, offered our board the perpetual use of property in their city, if we would establish and maintain an orphanage there. The offer was accepted and the orphanage opened August, 1900. Mrs. Maria Ford is in charge and Miss Nora Collins teaches the school. The house is crowded, and the missionaries have no privacy. There is a demand for a boys' orphanage. A farm for this institution has been purchased and the missionaries for it are on the field. We need $8,000 to build a home to accommodate one hundred boys and to furnish a home for the missionaries in charge.

United States.

Last year we assisted in the educational, pastoral and evangelistic work in 38 states and territories. Many needy fields in the homeland call for help, which must be denied, unless our receipts are greatly increased. For this reason, our churches should observe C. W. B. M. Day, and make it possible for us to enlarge our work.

Dedication of Bachelor Creek Church.

This is one of the strong country churches in Wabash county, Ind. It is five miles north of Wabash City. It is an old and influential congregation of Disciples. The house is of brick, stone and slate. It has art glass windows, is lighted with its own gas plant, is heated with a furnace, is beautifully carpeted and furnished and is modern in all of its appointments.

The property is worth $5,000. It only took a few minutes to raise $1,800, which paid all debts and left a surplus of $300. More people attended the dedication than could be packed in the house. It was a great day for this old church; a day of great giving, great paying and great rejoicing. God is greatly blessing this congregation.

Why I Rejoice.

DEAR BROTHER GARRISON:—I want to tell you my delight in your series of articles now running in the CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST on personal piety, the home life and kindred subjects. How sadly needed and how helpful they ought to be and I believe will be. A. Campbell said, "The theory of Christianity is the Word of God, its practice the lives of Christians." I rejoice in the success of our evangelists, but I rejoice much more in the evidences I see of a greater Christlikeness. A sweeter charity is manifest. Missionary zeal abounds. Temperance and good citizenship champions are greatly increasing in our ranks. Educational interests are soaring aloft.

But oh when will our home life be what it ought to be? Not only for our influence upon the world around us, but for our own personal safety. Our five per cent of family altars should be increased to ninety-five per cent. Our giving of dimes will be increased to giving dollars. When "we be what Christ would have us be, and do what Christ would have us do," when we love one another as Jesus has loved us, then will the work of the Lord prosper in our hands. The Lord bless you.

J. C. POWELL.

Our Bible College in India.

What our mission in India needs is educated, trained, practical Christian leaders from among the people of that land. Bishop Thoburn, after forty-four years of service in India, says: "Leaders must be found and trained. Schools and colleges must be fostered. A literature must be created in every tongue spoken by our converts. In short, no pains must be spared to place the entire body of converts upon a rising plane of moral and social progress." Christian missions in the truest, highest and fullest sense means nothing less than this.

There are few countries in the world where an educated man and woman stands for as much as they do in India. Why? Because they are so few. Scarcity enhances values. Eighty out of 100 men and 199 out of every 200 women can neither read nor write. An educated Christian is worth more than a Kohinoor diamond.

Our Christian mission in India is, in one sense, of age. It is 21 years Nov. 7, 1903, since our first missionaries landed in Bombay. In these years God has given us in the center of India ten mission stations and many out-stations within a circumference of 500 miles. We have churches, Sunday-schools, day schools for boys and girls, hospitals, orphanages, leper asylums and industrial schools. The work is one. The need is the same. Geo. W. Brown, of Hurda, voices the judgment of all our missionaries when he says: "The provision of native helpers is the most serious and most pressing need of the mission at present. We must have a school in which to train native helpers. Untrained men cannot meet the subtle Brahmin and the wrangling Mohammedans who are to be found in every village in the country."

The Bible and training college is the only solution of this problem. The missionary in charge of each station cannot train his own men properly. We cannot beg, borrow, buy or steal these native helpers from other missions. We cannot employ discharged, dissatisfied, wandering refugees from other missions. There is but one way to get these teachers, preachers, evangelists, pastors and colporteurs. We must train them in our own mission, for our own mission and by our own missionaries. There is absolutely no other way. It is Christ's only method. "He appointed twelve that they might be with him and that he might send them forth to preach." With such a Christ taught, spirit-filled, indigenous ministry we will have a permanent, self-supporting and self-propagating church ready to go everywhere preaching the word.

We can never send enough teachers and preachers to evangelize any great country like India. It would require 9,000 additional missionaries to give one to every 50,000 people in India. We can, however, send enough missionaries to call out and train an indigenous ministry who can preach the gospel to every person in all the land.

We are ready in India for this college. We have 800 young people in our churches who are being educated in our day schools. Out of these, there is sure to be many who will have the desire to teach and preach whom God certainly calls to this work. These young people call for this training. The churches, schools and unevangelized millions wait for them.

The Bible college is practical and possible. Already I hear you asking where this college will be located. There is one place which the missionaries are thinking about very favorably. Jabalpur is a city of 100,000, centrally located for most of our stations, healthy, easy of access by railway and government roads, making a good bid for such an educational institution. Placing the college there would mean the opening of a new station in a needy field in a populous city and district. Standing on the Harda Railway platform, Bishop Thoburn said to me several years ago, "Why do you not enter some of the larger cities of India? You will need such a center as your work grows."

We believe $25,000 will enable us to enter such a city as Jabalpur and purchase ground

BRIGHT'S DISEASE.

Caused the death of Doctor Bright. Bright's Disease is simply slow congestion of the Kidneys. In the last stage the congestion becomes acute, and the victim lives a few hours or a few days, but is past saving. This insidious Kidney trouble is caused by sluggish, torpid, congested liver, and slow, constipated bowels, whereby the Kidneys are involved and ruined.

Drake's Palmetto Wine is a foe to congestion of Liver, Kidneys and tissues. It promptly relieves the congestion and carries it out of the Liver, Kidneys, tissues and blood. Drake's Palmetto Wine restores the mucous membranes to healthy condition, relieves the membranes throughout the body from inflammation and Catarrh, and cures Catarrh, Constipation, Liver and Kidney disease to stay cured. It gives relief immediately, builds up vigor and health, prolongs life and makes it enjoyable. A trial bottle always gives relief and often cures. A trial bottle will be sent to every reader of THE CHRISTIAN-EVANGELIST who will write for it to Drake Formula Company, 400 Drake Building, 100 Lake St., Chicago, Ill. A postal card will bring this wonderful tonic Palmetto medicine to you absolutely free. It is a boon to disease-laden, pain-ridden men and women.

Jamaica Relief Fund.

The Jamaica relief fund grows steadily, but not very rapidly. Over $4,600 has been received. It is coming in at the rate of about $100 a day. This must continue until the $10,000 is received. The need for continuing to give to this relief fund is manifest in the letters just received. Oct. 23, C. E. Randall, speaking of the fund raised, says, "This is good as far as it goes, but it will not go far enough to meet all needs." He then goes on to recount the combination of causes, growing out of conditions there, which cause the people to suffer.

G. D. Purdy, who is about to return to the island, in his last letter says, "In my last letter from the island, I read of great suffering, starvation and want on every hand. It is as you said, back at Oberlin and Salisbury Plains they seem to be getting no help and are in a pitiable condition."

One of the commissioners of the English government stated that they were called upon to satisfy with 1,000 pounds a condition calling for 10,000 pounds to relieve actual suffering.

Surely every church in our entire brotherhood will want a part in the relieving of the terrible suffering in Jamaica.

SECURE A HOME IN THE GREAT SOUTHWEST!

The rapid increase in population and the phenomenal crops of 1903 are pushing land prices upward. The Southwest was never as prosperous as now, and never before has there been such a demand for good farm lands. Through the M. K. & T. Land Bureau thousands of acres of rich farm lands (improved and unimproved), located along the line of the M. K. & T. Railway, are now offered for sale. The lands are especially adapted to the growth of corn, wheat, oats, fruits and vegetables, rice, cotton, sugar-cane, and for stock farming. The lands are well located as to markets, schools, etc.

If you are interested in this new and prosperous country, offering so many opportunities, and rich farming lands, which can be secured at low prices, we will gladly furnish you information about lands, business chances, etc. Advise exactly what you want, what State or Territory you prefer, and the amount you have to invest.

The Homeseekers' Excursions on the first and third Tuesdays of each month afford an opportunity to visit the great Southwest at a small cost. If you are interested, write to-day for full information. Address

Dedication at Greenville, Miss.

Greenville is the county seat of Washington county, and is situated in the heart of the famous cotton belt of Mississippi.

Until within a few years the plea of the Disciples had not been heard. Some years ago a few brethren who had moved there organized a church and have labored successfully in building up a church.

About two and a half years ago they were fortunate enough to secure the services of Bro. G. D. Weaver, a preacher of more than average ability, as pastor of the church. Brother Weaver soon came to the conclusion that the most important thing to do first was to have a house of worship. A lot was purchased in an eligible location, and the work was inaugurated and prosecuted with a zeal worthy so good a cause.

The result is, a beautiful house, modern in all of its appointments, a great credit to the church and the city.

It will stand as a monument to the devotion of as faithful a band of brethren as can be found anywhere.

The main auditorium is a thing of beauty and convenience. It has a lecture room, Sunday-school room, pastor's study, baptistry, robing rooms, etc. It is heated with a furnace, has beautiful art glass windows, metal ceiling and walls, is brilliantly lighted with electric lights. The center chandelier, containing 52 burners, is the handsomest one we have ever seen. It has corner tower and vestibule, circular seats, etc. The whole property is worth $9,000.

Lord's day, Nov. 15, was the time selected for its formal opening and dedication. The day was an ideal one; the congregation who attended the dedicatory service was said to have been the largest one that had attended a religious service in that city for many years.

We have never preached to a more orderly or attentive congregation anywhere.

We asked for money to provide for all the indebtedness except the amount borrowed from the Church Extension fund, which paid for the lot. The responses were prompt and generous, so that in cash collected and in pledges running only thirty days, the entire amount was raised. No soliciting was done at the night service except the usual Sunday night basket collection. Of course there was great rejoicing, not only by the members of the church, but by the people who come, both to give and rejoice.

Brother Thares, the Mississippi state evangelist, was present, and was to continue with a protracted meeting. The Methodists, Baptists and Presbyterians adjourned their services and, with their pastors, attended the dedication.

Brother Weaver and his devoted Christian wife are held in the highest esteem, not only by the members of the church, but by the people of the entire city.

With the better facilities for doing good work, we shall expect to hear of a strong congregation in the near future in that important city.

We will not soon forget the great kindness shown us by the warm-hearted and hospitable brethren of the Southland. Our visit to this important southern city was among the most pleasant of our life. We promised them to return some time in the future, and hold them a protracted meeting.

While there we went into one of their cotton fields and picked cotton, but confess that it was a little too tiresome work to please us. May the good Father in heaven greatly bless his church and people in Greenville, is our prayer.

The visible result of the meeting was 30 additions; 4 by commendation, 3 reclaimed, 1 from the Baptist, and 22 by obedience, 18 of this number were from the Sunday-school. On Oct. 11 we observed decision day in the Sunday-school with 5 confessions. This makes 23 in the last six weeks from the Sunday-school. Brethren this ought to be a warning to us of the necessity of locally supporting the Sunday-school work. Brother Rasborough, our pastor, is doing splendid work here for the cause, having had 19 additions since the beginning of his work in March, 1903. The church is in very good working condition; all departments well organized.—S. E. LOOMIS, clerk.

Payson, Nov. 21.—The church here under the leadership of our pastor, J. J. Higgs, has witnessed a marvelous awakening during the past five months. We have had several additions during that time, and a great growth spiritually. The audiences are much larger now than in years, and all branches of church work are in a healthy condition. We have recently re-papered our house, and have made several other excellent improvements. Since Brother Higgs took up the work with us, we have become wide-awake on missions. About two months ago we gave $13.50 for district missions, and on Nov. 1 we raised more than our apportionment for state missions. This is the first time in years that the missionary question received any attention from our pulpit. Our present pastor is a consecrated missionary man. Mrs. Higgs has stood by him as a faithful servant of the Master. Brother Jones, our state corresponding secretary, has promised to be with us some time during the winter. We look forward to a future of great things.—GEORGE WAGNER.

INDIANA.—Indianapolis, Nov. 16.—Two confessions at North Park Church yesterday.—AUSTIN HUNTER.

Little Flatrock, Rush county, Nov. 16.—Two confessions yesterday at regular services. We enjoyed the fellowship of G. L. Wharton, Nov. 1, and gladdened his heart with an offering of $57 for the college in India. Have also taken offerings for Jamaica sufferers and state work this month. We have averaged $2.39 per member for all missionary purposes. We are happy in the Lord's service.—A. B. HOUTZE, R. R. 13, New Salem, Ind.

INDIAN TERRITORY.—Hartshorne, Nov. 14.—Congregations good, interest good, Sunday-school and Y. P. S. C. E. growing in numbers and interest. Midweek prayer-meeting well attended; six joined by statement last prayer-meeting. Organized a good Sunday-school in the new church at Haileyville; work very encouraging, all harmonious. We expect success.—W. O. BREEDEN.

Coodys Bluff, Nov. 16.—I closed a two weeks' meeting, Nov. 4 at the Alliance Hall, I. T., with 12 confessions, one from the Baptists, one from the United Brethren, making 14; there were two confessions yesterday at the same place.—W. F. FLOWER.

IOWA.—Seymour, Nov. 16.—One more added by statement yesterday; audiences good; interest on the increase.—S. B. ROSS.

Tingley, Nov. 15.—Bro. Simpson Ely, of Clearfield, Ia., has just closed a very successful meeting for us here. There were 25 additions to the church, 24 of which were by baptism. The church has been greatly strengthened. All are much encouraged in the work.—A. D. VEATCH, Pastor.

KENTUCKY.—Petersburg, Nov. 16.—Just closed a two weeks' meeting here last night, conducted with "home forces." Four baptisms and one added by letter. All adults. Work here in good condition. Our Sunday-school is preparing to observe rally day. I go to-day to assist in a few day's meeting at Bellview, Boone Co.—MILO ATKINSON.

Lexington, Nov. 20.—We have just closed a very helpful meeting at the Broadway Church, in which we were assisted by Mrs. Princess C. Long. I had heard this gifted singer in our conventions, but never knew her power until I heard her in our protracted meeting. In this work God uses her most for his glory. She sings the gospel. In our meeting many were led to obedience who were unmoved by the preacher. What a blessing it would be to our cause if a number of our talented singers would devote themselves to such evangelistic singing! There were 59 additions to our congregation, 29 of them by confession, and 30 by letter.—MARK COLLIS.

MINNESOTA.—Eagle Lake, Nov. 16.—Two accessions last week; attendance good. Prayer-meeting attendance, increasing and growing in interest. Pray for the work and the workers. For God gives the increase.—J. P. CHILDS, pastor and evangelist.

Minneapolis, Nov. 21.—The Portland Avenue Church of Christ of this place has just enjoyed three weeks' revival services conducted by Pastor R. W. Abberley and H. A. Easton, of Chicago, singing evangelist. Both the preaching and singing gave great satisfaction. Counting baptized, reclaimed and added by letter the meetings resulted in forty additions, making fifty-five accessions since Mr. Abberley came the first of July, four and a half months ago. Our pastor has been working hard ever since he came, and the result is good in every way. He is highly esteemed by all both for his teaching and other work. After the meetings closed he gave his illustrated lecture, "A Trip through the British Isles," delighting a large audience. The church is in its usual working order in all departments. In September an appeal for Jamaica gathered up $50 and another for Church Extension, $80. Arrangements are now on foot to raise our apportionment of $200 for Minnesota missions. J. H. Bicknell, state evangelist, is conducting meetings in the city of Winona, where we have a small congregation. They are hoping to buy a house of worship soon, once used by the Universalists. The Portland Avenue Church has adopted the use of individual communion cups, a full set having been presented by the Women's Aid Society. The Grand Avenue Church continues to grow and thrive—full of zeal and religious fervor.—A. M. CHOATE.

MISSOURI.—Liberal, Nov. 18.—Fifty added since last report, 34 by obedience, 6 in regular services at Arcadia, Kan.; 1 at Avola, Mo.; 5 in meeting at Avola, and 38 in meeting at Arcadia, Kan. All work is full of hope.—J. R. CRANK, minister.

La Belle, Nov. 19.—Closed three weeks' meeting here with 15 additions, making 40 added to this congregation during the year. C. E. Wagner was our leader of song, and rendered fine assistance. During the meeting J. L. Glenn of this congregation was ordained to the ministry. H. A. Northcutt, of Kirksville, assisted in the ordination. Brother Glenn expects to do evangelistic work in Oklahoma. This field has extended me a call for another year.—J. H. JONES.

Joplin, Nov. 21.—The great meeting with Harlow and Ridenour is nearing a close; 589 added to date. Expecting a great day tomorrow. The interest has never lagged a day, nor have we ever missed an invitation. Brother Harlow will go to South Joplin, Nov. 29, for a short time.—W. F. TURNER.

Savannah, Nov. 16.—Meeting here two weeks' old with 22 added. I go home (Plattsburg, Mo.) to-day to preach funeral of Grandma Hockiday, one of God's truest saints.—BEN. F. HILL.

Warrensburg, Nov. 16.—There were three confessions yesterday at my regular appointment at Lee's Summit. Go to Bolivar Dec. 7 to begin a meeting. Churches wanting meetings after Jan. 1 address me at Warrensburg.—KING STARK.

Norborne, Nov. 16.—Started meeting at Bogard yesterday. We had four additions at morning service and one at night. One at Pleasant Hill congregation, one at Hardin, and one at Bogard since last report.—C. C. TAYLOR, pastor.

Butler, Nov. 16.—One added by letter at the morning service. Bro. C. R. Gains, who lately moved here from St. Louis, preached an interesting discourse in the evening. He has recently entered the ministry, and we predict for him a bright future.—E. H. WILLIAMSON, Pastor.

Holden, Nov. 16.—Bro. H. R. Murphy, of First Christian Church, St. Louis, assumed the pastorate of the Christian Church here Oct. 1, 1903. During his six weeks' work 11 have been added to the church. An Endeavor Society organized that promises much, also Junior Endeavor of 22 members. Prayer-meeting largely attended. Brother Murphy preaches strong gospel sermons, and the church is greatly encouraged and strengthened spiritually.—SALLIE SMITH.

Wellsville, Nov. 21.—The church here has extended to me a renewed call to the pastorate, which is under my consideration. The last year has been one of considerable blessing in accessions, growth of congregations and also financially. The temptation to remain is therefore very strong.—G. F. ASSITER.

Mexico, Nov. 17.—Bro. M. A. Hart, of Fulton, closed a three weeks' meeting here Sunday night. It was a successful meeting, 41 being added from all sources. There were 17 confessions, 2 reclaimed, and 1 each from the Baptist and Methodist churches. Four married men made confession and were baptized, one being the sheriff of the county. There were eight additions the day the meeting closed, and others will follow. Brother Hart is a strong preacher. He does not believe so much in laying bare the sins of the world in their awfulness or attractiveness, but to preach a gospel of grace and elevation, appealing ever for the noblest living of which type Jesus is the sole author, and residing upon this plane, the base things will have no power over us.—A. W. KOKENDOFFER.

Platte City, Nov. 16.—The Hamilton-Wilkinson revival closed Sunday night, lasting 29 days. There were 56 additions in the meeting, 17 at last two services. We classify them as follows: 42 by confession and baptism, 14 otherwise; 2 Methodists, 1 Baptist, 1 Presbyterian; 21 heads of families, 33 females, and 23 males. It is a fortunate church indeed which secures the services of these princely young evangelists. Brother Hamilton reminds me of the Apostle John or the young Timothy, a young man in years, but a sage in wisdom and power. Brother Wilkinson has a wonderful voice, and sings from the heart. They won and held the love of the entire community. One hundred and fifty additions here in twenty-two months. I remain another year.—LOUIS S. CUPP.

Alexandria, Nov. 18.—The congregation here has completed the seating of the church, and also purchased an organ of superior strength and tone worth $235, $60 of which was paid by "The Corn Huskers" (a name given to the ladies' aid society). The singing under the leadership of our chorister, Mrs. E. L. Aldrich, certainly is fine. Visiting brethren tell us it exceeds that of many of our larger churches. We have a proficient organist in Miss Effie Deming. The ladies' aid society held a county fair on Nov. 5, 6. Like all their undertakings, it was a grand success and netted them $85. Produce from farm and garden, and the creations of the skillful hands of women in the form of quilts and cushions and handkerchiefs, bread and butter, jellies and pickles were in profusion, and beautiful chrysanthemums added to the splendor of the occasion. The valuable premiums were the donations of the business men of our own and several of the neighboring towns. The farmers and some of the ladies kindly gave their entries to the society which were sold at the close. Our generous corn-buyer paid as high as $2 per bushel for the corn. A protracted meeting is now onward with a good prospect of success. The Sunday-school lately organized now has about 55 scholars. There are three others that hold at the same hour.—S. D. SEYMOUR.

MICHIGAN.—Burt Lake, Nov. 16.—Have just closed a 20 days' meeting with 16 additions. The baptismal services last Tuesday were impressive; 9 were baptized. I had the privilege to baptize one old man of 75. We have 3 to baptize yet; 1 reclaimed, 1 by statement, 2 from the Baptists. Bro. D. H. Bays, of Woodward, Ia., did the preaching. He made the way plain and taught some practical lessons on Christian living.—ERNEST M. BACON, Minister.

NEBRASKA.—Tremont, Nov. 18.—Brother

Melvin Putnam has just closed a very successful meeting here. There were 64 additions; 38 by confessions and baptisms, six by letter, four by statement, and 16 from the denominations. It was a meeting that thrilled the church with joy and hope. Brother Putnam's preaching is eminently biblical; hence spiritual and with power. When near the close he gathered the new members about him and taught of their farther duties in sharing in every department of church work, and in its support. This as true followers of Christ should be a part of their life work.—MRS. W. A. COLLINS.

Broken Bow, Nov. 19.—One addition last Sunday and one the preceding Sunday. The work moves along nicely here. I resumed the work Nov. 1, having been pastor of this congregation before and having lived here for seven years, I find much pleasure in the same.—JESSE A. TEAGARDEN.

NEW YORK.—Buffalo, Nov. 18.—Am fully settled in my new field. One added at regular Sunday evening service, Nov. 8. Find a most excellent people with whom to work. Two responded to the gospel invitation last Lord's day, and will gladly submit to the sacred ordinance of baptism. Was invited to speak at a Sunday-school alliance in Williams-ville last evening on "The Value of the Lord's Day School."—B. S. FERRALL.

OHIO.—Youngstown, Nov. 18.—Have just closed a successful three weeks' meeting at Central with 22 accessions, 16 of them baptisms. J. Walter Wilson led us in song. My father, G. M. Goode, of Normal, Ill., did the preaching. The church is strengthened.—WALTER S. GOODE, Pastor.

Modoc, Athens Co., Nov. 16.—Meeting here two weeks old last night, the 15th inst: 37 accessions in all at this date. Meeting goes on at least over the 22nd.—J. A. WALTERS.

Athens, Nov. 17.—Closed a three weeks' meeting here with 32 additions. J. E. Hawes helped with the singing two weeks. All departments of the church work are making good growth.—T. L. LOWE, Pastor.

Hiram, Nov. 17.—J. E. Lynn, of the West Side Christian Church, Springfield, Ill., has been holding an evangelistic meeting at the Hiram College Church, Hiram, O., and delivering some lectures to the ministerial students. A deep spiritual interest was manifest in the meetings, and 40 accessions were made to the church, a majority of which were by baptism. He reports that the college under the administration of acting President Wakefield is in excellent spirits and condition, doing good work in every department, and has a most hopeful outlook. H. A. Carpenter speaks highly of Brother Lynn's work in the meeting.

Collinwood, Nov. 16.—Since Bro. C. A. Freer took up the work here, July 1, there have been 7 additions. A good interest is manifested. Audiences are large and steadily growing. The work is in a healthy condition and we are confident of a successful winter campaign. Special meetings will begin the first Lord's day in January. We are in the midst of a spirited contest in the Lord's day school. Attendance and collections nearly doubled. An attendance of 225 has been reached. Rally Day will be observed. Collection for Ohio missions, $40.—D. R. KING.

Monterey.—Clarence Mitchell, of Lima, O., who has entered the field as an evangelist, is in a meeting at Monterey, with 31 baptisms. The pastor, Bro. S. A. Cook, and Bro. John Rapp, president of the twenty-third district, say it is the best meeting in the 50 years' history of the church.—CLARENCE MITCHELL, J. F. RAPP, S. A. COOK, Pastor.

PENNSYLVANIA.—Shamburg, Nov. 16.—The interest in the meeting at Shamburg still increasing. Nine more confessions since last report. Prospects of more very good. The people here are hearing the gospel as never before. Mr. Martin is doing a good work.—W. H. H. MONROE.

TEXAS.—Mineral Wells, Nov. 17.—We closed our second meeting with this people Sunday with 25 additions. This makes 109 since we came Feb. 1. This is one of the greatest health resorts in the southwest.—WM. H. DRUMMET.

An Electric Belt Free

Send Your Application At Once To
The Physician's Institute.

They Will Send You Absolutely Free One of Their 100 Gauge Supreme Electric Belts, the Belt Which Has Made so Many Wonderful Cures—You Needn't Send Even a Postage Stamp, Just Your Name and Address.

Seven years ago the State of Illinois granted to the Physicians' Institute of Chicago a charter.

There was need of something above the ordinary method of treatment for chronic diseases, something more than any one specialist or any number of specialists acting independently could do, so the State itself, under the powers granted it by its general laws, gave the power to the Physicians' Institute to furnish to the sick such help as would make them well and strong.

Ever since its establishment this Institute has endeavored in every possible way to carry out the original purposes of its establishment under the beneficent laws of the State.

Three years ago the Physician's Institute, realizing the value of electricity in the treatment of certain phases of disease, created under the superintendence of its staff of specialists an electric belt, and this belt has been proved to be of great value as a curative agent. From time to time it has been improved until it reached that stage of perfection which warranted its present name of "Supreme."

This belt is the most effective of all agents in the cure of rheumatism, lumbago, lame back, nervous exhaustion, weakened or lost vital functions, varicose veins, kidney disorders and many other complaints.

This "Supreme Electric Belt" is made in one grade only—100 gauge—there is no better electric belt made and no better belt can be made. Whenever in the opinion of our staff of specialists the wonderful curative and revitalizing forces of electricity will cure you we send you, free of all cost, one of these Supreme Electric Belts. It is not sent on trial, it is yours to keep forever without the payment of one cent. This generous offer may be withdrawn at any time, so you should write to-day for this free "Supreme Electric Belt" to the Physicians' Institute, at 1974 Unity Building, Chicago, Ill.

Midland, Nov. 19.—B. B. Sanders has just closed a two weeks' meeting here; 41 added, 37 baptisms.—VOLNEY JOHNSON.

Half my time given to this church and half in the county just north of us. 17 added at Clairmont and 19 here since we came; 36 in all since Sept. 1. Will go to Gail in Barden county next week. I held a short meeting of 8 days at Spring Creek in Throckmorton, 140 miles from here resulting in a congregation of 20 members. That meeting was instanced by Bro. E. W. Reagan, a brother lately come to the faith, who is showing his faith by his works.—THOMAS G. NANCE.

THE COMPROMISES OF LIFE, and other lectures and addresses. By Henry Watterson. (Fox, Duffield & Co., New York. $1.50.)

Mr. Watterson has had almost all sorts of opinions expressed about him, but it is scarcely conceivable that any one ever called him dull. He does not always convince, but he never bores. It is a little singular that, in all these years during which he has been making public addresses, there has never before been any publication of them in permanent form. He is, first and last, a newspaper man, but some of his speeches are well worthy of preservation. The twenty-six lectures, addresses and speeches which are contained in this volume cover a wide range of subjects. There are lectures on Lincoln and John Paul Jones and "Money and Morals," and a humorous in praise of the good old times and the joys of the simple life. Some of the short stories in the volume show a talent which we are sure would be eagerly sought after by the magazines if the author should devote himself seriously to that field.

THE COURTSHIP OF MILES STANDISH. By Henry W. Longfellow. With illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy. (The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. $3.00.)

Mr. Christy's holiday book for 1904 will be deservedly one of the most popular of his many delightful productions. His illustrations for Longfellow's familiar poems are admirably in keeping with the spirit of the text. There are over thirty full page drawings, nine of them in color. The book is sumptuous as to paper, perfect in printing and decorative and artistic to the smallest detail of its design. It will be one of the season's most desirable gift-books.

From the Christy Book for 1903. The Courtship of Miles Standish, with forty-two illustrations by Howard Chandler Christy.

lecture on "The South in Light and Shade," and a number of addresses on patriotic and political themes. As an appendix, some of Mr. Watterson's recent editorial criticisms of the New York Four Hundred are reprinted. Some of them are scarcely worth it. But after all, both these and the other contents of this entertaining volume are the expressions of a stout spirit who dares to speak up good and loud and, on questions of public morals, is pretty sure to let his voice be heard on the right side.

WHETHER COMMON OR NOT. A little Book of Sketches and Verse. By Will M. Maupin. (The Christian Pub. Co., St. Louis. $1.00.)

There is considerable variety in the contents of this volume, as to both subject and quality. Mr. Maupin is on the editorial staff of Mr. Bryan's paper, "The Commoner," in which most of the prose and verse that make up this book was originally published. Many of them are directly or indirectly political, and all are immensely clever. The thirty pages of "little fables in rhyme," written with plenty of swing and jingle, but printed as prose, are a unique piece of political pamphleteering. Many of the poems are in a similar vein—anti-expansion, anti-tariff, anti-trust, anti-administration poetry which will be appreciated and enjoyed by all Democrats and by such Republicans as can enjoy a clever and humorous hit at their own side without allowing their partisan feeling to be aroused unpleasantly. The poems which are not political are chiefly poems of childhood or verses

TOLSTOY AND HIS MESSAGE. By Ernest H. Crosby. (Funk & Wagnalls Co. 50 cts net.)

This little book, by an ardent and (so far as any one can be) consistent Tolstoyan gives as much of the details of the great Russian's life as most people care or need to know, and presents a summary and defense of his teaching. The author is thoroughly committed to the doctrine of non-resistance and devotes some space to proving that it is supported by the teaching of Christ. The reader will remember Mr. Crosby's volume of anti-war poems, which was reviewed in these columns some months ago.

ARMSTRONG.

Addison F. Armstrong, of Kokomo, Indiana, died September 26, at the residence of his daughter and only living child, Mrs. Thomas C. Howe, in Irvington, Indiana. Mr. Armstrong had for a number of years been in ill health, having sought relief in various places, and had in 1899 made a trip to Karlsbad, Austria, in hope of improvement. He, with Mrs. Armstrong and his daughter's family, had been spending the summer months by the lake shore near Harbor Springs, Michigan. The family returned to Irvington, Saturday Sept. 19, after which Mr. Armstrong began to fail rapidly, apparently suffering no pain and slept peacefully away without a struggle, a week later; a fitting end of a righteous life. A devoted husband and father, loved by all who knew him, a successful man of affairs, of spotless integrity, a clear headed optimist, a Christian gentleman and citizen—this the epitome of Addison F. Armstrong's long and useful life.

Mr. Armstrong was born in Clinton County, Ohio, in 1833, and belonged to a large family. The family removed early to Pennsylvania and later to Howard County, near Kokomo, Indiana. His early life was like that of many another of our sturdy western men, little schooling, then a school teacher, then read law before embarking in the Hardware business in 1855, which was for the remainder of his life his vocation. Kokomo was then a little western village of the wilderness almost. He saw Kokomo grow and was a large factor in its prosperity until it has become a thriving city. His firm also grew with the county until at his death, this institution of which he was president and senior member, is one of the soundest commercial enterprises in all central Indiana.

He was a member of the first Common Council of Kokomo aiding in the organization of the city and represented the first ward in that body for eight consecutive years. In politics, he was always a supporter of democratic principles. He was, as a democrat, elected to the State Senate from his district, in 1870, overcoming a large adverse party majority. He served through three terms of the Indiana General Assembly. He was a candidate for congress in 1876. He took part in the organization of the Main Street Christian Church, of which he was a most active supporter until his death. For many years he was a member of the official board. At all times he was a heavy contributor to every local church enterprise and ready to further its interests both with his time and his money. His sympathy, however, extended beyond the local congregation. For many years he took an active part in all the missionary enterprises of the church and he gave largely of his ample means to assist the Foreign and other societies.

He long ago became deeply interested in Butler College, which, he believed, had a great mission among the disciples, and for the general educational interests of Indiana, feeling that its endowment and strategic position at the state capital offered an opportunity not enjoyed by any other of our colleges. He became a member of the Board of Trustees fifteen years ago, and for the last nine years of his life he was president of that board, refusing re-election last spring because of ill health. He showed his faith in the college by endowing the chair of Germanic Languages, with $20,000. Few outside of his own immediate family knew how much his heart was in the affairs of Butler College.

In 1862, Mr. Armstrong was married to Miss Mary S. Brandon, who survives him, and who has shared equally with him, all his interests and activity in city, church and college. From this union were born two children, one a son who died in infancy, and a daughter now Mrs. Thomas C. Howe, of Irvington, Indiana.

When Mr. Armstrong lay in state at home, the flags of the city were placed at half-mast and on the day of his funeral, the city schools were dismissed out of respect for him, who for so many years was a leading member of the city school board, and who had done so much to further the well-being of Kokomo schools. The funeral was conducted by; John H. MacNeil, pastor of the Kokomo church Mr. Choate, pastor of the Congregational Church, assisted, as did Pres. Scot Butler of Butler College. Resolutions from the official board of the church were read by Mr. Wolf of that board, and the resolutions of the Butler board, who were in attendance, were read by Mr. Hilton U. Brown, President of that body.

Mr. Armstrong was a rare man. He was clean in thought and life; of even temper, quiet speech and deliberate action. He loved books and travel, but above all, he loved his fellow-man. While he was in a high degree successful in his business ventures, he carried into realization in his life the old proverb: "A good name is rather to be desired than great riches." Wealth acquired by unworthy means he fairly scorned with all the ardour of his earnest soul. He believed in the goodness of his fellow-men and if now and then he knew he had been deceived, he thought he was the gainer in those where his faith was not misplaced. His death brought a sore loss to his family, his city, his church, his college. But to those who sorrow for him, the consolation comes in the thought that it is well with him and the world is better for his having lived and striven.

A FRIEND.

THE VALUE OF CHARCOAL.

Few People Know How Useful It Is in Preserving Health and Beauty.

Nearly every body knows that charcoal is the safest and most efficient disinfectant and purifier in nature, but few realize its value when taken into the human system for the same cleansing purpose.

Charcoal is a remedy that the more you take of it the better; it is not a drug at all, but, simply absorbs the gases and impurities always present in the stomach and intestines and carries them out of the system.

Charcoal sweetens the breath after smoking, drinking or after eating onions and other odorous vegetables.

Charcoal effectually clears and improves the complexion, it whitens the teeth and further acts as a natural and eminently safe cathartic.

It absorbs the injurious gases which collect in the stomach and bowels: it disinfects the mouth and throat from the poison of catarrh.

All druggists sell charcoal in one form or another, but probably the best charcoal and the most for the money is in Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges; they are composed of the finest powered Willow charcoal, and other harmless antiseptics in tablet form or rather in the form of large, pleasant tasting lozenges, the charcoal being mixed with honey.

The daily use of these lozenges will soon tell in a much improved condition of the general health, better complexion, sweeter breath, and purer blood, and the beauty of it is, that no possible harm can result from their continued use, but on the contrary, great benefit.

A Buffalo physician in speaking of the benefits of charcoal, says: "I advise Stuart's Absorbent Lozenges to all patients suffering from gas in stomach and bowels, and to clear the complexion and purify the breath, mouth and throat; I also believe the liver is greatly benefitted by the daily use of them; they cost but twenty-five cents a box at drug stores, and although in some sense a patent preparation, yet I believe I got more and better charcoal in Stuart's absorbent Lozenges than in any of the ordinary charcoal tablets."

WORLD'S FAIR MARCH 1904.

Mr. John C. Weber, director of Weber's Military Band of Cincinnati, known as the "Prize Band of America," has composed the St. Louis World's Fair March 1904—and dedicated it to the Louisiana Purchase Exposition. It will be distributed through the passenger department of the B. & O. S. W. R. R., World's Fair Route, at 10 cents per copy.

The music is in sheet form, arranged for the piano, being very handsomely gotten up, with highly illuminated title cover. Mr. John C. Weber is not only a great Musical Director, but he has written some very catchy and popular marches. The St. Louis World's Fair March is his latest success, and will add further to his fame.

Mr. Weber and his great organization of artists has twice defeated all comers in national contests at Elks' Reunions. The last triumph was at Baltimore, Md., on the 21st of last July, when, in a notable contest, composed of the leading bands of America, won the first prize of $1000 00. It is confidently expected that Mr. Weber's World's Fair March will become a popular air during the next year, and every household should have a copy of this music.

Send 10 cents in silver to the undersigned, and copy of the World's Fair March will be mailed to your address.

The lack of brotherhood among believers themselves has paralyzed the Church in front of the skepticism and immorality of the age; but when we go back in simple faith to the one great fact of our redemption, we shall be both brought into closer fellowship with each other, and stimulated to more tender regard for the salvation of men.—Wm. M. Taylor.

How easy it is to tear a piece of paper along the line in which it has originally been folded!
How easy it is for a second temptation to overcome when the first has been yielded to!
A sin that has once gained the victory over our moral nature has put a fold, as it were, in that nature, and destroyed its straightness and smoothness, so that when the same temptation comes a second time, it seeks the weak point which it had formerly made, and along that line of least resistance we are turned from our righteous principles and strong resolutions.—Hugh Macmillan.

The Little Blue Bonnet.

By Caroline Miles.

Dainty blue and trimmed with lace
Grandma made a small sunbonnet.
Not a head about the place
Was quite small enough to don it;
Yet we oft heard her repeat
As her work progressed upon it,
"Won't our darling one look sweet
When she wears this tiny bonnet?"

The blue bonnet was for one
Far away, a wee granddaughter—
Grandma's sewing fondly done
Showed what baby's life had brought her;
"Sweetheart's skin so soft and fair
Would be burn'd without a bonnet,"
So she made for her to wear
This of blue with lace upon it.

But one day as grandma sewed
All unseen there came an angel
Whispered of a blest abode.
Smiling grandma answered, "'Tis well."
Dainty blue and trimmed with lace,
But unfinished lay the bonnet;
Nobody about the place
Had the heart to sew upon it.

So to baby it they bore,
Just as she had worked upon it,
And the child now child no more,
Smiles when'er she sees the bonnet:
"It was made to keep my face
Free from sunshine, this sweet bonnet;
But I pray, like hers, my face
May e'er keep the sunshine on it."

How Billie's Father Found Peace.

Billie and his father were following a foot path through the dwarf cedars and scrubby underbrush across Sandy Hook. The path wound in and out over the ridges, and Billie had to trot briskly to keep his father in sight. Robert Sloan was a tall man, and he strode along with bowed head through the warm, sweet stillness, without apparent regard for the patter of the bare feet behind him, but, when once it paused suddenly, he turned and looked back.

One week before, Rachel, his wife, had died, and with her went the strength of his strength. His rough sun-browned face was shadowed with bitterness as well as grief, for his thoughts were bitter. Rachel was too young to die; it seemed too hard, too cruel. She had been so much to him. She was too good for him; but it was all so sudden. He had not thought her very ill; he could not get used to it. All this he felt, rather than thought. All the week he had been trying with the energy of a strong will to work out his grief.

Nothing was of any use, however. All his familiar occupations—clam digging, fishing, gardening, everything customary—had become blank and unbearable. He had tried to-day to escape from the familiar, but it was habit, after all, that had brought him across to the Hook, where he had been every year for plums. He had never brought Billie before; but the boy had looked so longingly from the shore, that, partly to make a difference, partly to please the child, he had taken him into the boat. Billie was too young to understand, he supposed, but how little the boy seemed to care. He had cried at first, to be sure, and his father had held him on his lap and absently dried his tears. But since then he had apparently been happy in his play.

MRS. M. SUMMERS, BOX 183, NOTRE DAME, IND., U. S. A.

The neighbors had been very kind; had kept Billie several nights, and given him cake enough to make him sick, and Billie had eaten it and never mentioned his mother. But then he was only a child.

The father did not guess that behind him, under Billie's old straw hat, the little brown face, so like his own in every feature, grew almost as sad, though not as bitter, as his own, whenever it was not kindled at some new discovery; nor did he see the steady blue eyes twice fill with tears, which Billie hastily dried on the sleeve of his blouse. When his father looked back, Billie was whistling and flourishing a switch.

As they went on, every time they came up out of a hollow the low murmur of the ocean, which formed a background for the silence, swelled a little, until at the edge of the cedars a sudden wind flung the sound full upon them. As he looked he heard a boom and a low, swift, singing noise, and far out at sea a great column of water spouted up.

"Oh! what's that, Dad?" he cried excitedly.

"That's a shot from the big guns at the testin' station," said his father. "Pretty soon you'll see another." He spoke quietly, but he was oppressed with a sudden sense of the world's carelessness of his sorrow. No one cared except himself; everything was going on just the same.

They had turned northward along the wide, grass-grown beach. Billie had to run over to the water's edge and back. More and more ships kept coming in sight. Twice they heard the big guns boom out again.

Then, after walking a long way, and passing the bare plum bushes unloaded by other gatherers, they reached a place where the dark blue fruit hung almost as thick as grapes.

It was very exciting, for the fullest bushes were always a little farther on. Besides eating a great many plums, Billie filled his basket twice and emptied it into his father's big one. "Ain't they beauties, Dad? We've almost got it full, and ain't there a lot?

Won't mother?"

The sentence ended abruptly, and the man, who had been only half listening until the last word struck his heart, turned quickly. Billie had disappeared. The father, his face sharp with grief, stood up and walked over to the nearest plum bush. Behind it, where he had flung himself down in the sand, lay Billie, one hand thrown out over his head, his whole little body shaking in a passion of sobs. Dropping on the sand beside him, his father lifted him without a word. As he clasped the quivering child, and felt the rapid heart beats against his own, a great wave of tenderness rushed over him. Before it the hard, dead weight of his grief changed like an ice-bound stream at the touch of spring; it swept through him in a mighty torrent, but it was no longer frozen and death-like. He spoke gently. "Why, Billie!"

The boy had been struggling bravely to quiet himself, but at his father's words he burst out, "O Dad! she isn't there—she can't have any!"

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, 201 Columbus Avenue, BOSTON, MASS.

The father was almost frightened at the strength of the boy's grief. "Hush, Billie! She's very happy, you know; she don't need any o' these."

"But I want her to want them," broke in the child passionately; and Robert Sloan bowed his head against the rough little head on his shoulder.

The touch of his father's tears quieted Billie, he had never thought that men could cry. His arm stole up around his father's neck, and presently he sobbed, "I didn't mean to cry, Dad. She said not to, and I haven't hardly any but at nights. She doesn't like us to cry, I guess."

Then for a long time they sat in silence, growing calmer, and the low roar of the ocean was the only sound. At last Robert raised his head and saw the sky golden in the west. "We must go home, son."

They struck directly across through the gathering gloom of the cedars. The father led the way with the heavy basket on his arm; and he was so silent that Billie vaguely feared the comfort of his new fellowship was vanishing.

He could not see how all the bitterness had gone from his father's face. Finally he seized the great brown hand and said wistfully, "Dad, will you tuck the covers in to-night?"

"Yes, Billie," his father replied, looking down at him with a smile that satisfied Billie completely.
